THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1878.

Within the last fortnight the death and burial of Queen Mercedes of Spain, just upon the completion of the eighteenth year of her age, and married only five months ago to King Alfonso, have cast their shadow over a part of the Continent not of late years very intimately connected with the European system. The lesson they impress upon the mind is as saddening as it is suggestive. What bright hopes have been prematurely and suddenly nipped in the bud! What gentle and innocent joys have been extinguished! What high purposes may have been thus broken off! A more striking illustration of the uncertainty of life, even when surrounded by all the advantages which a Royal position can give it, it would be difficult to find. The Saturday Review has happily compared it with the death of the Princess Charlotte of England in the earlier part of the present century. There are not many, perhaps, now living who can recall the profound sensation into which this nation was startled by that event. To it, however, unquestionably, was owing the subsequent acceptance by Prince Leopold, her husband, of the Belgian Throne, and the consequent consolidation of that little kingdom by wise and liberal government up to the present moment. What may be the political effect of the death of Queen Mercedes upon the coming annals of Spain it is, of course, impossible to foresee. The young King may, or may not, derive personal advantage from the crucial affliction through which he has been called to pass. It may stamp upon his heart with increasing authority those principles of Constitutional rule which are suppose to receive the adhesion of all the Orleans family and which vague rumour informs us were highly appreciated by the Queen herself. Or it may after a while loosen that sense of obligation which the King might be supposed to feel for the fuller development of the political liberties of his people. Under any circumstances, it may be expected to modify very considerably, whether for good or for evil, the political inclinations of the youthful Monarch. Meanwhile, he claims and has the sympathy of the civilised world in the great loss he has sustained.

Passing from the South-West, over the Pyrenees, we exchange for a Royal Funeral a National Fête. Republican France has given herself a holiday. The splendidly successful Exhibition at Paris suggested, no doubt, the celebration of the establishment of Republican Institutions on Sunday last. Our neighbour is unrivalled in the art of putting into a visible form the joyous moods of her light-hearted children. She deserved success in her late attempt to do so, and she has achieved it. It needed not an Empire, a Throne, or even a Territorial Aristocracy to invest with dignity or to inspire with enthusiasm such a national expression of the satisfaction of the people as might befit the political victory which they have won, not by arms, but by moderation, endurance, and persistent good sense. France, in fact, has astonished the world by the character she has displayed in her late career. Under the pressure of enormous difficulties, by sheer force of well-regulated self-will, she has recovered the more position she lost by the war with Germany, has even bettered it among the States of Europe, and gives trustworthy pledges that her career henceforth, instead of stirring and keeping alive the anxious apprehensions of neighbouring Powers, will strengthen indefinitely the interests of peace. It was, in reality, this change of temper which the National Fête of Sunday last worthily illustrated. It drew to one centre all ranks and classes of the people, with the very minor exception of the reactionary party; and the programme carried out, while it exceeded in splendour everything of the kind which had preceded it under Royal or Imperial auspices, gave to the world a convincing demonstration of the fact that the French people have settled for themselves the form of government under which they are content to live, and that a moderate Republic such as already exists is that which (to use the prescient words of M. Thiers) "provokes the fewest enemies."

The Berlin Congress is advancing rapidly towards a successful close. It has not merely sanctioned but authoritatively devolved upon Austria the indefinite occupation and internal administration of Herzegovina and Bosnia. The Turks oppose a passive resistance to this determination, but will probably in the end acquiesce. At any rate it will be carried into effect, not at quite so early a period, perhaps, as was first anticipated, but with a predominant authority against which no protest of the Porte will become effectual. Servia and Roumania have been made independent of the Sublime Porte, and, unless we are misinformed, will receive such rectifications of their respective frontiers as will, if not satisfy their aspirations, command their assent. The Bessarabian difficulty has been virtually disposed of. Antivari has been conferred upon Montenegro as a port, besides some extension of territory. The navigation of the mouths of the Danube will be free, as it now is. The War Indemnity claimed by Russia has been discussed, but not fully determined. Greece yet remains to be dealt with; and we regret to be compelled to add that, from her point of view, her prospects are not flattering. She will probably gain but little, if any, addition to her territory, though perhaps, the administrative rule under which the Greeks of the Ottoman Empire will be placed may secure them against the intolerable oppression to which they have been heretofore exposed. Then comes the Asiatic phase of the Eastern Question—the government of Armenia, the final disposal of the Port of Batoum, and the delimitation of the Territories which Russia has wrested from the dominion of Turkey. There need be no fear, however, that a tolerable compromise upon these questions will be found impracticable. The Congress has advanced so far that it will do doubt be carried to the end with the moral impetus which it has acquired since the commencement of its sittings. One feature of its policy (we may justly describe it as a prominent one) is its insistance in all cases, and to its fullest extent, of the rights of conscience. There will probably remain no portion of the former Ottoman Empire in which the political equality of its inhabitants, irrespectively of creed, will not be amply secured.

We had intended in this cursory survey of the state of Europe to glance at what is going on at home, but have outrun our space. The long and deeply-interesting debate in the House of Commons upon what we may call the Cattle Plague Bill offers many topics for consideration and comment. It is not a party measure, for advocacy or opposition to, it by no means coincide with party lines of demarcation. But it is a measure which all admit to touch very closely the material interests of the people. The principle of the Bill has received the sanction of a very large majority, but it has yet to be seen whether it may not, in Committee, be so far modified as to neutralise the main objection of its opponents. Other measures of Legislation are making but slow progress in Parliament. It is impossible yet to say to what extent the list of measures presented by Ministers will pass during the present Session. But, in any case, we fear the Session will not prove to have been a fruitful one—a deficiency we shall be all the more ready to condone in the now almost certain case of the signature of a Treaty of Peace by the Powers represented at Berlin.

THE COURT.

The Queen's dinner party yesterday week at Windsor Castle included Princess Louise of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, Princess Louise Marguerite of Prussia, the Marquis of Lorne, the Duchess of Wellington, General the Right Hon. Sir T. M. and the Hon. Lady Biddulph, the Dean of Westminster, and Lieutenant-Colonel Pickard.

Princess Beatrice and Princess Louise Marguerite of Prussia went to Bagshot on Saturday last. The Duke of Connaught and Strathearn met the Princesses there and returned to Windsor Castle to luncheon with them. Prince Hassan Pasha arrived at the castle and had an audience of the Queen. The Turkish Ambassador was present. The Bishop of Lichfield arrived, and was introduced to her Majesty's presence by the Right Hon. R. A. Cross, and did homage on his appointment. The Queen held a Council, at which were present the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Lord Steward, and the Right Hon. R. A. Cross. Mr. Cross had an audience of her Majesty. Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne left the Castle for Cumberland Lodge, on a visit to Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. The Duke of Connaught left for London. The Marquis of Hertford arrived at the castle. The Queen's dinner party included Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Beatrice, Princess Louise Marguerite of Prussia, the Duchess of Roxburghe, the Lord Chamberlain, Lord Henniker, and Lieutenant-General H. Ponsonby. The Hon. Mrs. R. Bruce arrived at the castle.

The Duke of Connaught visited her Majesty on Sunday. The Queen, Princess Beatrice, Princess Louise Marguerite of Prussia, and the Duke of Connaught attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, Vicar of St. James's, Holloway, officiated.

Princess Louise Marguerite of Prussia, accompanied by Princess Christian, went to London on Monday to visit the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The Duchess of Westminster and the Marchioness of Ormonde had an interview with her Majesty and the Princesses on Tuesday. The Dean of Windsor dined with the Queen.

Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, who has passed the week at Buckingham Palace, arrived at the castle on Wednesday, accompanied by the Duke of Connaught. The Prince, with his daughter, have returned to the Continent.

The Queen has walked and driven out daily.

The Hon. Mrs. Bruce has left the castle. Lord Elphinstone and Colonel the Hon. C. H. Lindsay have succeeded Lord Henniker and Mr. Cameron of Lochiel as Lord and Groom in Waiting. General Viscount Bridport and Major-General L. Gardiner have left the castle, and Colonel the Hon. H. Byng has arrived as Equerry in Waiting. Colonel G. A. Maude has also arrived.

The Court, which went into mourning yesterday week for the late Queen of Spain, will change mourning on Friday next, and go out of mourning on the 19th inst.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales visited Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia at Buckingham Palace on Thursday week, after which Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia and the Duke of Connaught visited the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Maharajah of Johore, accompanied by his nephew, was received by their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House. The Prince and Princess visited the Infant Orphan Asylum at Wanstead yesterday week. The Princess distributed the prizes, and the Prince presided at the luncheon in the hall of the asylum. Their Royal Highnesses visited the Empress Eugénie and Prince Louis Napoleon on Saturday last at Camden-place, Chiselhurst. On Monday Princess Christian, Princess Louise of Prussia, and the Duke of Connaught visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House and remained to luncheon. The Duke of Cambridge and Prince Louis Napoleon also visited their Royal Highnesses. The Prince and Princess were present at a garden party at the Earl and Countess of Listowel's at Kingston House, Knightsbridge, in the afternoon, and dined with the Earl and Countess of Wilton at their residence in Grosvenor-square. Their Royal Highnesses left London on Tuesday on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of St. Albans, Bestwood Lodge, Nottingham. On Wednesday the Prince, accompanied by the Princess, opened the Midland Counties Fine-Arts Museum at Nottingham Castle. On Thursday their Royal Highnesses visited Peterborough, on the occasion of the Midland Counties Hound Show.

Lieutenant-Colonel Clarke has succeeded Colonel A. Ellis as Equerry in Waiting to the Prince.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse-Darmstadt (Princess Alice of Great Britain) left Darmstadt on Wednesday for England.

The Duke of Connaught entertained Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia and other friends at dinner on Saturday last at the Naval and Military Club. The members of the Navy Club entertained the First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. W. H. Smith, at dinner at Willis's Rooms on Wednesday—Admiral the Hon. Sir James Drummond, K.C.B., was president of the evening. In addition to the First Lord, Colonel Pasley, R.E., was a guest.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of the Hon. Hugh Cecil Lowther and Lady Grace Gordon, third daughter of the late and sister of the present Marquis of Huntly, took place at Orton Longueville, near Peterborough, on the 27th ult. The bride was given away by her brother, the Marquis of Huntly; and Lord Francis Gordon Lennox was the bridegroom's best man. The bridesmaids were Lady Sybil Lowther, Lady Verena Lowther, Lady Grace Fane, Lady Margaret Gordon, Lady Elena Gordon, and Lady Ethel Gordon. The bride and bridegroom left for Cottesmore Hall, Oakham

The marriage of Lord Clanmorris and Miss Ward, only child of Mr. Robert Edward Ward, of Bangor Castle, Ireland, took place on the 27th ult. at the family seat in the county of Down. The ceremony was performed at the parish church by the Bishop of Down and the Rev. Canon Trench. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a Princesse dress of white satin, trimmed with old Flanders point lace and orange-blossoms. The ornaments, pearls and diamonds, were the gift of the bridegroom. The bridegroom's best man was his brother, the Hon. Burton Bingham; the bridesmaids were Miss Kennedy, the Hon. Rose Bingham, Miss Charlotte Ward, Miss Ruth Wood, Miss C. Doyne, Miss Mahon, Miss Gairdner, Miss Knox, Miss Mulholland, and Miss Maxwell. They wore princesse dresses of Eau de Nil silk trimmed with ostrich feathers, and Pompadour hats to match. Each was presented by the bridegroom with a gold bracelet bearing a monogram and inscription. One hundred and twenty guests were entertained at breakfast. The bride and bridegroom left for Heythrop, Oxfordshire, the seat of Mr. Albert Brassey. The pen which was used for signing the marriage settlement was the quill with which the Treaty of Vienna was signed sixty-three years ago.

The marriage of Mr. James de Hoghton, 10th Regiment, son of the late Sir Henry Bold Hoghton, Bart., of Hoghton Tower, Lancashire, and Aimée Jean Grove, only daughter of the late Mr. John Grove, of Mudiford, Hants, was celebrated on the 27th ult. at St. Augustine's, Queen's-gate. The service was performed by the Rev. R. R. Chape, Vicar of St. Augustine's, and the Rev. Sydney Selwyn, Vicar of Milton, Clevedon. The bridesmaids were Miss Grove (cousin of the bride), Miss de Hoghton (sister of the bridegroom), Miss Watson, Miss Agnes Hussey, and Miss de Montmorency. Mr. Daniel de Hoghton, 47th Regiment, officiated as best man. The bride was given away by her brother, Lieutenant William Grove, R.N. The company assembled to breakfast at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Bartle Goldsmid.

The marriage of Mr. Edmund J. T. Ross of Bladensburg with Miss Alexina Frances, youngest daughter of the Hon. Colin and Lady Frances Lindsay, was celebrated on Tuesday at the Church of Our Lady of Dolours (the Servite Fathers), Fulham-road. The bridesmaids were Lady Anne and Lady Fane Lindsay and Miss Petre, her cousins; Lady Margaret Hely-Hutchinson, Miss Hilyard, and Miss Hepburn, cousins of the bridegroom. Captain Law, R.N., was best man. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a dress of white satin duchesse, trimmed with Brussels lace and chatelaine of orange-blossoms. From a wreath of orange-flowers, which was confined to the hair by diamond and pearl stars, flowed a large lace veil. Her ornaments were diamonds and pearls. The bridesmaids wore princesse dresses of rich cream Surat silk, trimmed with pale pink coral poult de soie and hats to match. The wedding breakfast was given at the Hon. Colin and Lady Frances Lindsay's residence in Collingham-road, South Kensington, after which the bride and bridegroom left for the Isle of Wight. The bride's travelling dress was of dark green satin duchesse, trimmed with a different shade of poult de soie; bonnet and feathers to correspond.

The marriage of Lord Claud J. Hamilton, M. P., and Miss Carolina Chandos Pole will take place on Saturday, July 20, at Kensington parish church; and the marriage of Mr. Walter Hume Long, of Rood Ashton, Wilts, with the Lady Doreen Boyle, fourth daughter of the Earl and Countess of Cork and Orrery, is fixed to take place on Aug. 6.

Marriages are arranged to take place between Lord Alexander Paget, brother of the Marquis of Anglesey, and the Hon. Hester Stapleton-Cotton, youngest daughter of Viscount Combermere; between Lord Granville Gordon and Miss Roe, eldest daughter of Mr. Henry Roe, of Mount Annville Park, in the county of Dublin; between Mr. Newton, of Croxton Park, Cambridgeshire, and Lady Alice Cochrane, second daughter of the Earl and Countess of Dundonald; between Mr. James Stuart Trotter, third son of the late Mr. Archibald Trotter, of Dreghorn, N.B., and Lady Coutts Lindsay, daughter of the late Sir Henry Lindsay Bethune, Bart., of Kilconquhar, and sister of the Earl of Lindsay; and between Mr. Charles Brand, of the Coldstream Guards, and Miss Alice Van de Weyer, second surviving daughter of the late M. Sylvain Van de Weyer, Belgian Minister.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY COLLECTIONS.

In most of the metropolitan places of worship on Sunday, and in the Jewish synagogues on the previous day, collections were made in aid of the Hospital Sunday Fund. The following is a list of the sums, amounting to £100, collected at the various churches and chapels, so far as they can yet be ascertained:—St. Paul's Cathedral, £128; Westminster Abbey, £145; Temple Church, £155; Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington-butts, £151; Jewish Synagogue, Aldgate, £240; Berkeley-street Synagogue, £170; Great Portland-street Synagogue, £160; Bayswater Synagogue, nearly £100; St. Michael's, Chester-square, £426; St. Matthew's, Bayswater, £203; St. Thomas's, Upper Clapton, £145; St. Stephen's, South Dulwich, £154; Kensington Congregational Church, £103; St. Stephen's, South Kensington, £118; St. Michael's, Paddington, £102; St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, £154; St. Peter's, South Kensington, £108; All Saints', Knightsbridge, £142; Greek Church, London-wall, £106; Quebec Chapel, £284; St. Mark's, North Audley-street (including £100 from Mr. Coope, M.P.), £162.

The Corporation of London voted a hundred guineas (not a thousand, as was stated last week) to the fund. A publican in Bishopsgate sent seven shillings in coppers, being penny fines collected from customers using bad language during the last two months. The collections in aid of the fund in the Roman Catholic churches in those parts of the dioceses of Westminster and Southwark that are situate in the metropolis will be made on the 14th inst.

The German Emperor has sent, through Count Münster, the Royal Prussian Order of the Crown, first class, to his Highness the Maharajah of Johore.

At a meeting of the Brighton Town Council on Wednesday it was announced that the annual rental of the borough is £695,996, and the rateable value £554,224. The Council resolved to petition Parliament in favour of the bill for consolidating Parliamentary and municipal lists of voters; and they also adopted a set of rules for the governance of The Level as a public park.

THE CONGRESS AT BERLIN.

The Conference of the assembled Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain and Russia, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and Turkey, under the presidency of Prince Bismarck, in the Radziwill Palace at Berlin, has got through most of the subjects referred to its deliberations. There was no sitting on Wednesday last; but it was expected that on Thursday the Greek question would be considered, as well as the more precise determination of the frontiers of the several provinces and States, north and south of the Balkans. For this purpose, a sub-commission of military officers, nominated by all the Powers which are represented in the Congress, was employed on Wednesday in examining the proposed new boundaries. There will then remain the navigation of the Danube and the questions of the Dardanelles and Asiatic Turkey to be settled. The final proceedings of the Congress will consist in the presentation of the main treaty, which has to be drawn up by a Special Commission, and which will be submitted clause by clause. It is hoped that three or four more sittings will finish the work of the Congress, and Wednesday next, the 10th inst., is mentioned as the day on which the final agreement may be signed. A Vienna telegram confirms the news that the Porte has instructed its delegates at the Congress to assent conditionally to the Austrian occupation of Bosnia and the Herzegovina. The term which the Turkish Government asks should be fixed for the occupation is said to be two years; but, the telegram adds, "Austria declines to be hampered by any distinct engagement either as regards the period of the occupation or of the number of troops she may employ. The troops will not cross the frontier until the sittings of the Congress have terminated."

Prince Bismarck has proposed that a demand should be made upon the Sultan for the Porte to give a formal guarantee that Turkey will accept the decisions of the Congress. But the latest Constantinople telegrams state that in diplomatic circles in that city the belief is entertained that peace is assured. General Todleben is preparing measures for the eventual withdrawal of the Russian army to Adrianople.

The Congress on Tuesday discussed the question of a war indemnity to be paid by Turkey. The Russians demanded £10,000,000, but the majority of the delegates considered the retrocession of Bessarabia and the liberation of Bulgaria sufficient compensation for Russian sacrifices. The Congress, leaving to Russia an ex parte settlement with the Porte, distinctly forbade the cession of territory or any detriment to the Ottoman bondholders.

It is settled that Servia shall retain Nisch, Pirot, and Vranja, and the Kopaunik defile as her western frontier. The claims of Montenegro have not been entirely satisfied. The Congress has granted Montenegro twenty miles of seacoast, with the town and half of the port of Antivari; Austria receives the other half, with permission to station war-vessels there; while Montenegro is forbidden to maintain a fleet. That part of Bulgaria extending from Silistria to Mangalia which Congress, besides the Dobrudscha, has granted to Roumania as compensation for the loss of Bessarabia, does not include Silistria. The enactment of civil equality for the Jews in Roumania is insisted upon as a condition of the recognition of Roumania's independence. The same condition is to be imposed on Servia. The Congress has resolved on the neutralisation of the Danube from the Iron Gates, near Orsova, and has ordered the dismantling of all fortresses and fortifications, and has forbidden the erection of new ones on the Danube. No war-vessels, except small gunboats, are to be allowed entrance or privileges. The International Danube Commission is confirmed; but the Porte, which no longer possesses any country bordering on the Danube, withdraws its delegate. Roumania is to appoint a delegate to the Danubian Commission.

The Congress will publish its protocols after the conclusion of the deliberations, which will be celebrated by a grand banquet. Our Illustrations, from sketches by our Special Artist at Berlin, represent only some trivial incidents of the illustrious gathering in the Radziwill Palace, but will perhaps be considered to possess a certain degree of interest.

THE INDIAN TROOPS IN MALTA.

An Illustration of the review of the Indian native soldiery at Malta by Field Marshal the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief, on the 17th ult., is presented this week, and a page of Lieutenant Allan Gilmore's sketches of different groups of figures, showing the appearance of these troops when off parade, with some glimpses of the Floriana public gardens, and other scenes, about the town of Valetta, and the neighbouring forts and barracks. His Royal Highness, having that day visited Fort St. Elmo, Tigné, and Manoel during the morning and afternoon, reviewed the troops in the evening at six o'clock. General Sir Arthur Borton, the Governor, who commands the forces stationed at Malta, then proceeded to the parade-ground, where the troops were already drawn up. The Duke of Cambridge and his suite arrived immediately afterwards, and was received with the usual salutes. The march past then began, the field artillery leading, followed in order by the 9th Bengal Cavalry, the 1st Bombay Lancers, the Madras and Bombay sappers and miners, and six Indian native infantry regiments, under the command of General Ross, in all about 1600 horses and 6500 men. After these came the Royal and Maltese Artillery, the Royal Engineers, and seven English regiments, numbering altogether 5000 men. The English troops were commanded by General Sir James Airey. The Indian regiments were much admired for the steadiness with which they marched past, showing the effect of excellent drilling and training. The Duke of Cambridge expressed himself much pleased with the appearance of all the troops.

In our Correspondent's Sketch of the scene at this review, the Duke of Cambridge, with Sir Arthur Borton and Sir James Airey behind him, sits on horseback and returns the salute of the cavalry riding past him at a trot. These are the 1st Bombay Lancers, which at once strike the eye as to their fitness for light cavalry work. Although the horses seem small at first for their riders, who, as a rule, are tall men, the ease with which they move shows that the defect is apparent only. Each horse in the regiment is the property of the rider, who is, therefore, to a certain extent, a man of some little position and means. There are certain service regulations for compensation in case of loss or damage received by the horse; but no man can join the regiment without producing a suitable charger or paying down the necessary sum for its purchase.

The propriety of establishing in Dorsetshire an industrial school for boys was discussed on Tuesday at the Court of Quarter Sessions held at Dorchester, under the presidency of Mr. Floyer, M.P. The subject was brought forward by the Rev. Carr J. Glynn, who said an admirable site had been selected, but at present the money for the purchase had not yet been received from Government, the sum to be paid for the transfer of the county gaol being intended to be devoted to the purpose. Fifty boys are "waiting accommodation."

THE LATE CHARLES MATHEWS.

A brief memoir of this highly popular and accomplished comedian, who died at Manchester on the 24th ult., was given among our Obituary notices last week. He was in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and had been nearly forty years one of the chief favourites of the playgoing world. Not only in London, and in all our provincial towns, as well as in those of America, India, and the Australian colonies, wherever English audiences were to be gathered in a theatre, but also in Paris, where he performed equally well in the French language, Charles James Mathews never failed to please. The funeral, at Kensal Green Cemetery last Saturday morning, was attended by many ladies and gentlemen of distinction belonging to the stage, or to dramatic literature and criticism. Seven mourning carriages, with a dozen private carriages, followed the hearse from the late residence of Charles Mathews to Kensal Green, where he is interred near the grave of his first wife, Madame Vestris.

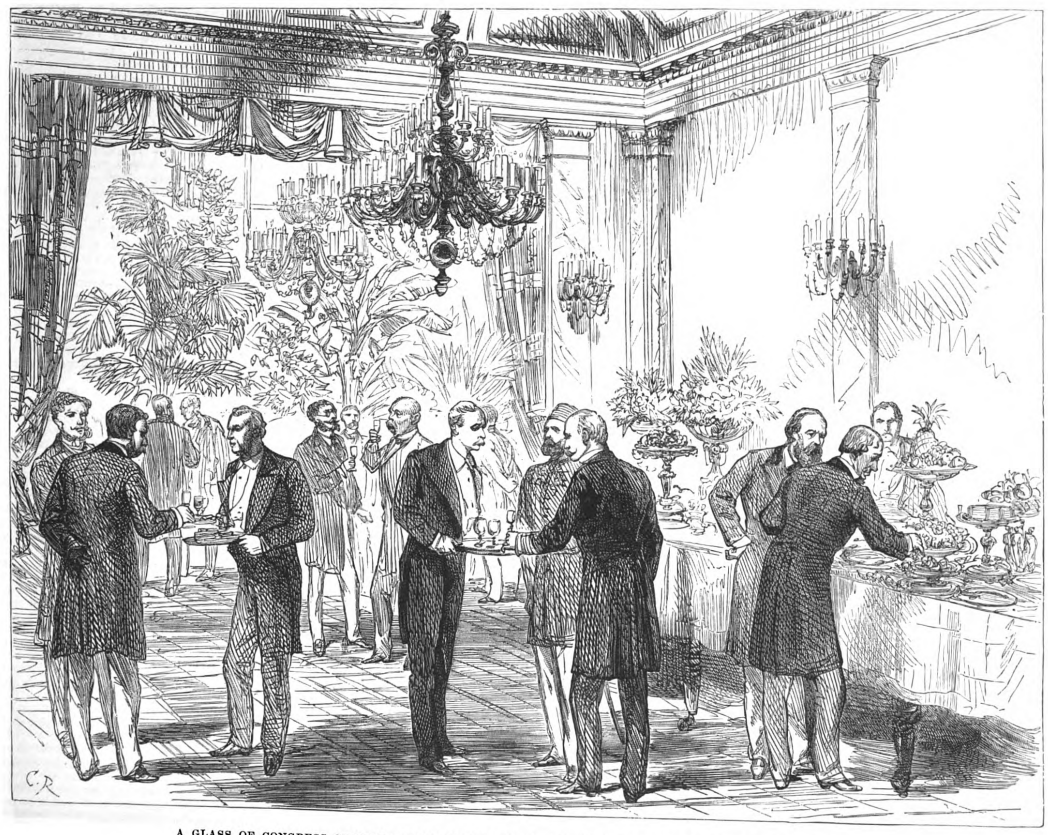
THE LATE MAJOR-GENERAL W. McBEAN, V.C.

The funeral of this distinguished Army veteran, whose death, at the Herbert Royal Military Hospital, Shooter's-hill, was recorded in our last, took place at Edinburgh; but the removal of his coffin to the railway station at Woolwich on Tuesday week was attended by an imposing military procession. There were a dozen batteries of Royal Artillery and Royal Horse Artillery, and the third battalion of the Rifle Brigade, with two regimental bands. Among the mourners were a large number of officers of the 93rd Highlanders and other regiments, friends of the deceased, headed by Lieutenant-General Sir C. L. D'Aguilar, Commandant of the Woolwich Garrison, with his staff. The coffin, with the hat and sword worn by the deceased Major-General, was borne upon a gun-carriage from the Herbert Hospital to the railway station. We have given a short account of the late General McBean's career, which was remarkable for his having risen from the ranks—indeed, from the position of a drummer-boy in the 93rd to that of a general officer.

The portrait now engraved is a good likeness, and characteristic of this fine old soldier.



ADMIRAL SIR G. BACK.

Admiral Sir George Back, D.C.L., F.R.S., died on the ult., at Gloucester-place, Portman-square, in his eighty-s year. He entered the Navy on board the Arethusa in and was taken prisoner and sent to France, where he rem five years. He afterwards accompanied Sir John Frankl two different Arctic voyages, in 1818 and 1827; and in was appointed to conduct an expedition fitted out fo purpose of instituting a search for Sir John Ross, who ha

THE ROYAL VISIT TO NOTTINGHAM.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have this week visited the Duke of St. Albans at Bestwood Lodge, near Nottingham, and came on Wednesday to the opening of the new Midland Counties Art-Museum and Loan Exhibition of Art, in Nottingham Castle. Their Royal Highnesses arrived on Tuesday evening at Bestwood, which is situated about five miles north of the town, on the road leading to Newstead Abbey and Mansfield. They travelled from London, with their party, in saloon carriages attached to the Great Northern Railway express train, as far as the Daybrook station, on the line between Grantham and Nottingham. They were met there by the Duke of St. Albans and the Duke and Duchess of Manchester; the Hon. Mrs. Stonor, the Marquis of Hartington, Lord Colville of Culross, General Sir Dighton Probyn, and Mr. Bernal Osborne came from London by the same train as guests of the Duke of St. Albans. The road near the station was decorated with evergreens and wreaths of flowers suspended from Venetian masts, and with a triumphal arch of evergreens. The children of several parish schools, to the number of 1600, sang "God Save the Queen" and "God Bless the Prince of Wales." An escort of the South Notts Yeomanry accompanied the Duke's carriages along the road to Bestwood Lodge. Their Royal Highnesses were entertained by the Duke of St. Albans and by his mother, the Dowager Duchess, who is also Viscountess Falkland, having married Lord Falkland in 1859, ten years after the decease of the late Duke. The present Duke, William Aubrey De Vere Beauclerk, is the tenth in succession. He was born in April, 1840, and has been twice married; first, to a daughter of the late General the Hon. Charles Grey; secondly, to a daughter of Mr. Bernal Osborne.

The visit of the Prince and Princess to the town of Nottingham on Tuesday, and the ceremony of opening the Museum, passed off with great success. The Mayor, Aldermen, and Town Council, with various officials who were to take part in the procession, assembled at the School of Art, in Waverley-street, and proceeded in carriages to the top of Mansfield-road to await the arrival of the Royal party from Bestwood. At this point a triumphal arch, bearing the words "Welcome to Nottingham" on each side, had been erected. The band of the Robin Hoods Volunteer Regiment was stationed near, and the South Notts Yeomanry, the North Notts Yeomanry, the 17th Lancers, and the 106th Foot were drawn up on both sides of the road. At twenty minutes past twelve o'clock the cheering of the crowd announced the approach of the Royal party. As the carriages drew up, escorted by a squadron of the North Notts Yeomanry, the band played the National Anthem, and the troops presented arms. The Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Duke of St. Albans and General Sir D. Probyn, were seated in an open carriage. In the other carriages were the Marquis of Hartington, Lord E. Clinton, the Hon. Mrs. Stonor, and the Duchess of Manchester; Lady E. Clinton, the Dowager Duchess of St. Albans, the Duke of Manchester, and Count Zarajowski; Mr. Bernal Osborne, Lord Colville, the Hon. H. Strutt, Colonel Clarke, Major the Hon. H. Wood, Lord Newark, Mr. Christopher Sykes, M.P., and Mr. Cockerell. The Prince and Princess repeatedly bowed in acknowledgment of the cheers with which they were greeted. A procession was formed, which included the mounted police, some squadrons of Lancers, the North Notts Yeomanry, carriages containing representatives of friendly societies, members of the Corporation, borough officials and magistrates, the architect of the Castle restoration (Mr. T. C. Hine), the Roman Catholic Bishop of Nottingham and his chaplain, the members of Parliament for the county and surrounding towns and for the borough, the Mayors of the adjacent towns, the Bishop of Lincoln, the Lord Lieutenant of the county (Lord Belper), and the Mayor (Alderman Oldknow), the Sheriff (Mr. A. Jacoby), and the Deputy Mayor. Then came the Prince and Princess of Wales and suite, followed by a squadron of North Notts Yeomanry and a squadron of the 17th Lancers and mounted police.

The procession went down Mansfield-road—a wide and handsome thoroughfare planted with trees—towards the Market-place. The decorations of the houses were very effective. Over the street were festoons and arches of evergreens, while Venetian masts were in close array. On each side the street was crowded with spectators, who cheered heartily as the Royal carriage passed. At several places on the route bands of music were stationed, and played the National Anthem, while the troops presented arms. At the Market-place the scene was quite imposing. This market-place is one of the most spacious in the kingdom, covering an area of nearly six acres, and its appearance is rendered quaint and picturesque by the projecting fronts of the upper storeys of the houses which surround it. These were hung with scarlet cloth and festoons of flowers, and trophies of flags were fixed between the upper windows. The square was surrounded by Venetian masts, and from these were suspended strings of small banners. Every window and the tops of the houses were thronged with spectators; in the Market-place there was an immense crowd. At the east side of the square, in front of the Exchange, were the bands of the Grenadier Guards; on the north or Long-row side, drawn up in a space inclosed by strong barricades, were the Sunday-school children of the town, to the number, it is estimated, of 17,000. They were under the direction of Mr. J. S. Kirk, secretary of the Sunday-School Union, and Mr. J. H. Haywood, secretary of the Church of England Institute. As the Royal carriage came into sight the children sang the National Anthem: and when it arrived opposite the inclosed space the children sang "God Bless the Prince of Wales." The singing was conducted by Mr. F. M. Ward, a local professor of music. At its conclusion one of the scholars was conducted to the Royal carriage by the Town Clerk, and presented the Princess with a bouquet. The procession left the Market-place by Chapel Bar, across which street hung festoons of artificial flowers. It ascended the Derby-road, where the residents had done their best to adorn the houses. In front of the Roman Catholic Cathedral was an extensive platform draped with blue and scarlet cloth, trimmed with lace, and at the top of the road was the triumphal arch of the Nottingham Rowing Club. It was surmounted by an eight-oared boat, in which were seated members of the club in their boating costume, while other members stood on each side of the road and cheered lustily. As the Royal carriage passed under the arch, the men in the boat saluted by raising their oars. The procession quickened its pace, and passed round the North-road into the park, and so the Royal visitors advanced to the door of the Museum.

On entering, luncheon was partaken of, after which the Prince was conducted by the Mayor to the door of the Museum, where he was presented with a golden key. The door soon turned on its hinges, and his Royal Highness declared the Midland Counties Art-Museum to be open. The Prince and party then inspected the different apartments, and his Royal Highness expressed himself highly delighted with the picture-galleries and the collection of lace. The ceremony over, the Prince proceeded to a tent erected on a plateau in front of the Castle, where the municipal address was presented to him. The Prince replied, commending the town of Nottingham for having taken the lead in carrying out an object contemplated by his father, the late Prince Consort, the establishment of Art-Museums throughout the United Kingdom. His Royal Highness also referred to the lamented death of the late Mayor, Mr. W. G. Ward, whose energy had done so much for this institution. The Bishop of Lincoln then offered up a special prayer, and, after the Benediction, the procession moved off, the Royal party proceeding to Bestwood Lodge, where their Royal Highnesses passed the night. They left Bestwood on Thursday for Peterborough, to visit the Hound Show there, and arrived in London the same evening.

There was a grand display of fireworks and illuminations in Nottingham on Wednesday evening, and everything was done to show due appreciation of the Royal visit. Messrs. Defries and Son, of London, were employed for the decorations and illuminations. A song, "Welcome," was written especially for the occasion by Mr. J. H. Brown, the music by Mr. H. G. Irons; and an ode by Mr. P. J. Bayley, author of "Festus," who is a native of Nottingham, was also written at the request of the Mayor and Corporation, and has been widely distributed. Altogether, the visit has been all that could be desired. We shall give some Illustrations next week.

The Midland Counties Art-Museum and Loan Exhibition of the Fine Arts occupies the stately mansion of the Dukes of Newcastle, called Nottingham Castle, which had been allowed to remain in a ruined condition since 1831, but which has lately been restored by the Town Council of Nottingham. The suite of rooms which is on a level with the western entrance, and which is flanked by two slightly projecting wings, is devoted to the display of such rarities as the South Kensington Museum has made familiar to us. Antique laces—both needle, point, and pillow—including a fine educational series belonging to Mr. Andrew MacCallum, the eminent painter; Japanese lacquer-work, lent by Mr. R. Phene Spiers, the famous collection of Japanese ceramic art, of the finest period, belonging to Major Walter; the Japanese Cloisonné, belonging to Mr. James Lord Bowes, the silver plate, the gold and silver jewellery, the Wedgwood, Turner, and Adams ware, the miniatures, the ancient textile fabrics and ecclesiastical embroideries, the wares of Doulton and Minton, and the rare porcelain of Mrs. H. T. Hope, not to mention many rare objects from the Indian Museum and from the collections of private individuals, are all set forth in appropriate order. Much praise is due to Mr. Wallis, the curator, and Mr. Briscoe, the Corporation librarian and compiler of the catalogue, and to Mr. Alan Cole, of South Kensington, and his assistants for the energy they have displayed in arranging this Exhibition.

One of the grand staircases is devoted to the portraits of the heroes and heroines of the Commonwealth, including both Royalists and Parliamentarians, and the other to the portraits of local celebrities and paintings, mainly of a modern kind. Up stairs is one of the finest collections of English water colours ever brought together, including Hunt, Cox, De Wint, Turner, and all those who have conferred distinction on water-colour practice. One room is devoted to such a collection of the works of Henry Dawson as places that gentleman in the very front rank of English landscape art. Another room contains the works of the late M. Niemann, and a third is hung with the lovely landscapes of M. Clarence Whaite. The great gallery, one of the best proportioned and best lighted in the whole country, is hung on one side with works of the old masters, and on the other by those of living men. Among the former are masterpieces of Vandyck, Teniers, Hogarth, Andrea del Sarto, Cuyp, Claude, Berghem, Rubens, Titian, Murillo, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, and many others. The latter include such men as Israels, Faed, Leighton, E. M. Ward, Ansdell, Erskine Nicol, Andrew MacCallum, Cooper, Linnell, J. M. Pott, Long, and Burgess; and they are represented not by indifferent examples, but in many cases by chefs-d'œuvre. Besides native artists, there is also to be seen on the walls a goodly sprinkling of foreign work. Altogether, the Midland Counties Art-Museum is one of the largest provincial successes that has occurred for years past.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

According to all accounts, the national fête in Paris on Sunday was very successful. The decorations and illuminations were general throughout the city, and on a scale of great splendour. The weather was cloudy, but no rain fell. One of the incidents of the day was the unveiling of Clesinger's statue of the Republic in the Champ de Mars. All the Ministers except M. Dufaure, who was indisposed, were present, and speeches were made by M. Teisserenc de Bort and M. de Marcère. At the conclusion of the ceremony the military band played the "Marseillaise," and was enthusiastically applauded. Twelve hundred and sixty-nine Communists, who had earned indulgence by "contrition, submission, and diligence," have been allowed remission or commutation of punishment in honour of the fête. Nor were the poor forgotten. They had 20,000f. of the 100,000f. voted to M. Dufaure for receptions, 20,000f. of the 500,000f. voted for the fête, and grants from the local relief funds. Clesinger's statue of the Republic represents France as seated, with the physiognomy of a Roman matron, and with a head-dress a compromise between a helmet and a Phrygian cap. The right hand holds a sword, while the left rests on a tablet on which is inscribed, "Republique Française. Constitution. 25 Fevrier, 1875." There were illuminations and rejoicings in a large number of provincial towns, and even in Corsica, in sympathy with the Paris celebration.

The Shah left Paris on Tuesday for Vienna. Marshal MacMahon conducted him from the Grand Hotel to the station. On Sunday night the Marshal and Madame MacMahon accompanied the Shah to the top of the Arc de Triomphe to witness the fireworks and illuminations.

The Archduke Albert of Austria arrived in Paris on Monday evening, and was received at the railway station by Marshal MacMahon. His Imperial Highness has gone to Trouville.

The French Academy on Thursday week appointed M. Victor Hugo director and M. Victorien Sardou chancellor for the ensuing three months.

The Geographical Society of France held a special sitting yesterday week for the distribution of prizes—Admiral la Roncière le Noury in the chair. The gold medal of the society was presented to Mr. Stanley in recognition of his journey across Equatorial Africa. Mr. Stanley narrated the incidents of his journey, and was loudly cheered. Other prizes and medals were afterwards distributed.

M. Mouchez, captain in the army, succeeds M. Leverrier as Director of the Paris Observatory, but with purely administrative functions, the scientific functions being intrusted to M. Tisserand, a young astronomer of great promise, hitherto at the Toulouse Observatory.

The Comte de Chambord has sent 1000f. to the Joan of Arc Memorial Fund.

M. Léon Say received last Tuesday a deputation of British working men connected with the sugar interests that are injured by the French bounty system. The Minister expressed himself as opposed to a system of bounties, but pointed out that the drawbacks on raw sugar allowed by the French Government were not of this character. With regard to the refined sugar, they were preparing a new scheme, which he hoped would be satisfactory.

Disturbances in Marseilles on Monday night, arising out of a proposal to remove the statue of Bishop Belzunce from its present site, resulted in the arrest of 126 persons.

ITALY.

The final estimates of the revenue for 1878, together with the financial questions relating thereto, were discussed on Wednesday in the Chamber of Deputies. Signor Seismit Doda, the Minister of Finance, made a long speech wherein he demonstrated the accuracy of his anticipations and enumerated the savings effected by the Ministry of the Left now in power. He then entered into an historical review of Italian finance, and alluded to the new bills announced in the financial statement. After refuting the objections of the Opposition, he concluded by expressing a hope that the Chamber would accord a vote of full confidence in the financial policy of the Ministry. The Chamber then passed an order of the day of Signor Tajani approving the Minister's financial scheme by 204 votes against 60.

Differences of opinion respecting the Ministerial measure for the reduction of the grist tax have led Signor Sella to resign his position as leader of the Opposition. Signor Minghetti is spoken of his probable successor.

SPAIN.

A low mass was celebrated yesterday week in the hall where the remains of the late Queen were lying in state, all the great dignitaries being present. The body of the Queen was afterwards conveyed in state to the railway station, to be taken to the palace of the Escurial. The state funeral will take place at Madrid on the 10th inst., in the Church of San Francisco. The remains of the Queen are ultimately to lie in a church which will be erected for that purpose at great cost. The room in which she died is, by order of the King, to remain undisturbed. A grateful feeling has been excited in Madrid by the kindly telegrams and messages from Queen Victoria.

The session of the Cortes, which was interrupted on account of the Queen's death, will be resumed next Monday.

From Havannah we hear that a Royal decree has been promulgated extending the organic municipal and provincial laws of Spain to Cuba.

HOLLAND.

The Minister of the Marine has been temporarily intrusted with the direction of the War Office, the Minister of War, M. de Koo van Anderwerelt, being unwell.

The Dutch are again in trouble with the Acheenese, and have sent reinforcements from Java to cope with them.

BELGIUM.

The 22nd proximo will be the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of the King and Queen, and a series of fêtes is to be given in Brussels, where also a collection has been set on foot to present a memorial to their Majesties.

The Military Budget for 1879 amounts to 41,395,500f., for 45,093 men and 8949 horses.

A great Liberal demonstration, to celebrate the success of the party in the recent elections, was held in Brussels on Sunday. All the provincial and principal towns in Belgium were represented by deputations; the streets were decorated with flags and thronged with people. In the evening there was a monster banquet of 6000 persons, at which the Ministers and all the notabilities of the Liberal party were to be present.

GERMANY.

A bulletin, issued on Thursday morning at Berlin, announces that all the Emperor's wounds have now healed, and that a gradual increase in his Majesty's strength is perceptible.

General and Mrs. Grant have been honised at Berlin. They were present yesterday week at a large dinner party given at Potsdam by the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany. Next day General and Mrs. Grant dined with Prince Bismarck. On Monday a review was held in honour of the ex-President; and on Tuesday he started for Hamburg, whence he purposes making a tour in Sweden and Norway. General Grant has received from the Empress an autograph letter expressing the Emperor's regret that his Majesty has not been able to receive him during his stay in Berlin.

Some particulars of the Berlin Congress will be found in another column.

The Municipal Council of Berlin has voted 60,000 marks for a painting by Herr von Werner of a picture commemorative of the Congress.

An entertainment was given in the Berlin Zoological Gardens on Monday by the editors of the Berlin papers to the foreign journalists at present in Berlin.

The Berlin Official Gazette publishes an Imperial decree ordaining that, until further notice, all strangers arriving in Berlin, and, further, all persons wishing to take up their residence in the capital, must be provided with passports or papers of legitimation.

The English Ambassador at Berlin has forwarded to the Emperor a petition from Mr. Bishop, who does not appeal against his sentence, but simply asks that his imprisonment may be in a fortress where books are allowed and no degrading dress is worn.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Imperial sanction was given on Thursday week to all the laws respecting the Austro-Hungarian compromise. At the same time the Reichsrath was prorogued. The Lower House of the Hungarian Diet was engaged in discussing petitions relative to Eastern Affairs. In reply to some observations of Herr Helfy, the Minister-President, Herr Tisza said:—"It can never be to the interest of Hungary to have Slav States on our southern border joining hands with each other and casting a chain about our feet."

The Session of the Hungarian Diet was closed on Sunday by the Emperor Francis Joseph. His Majesty, in the Speech from the Throne, began by observing that the general political situation had everywhere weighed heavily upon public credit, and that the necessarily considerable time required to bring the compromise negotiations to an issue in the Houses of Parliament had rendered it impossible to accomplish all that might have been desired. Nevertheless much had been done towards the regulations of the national finance, as well as for administrative and judicial reform. His Majesty then proceeded to review the measures passed by Parliament during the Session now closing, and stated that the new Austro-Hungarian compromise laws would promote the interests of both portions of the Monarchy and the welfare of the whole people. Ample compensation for the concessions mutually made would be gained by both parties in the strength accruing from the fresh manifestation of the reciprocity of views and interests of both portions of the Empire. On the subject of foreign relations, the speech says:—"The present state of our foreign relations allows us to hope that we shall succeed in assuring not only the interests of the Monarchy, but also the blessing of peace. The Emperor is happy to acknowledge that the chief merit in this respect is due to the patriotic support received by the Government from Parliament. Whatever the future may bring, we may confidently trust that the interests of the Monarchy, and therefore those of Hungary, will always find a sure support in you and in every son of the Monarch." The speech concluded by expressing the Emperor's thanks for the assiduous exertions of Parliament during the last Session.

The following autograph letter from the Emperor to Prince Auersperg, President of the Austrian Cabinet, has been officially published:—"My dear Prince Auersperg,—I have determined to order the prorogation of the Austrian Reichsrath from June 27 till further notice. On this occasion I have great satisfaction in expressing my thanks and high esteem to the members of both Houses of the Legislature for the zeal, devotion, and patriotic spirit of which they have given proof in the difficult work of settling the terms of the Austro-Hungarian compromise in a manner promoting the interests of both contracting parties, as well as the welfare of the whole Monarchy. At the same time, I entertain the confident hope that the feeling of the indestructible solidarity and the reciprocity of interests of both halves of the Empire will take still deeper root, and that by a harmonious co-operation of all forces the whole Monarchy will enjoy increased prosperity on the newly-established basis of agreement. FRANCIS JOSEPH."

The letter is followed in the Official Gazette by a list of the compromise laws voted by the Reichsrath.

GREECE.

From Athens we learn that the Ministers have resigned in consequence of a disagreement respecting some military promotions, but that the King has not yet accepted their resignations.

AMERICA.

President Hayes on Wednesday attended a commemorative celebration of the battle of Wyoming, fought on July 3, 1778. The President was well received by the thousands of people assembled on the occasion.

Mr. Randall, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in a speech delivered on Monday at the Democratic Club, Philadelphia, declared that Congress held President Hayes's title quite as valid coming from the Electoral Commission as if received direct from the people. Nevertheless, he maintained the right of Congress to investigate the electoral frauds.

The American papers announce the death, in his eighty-first year, of Professor Charles Hodge, D.D., LL.D., a well-known American theologian, for fifty-six years a professor in the Theological Seminary at Princeton. Dr. Hodge was of Scotch-Irish descent. His theological works are very numerous.

In military circles apprehensions are entertained of a general Indian war.

CANADA.

A telegram from Montreal, dated the 3rd inst., states that the Canadian regiment has left for Saint Albans, Vermont, to participate in the celebration of the Fourth of July, the anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence.

The police and magistrates of Montreal are taking precautions against disturbances during the Orange celebration of July 12. The armouries are guarded night and day, and a regiment of volunteers will go into camp on Monday next.

INDIA.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times, in a telegram of Sunday's date, says that public anxiety is relieved by the latest meteorological report, the barometer rising over the whole of India, except in Behar, and Madras. Moderate rain has fallen in Bombay and the Central Provinces. Assam has had two inches of rainfall and Bareilly one inch. Copious showers have fallen in Bengal. There seems at present no reason for believing that the rainfall will prove other than an average one. In Madras, however, the Government deem the general prospects not improved, and prices continue rising. The mortuary returns in the North-West Provinces show the number of deaths for the year ended April, 1878, to have been 157,326, against 78,408 in the previous year. At the request of the Famine Commission, the Government has consented to send a sanitary commissioner to investigate the causes of the mortality recently reported in the North-West Provinces. It is officially announced that the late famine has involved Mysore in a debt of 900,000 rupees.

The annual rising of the Nile has begun in Lower Egypt.

A Madrid paper publishes a letter announcing the death of the Emperor of Morocco.

A tunnel near Schwelm, in Prussia, has fallen in, and about twenty-seven persons have been buried in the ruins.

Despatches from Fiji give an account of an earthquake at Tanna, New Hebrides, which raised the land along the shore and harbour about twenty feet.

Prince Eugene, Duke of Leuchtenberg, will on the 14th inst. be betrothed to Mdlle. Skobeleff, sister of the well-known Russian General. Mdlle. Skobeleff will bear the title of Countess Beauharnais.

THEATRES.

Mr. J. L. Toole presided at the anniversary festival of the Royal General Theatrical Fund held on Tuesday evening at the Freemasons' Tavern, and, in proposing the principal toast, related a number of interesting stories descriptive of the lights and shadows of the actor's life. He also showed how useful the fund was to persons whose occupation is so precarious as that of the theatrical profession; and, in general, made out a strong case for the extension of public patronage to the fund. Subscriptions to the amount of £900 were announced, including a donation of £100 from the Queen, 20 guineas from the chairman, 100 guineas from Mr. Sothern, and 25 guineas from the Duke of Beaufort.

The Royal Dramatic College, near Woking, a familiar object to travellers on the South-Western line, is, after a brief struggle of twelve years, pronounced a failure; and this whole range of picturesque buildings, in the Elizabethan style, surrounded by ten acres of pleasure-grounds, is to be put up for auction by Messrs. Farebrother and Co., next week.

A matinée dramatique is announced for to-day at the Olympic on behalf of Mr. George D. Coleman, the acting manager of the theatre. A new play, entitled "Vivienne; or, The Romance of a French Marriage," forms the principal feature of the entertainment. The leading characters are represented by Miss Bella Pateman and Mr. Hermann Vezin.

A new second part is announced for production at St. George's Hall next Wednesday, the 10th inst., at Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment. It will consist of a piece called "An Artful Automaton," by Arthur Law, music by King Hall. "Doubleday's Will" and "The Paris Exhibition" are retained.

Miss Glyn inaugurated her Shakspearean readings at her own residence on Tuesday, when her pupil, Miss Stringfield, recited Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade," after which the tragedy of "Romeo and Juliet" was read by the distinguished tragédienne herself. We are glad that these readings are becoming popular. Miss Glyn's treatment of the famous love-drama was both pathetic and powerful. Miss Stringfield has talent, and her elocutionary ability is considerable. She was, as might be expected, somewhat nervous; but a second trial will probably bring out her strong points.

The Extra Supplement.

BUSH-FIGHTING WITH KAFFIRS.

This scene of irregular warfare in a South African forest is based on the authentic sketches of our special Artist, who was lately accompanying the mixed forces of British troops, Frontier Armed Police, colonial militia, volunteers, and native auxiliaries, Fingoes, Tambookies, and others, in their campaign against the hostile Galekas and Gaikas, on both sides of the Great Kei River. It looks rather like a chance skirmish by some detached party of "Rangers" with an unknown number of the enemy caught lurking in ambush to waylay a convoy on the neighbouring road from one fortified station to another. There has been a good deal of this sort of incidental fighting, by the colonial volunteers and their local allies, in districts where the regular troops under command of General Thesiger, or of his predecessor at the beginning of the late war, could not for some time be brought into action. We are happy to learn, by the latest news from Cape Town, which is to the 11th ult., telegraphed on from Madeira, that the Kaffir war seems to be almost finished. The Gaika chief, Sandilli, has been killed, while Mapole, the brother of Tini Macomo, and Somta, Sandilli's brother, have been captured, and Edmund Sandilli has offered to surrender. Blyth's force, after six days' continuous fighting, completely defeated the Griquas at Malgas, killing fifty-two of the enemy and capturing 2000 sheep. In another part of the country, we hear, Colonel Lanyon, having retired to Griqua Town, was attacked by a body of 800 men, whom he defeated with great loss.

Mr. Merriman's motion condemning the action of the Governor, Sir Bartle Frere, with regard to the command of the colonial forces, has been rejected by the House of Assembly at Cape Town.

The whole of the picture-galleries and sculpture-rooms were thrown open for the reception of visitors.

The annual fête in aid of the funds of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage was held on Wednesday at the Crystal Palace. The programme comprised, in addition to the ordinary attractions of the building, many entertainments of a special character. Twelve police bands performed in different parts of the grounds.

On Monday the annual meeting of the National Society for Women's Suffrage was held at the Westminster Palace Hotel—Mr. Leonard Courtney, M.P., in the chair. Among the speakers were Miss Thornbury (the secretary), Mrs. P. A. Taylor, Dr. Abbott, Professor Hunter, Miss Shore, Mr. Frederic Hill, Miss Isabella Tod, and Mrs. Duncan M'Laren.

The Dean of Westminster distributed the prizes to the boys of St. Anne's Orphan Asylum, Streatham-hill, yesterday week, and addressed the pupils on some of the advantages of education. After handing to the former pupils their prizes, the chairman presented those won by the senior boys now in the school, one of whom, E. G. Hogg, took the gold medal, the bronze medal, and six other prizes.

Mr. Theophilus G. Pinches has been appointed to the post left vacant in the British Museum by the death of Mr. George Smith; and he has, says the Daily News, begun his career as an Assyriologist by an important discovery with respect to the chronology of the reign of Cambyses, which, if it proves correct, will overturn all the former theories of Assyrian chronology.

An exhibition of fans, under the auspices of the Fanmakers' Company, was opened at Drapers' Hall on Tuesday by the Lady Mayoress, who was accompanied by the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs. It is exceedingly varied and interesting, and comprises many curious old fans lent by private owners in whose families they are treasured as heirlooms. The exhibition will remain open until Thursday next.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the fourth week in June was 77,601, of whom 38,294 were in workhouses and 39,307 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1877, 1876, and 1875, these figures show a decrease of 605, 868, and 7980 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 571, of whom 367 were men, 171 women, and 33 children.

The National Rose Society's annual show was held last Saturday at the Crystal Palace. Later in the afternoon the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, with Aldermen and Sheriffs Nottage and Staples, in state, opened an exhibition of work, under the auspices of the Tin Plate and Wire Workers' Company. His Lordship was made a freeman and liveryman of the company. The annual fête of the German Gymnastic Society was also held, the members contending in friendly rivalry for athletic prizes. In the evening they assembled in the transept, where the prizes were distributed.

The annual fancy-dress ball, under the patronage of the Queen, for the benefit of the Royal Caledonian Asylum and the Royal Scottish Hospital, took place at Willis's Rooms yesterday week, under the patronage of the Duchesses of Somerset (Dowager), Richmond, Hamilton, Buccleuch, Athole, Roxburghe, Wellington, and Sutherland, and a large array of ladies connected with the leading Scottish families. The chief attractions were the two quadrilles arranged under the auspices of the Countess of March, the Highland quadrille, and the other fancy quadrille by Lady Kilmarnock and Lady Ruthven.

There was a great gathering of horticulturists, both amateur and professional, at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, on Wednesday night, in celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the Gardeners' Royal Benevolent Institution. The chair was occupied by Mr. Robert Marnock, and the company included most of the principal nurserymen and gardeners in and about London, as well as many from distant parts of the country. The report gave interesting particulars of the good effected by the society in the relief of distressed gardeners and their widows. The subscriptions amounted to 600 guineas.

The seventy-second anniversary festival of the friends and patrons of the Licensed Victuallers' School, which was established in the year 1803 for the children of deceased members of the trade, was celebrated on Wednesday evening at the Alexandra Palace; Mr. J. Bagot Scriven (of the firm of Messrs. Barclay, Perkins, and Co.) presided, and was supported by more than one hundred gentlemen. Mr. William Smalley (the secretary) announced subscriptions amounting to upwards of £6500, of which £2700 was subscribed at the chairman's table. The attractions were a display of fireworks, an evening representation of "The Rivals" by Mrs. Stirling and company, performances in the hippodrome, an evening promenade concert, and a ball.

Under the presidency of the Marquis of Lansdowne the annual meeting of the Association for the Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb was held on Monday in the Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour-street. There are, the noble chairman stated, at the present time 30,000 deaf mutes in the United Kingdom, and he confidently asked aid towards extending the benefits of a system so admirably adapted to its purpose.—On Wednesday evening a training college for instructing persons in the art of teaching deaf mutes to speak was opened by Dr. R. Symes Thompson. There was a numerous attendance, and the proceedings were graced by the presence of a large number of ladies. This college has been established under the auspices of the society for training teachers of the deaf, and diffusing the "German system" in the United Kingdom.

The hot weather of last week was accompanied by a large increase in the mortality of the metropolis. The Registrar-General's report states that there were 2266 births and 1570 deaths registered during the week. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 72 below, and the deaths exceeded by 208 the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths from smallpox, which had steadily declined from 80 to 19 in the ten previous weeks, rose again to 38 last week. Of these 14 were certified as unvaccinated and 12 as vaccinated; in the 12 remaining cases (of which 9 occurred in private practice) the certifying medical practitioners omitted to give any information as to vaccination. The deaths referred to diarrhœa, which had been but 21 and 23 in the two preceding weeks, rose last week to 72, but were 11 below the corrected average number. Six deaths were also referred to simple cholera. Three fatal cases of sunstroke were registered. There were 24 deaths from measles, 23 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 97 from whooping-cough, and 19 from different forms of fever. In the Greater London 2791 births and 1827 deaths were registered, equal to annual rates of 32·7 and 21·4 per 1000 of the population.

Last Tuesday afternoon the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Drinking-Fountain and Cattle-Trough Association was held at Willis's Rooms—Lord Kinnaird, in the absence of the Duke of Westminster, presiding. The report (which was carried unanimously) stated that during the year eighty-one new troughs and fountains had been erected, making in all 728 troughs and fountains in different parts of the metropolis. It was estimated that about 500,000 persons used the fountains every day; while nearly 2000 horses, besides other animals, used a single trough in a day. The Grand Junction Water Company gave the water to the fountains in its district, as until this year did the Southwark and Vauxhall Company, all the other companies charging amounts varying from 3d. to 9d. the 1000 gallons. The committee thanked Mr. Gurney Barclay for the gift of two fountains; Mrs. Charles Kingsley for a fountain and trough, erected as a memorial to the late Canon Kingsley; Mrs. Deane Browne for a trough, Mr. J. H. Buxton for three troughs (in addition to one given before), and also Mr. Read and Mr. Hodgson for fountains, built at their cost and handed over to the association. The report spoke also of the great extent to which the example thus set in London had been followed in many other cities, at home and abroad. The chairman read a letter from Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., who inclosed a cheque for £50, testifying to the great value of the association's work in the promotion of temperance. Another letter was read from Dr. Prater, with a like inclosure, as a testimony to the value of the efforts of the association in a sanitary point of view. Sir Walter Stirling, Mr. Samuel Gurney, Mr. John Taylor, Mr. Surr, Mr. Fen, and others spoke, urging the necessity for increased support.

REVIEW OF INDIAN TROOPS AT

TA BY H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The Lord Chancellor's measure for conveying a million from the Irish Church Fund to a Board to be formed for the encouragement of Intermediate Education in Ireland has been cordially greeted on both sides the House. No exception was taken to its being read a second time yesterday week; and on Tuesday the clauses and schedule were unanimously agreed to, the bill passing through Committee and being reported, amid cheers, in less than half an hour.

Reverting to the Globe Memorandum of the agreement between the Marquis of Salisbury and Count Schouvaloff, Earl Granville on Monday, said in his most mellifluous tones, that during the three times in the course of twenty years he had been at the Foreign Office the confidence placed in the staff had never once been abused, but then the noble Earl was not aware that in that period any confidential communication "could have got into the hands of a person employed in the office by the hour as a copying clerk." Could the noble Duke give an assurance that steps would be taken to render it impossible for anyone in the position of the person charged with the "abstraction of the Memorandum" to gain access to such documents. The Duke of Richmond, as the matter was under police investigation, deemed it inadvisable to enter into the question at present. Lord Selborne hoped it was incorrect that, as reported, there was no rule at the Foreign Office against the employment of persons connected with the Press. But the noble Duke could not enlighten his Lordship on the point. Both the Duke of Richmond and Lord Cranbrook (after exchanging a whisper) preserved silence at the close of Lord Hammond's laboured lament that things are not as they were at the Foreign Office in his time, and his Lordship's sermonising exhortation to the Government to be more careful in future in the selection of copying clerks for responsible departments Thereafter, the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Bill, and the Conway Bridge Bill (to compound a debt of £40,000 by immediate payment of £10,000), were read a second time; and a few other measures were advanced a stage. The Public Works Loans (Ireland) Act (1874) Amendment Bill was on Tuesday read the third time.

The Royal assent, by Commission, was given on Thursday to several public and private bills, including the Public Health (Water) Act (1878) and the Public Works Loans (Ireland) Bills. The Lord Chancellor, replying to Earl Granville, explained that the observations he made on Tuesday with reference to the condition of girls to compete for studentships and prizes under the Intermediate Education (Ireland) Bill were directed, not so much to the legal construction of the measure, as to what were the intentions of the Government. The Dental Practitioners Bill passed through Committee. The Prisons Authorities Act (1874) Amendment Bill and the Bill of Sales Bill were read the third time and passed. Earl Delawarr having moved for a return of hospitals or other places registered for experiments upon living animals, Earl Beauchamp stated that the Government had already furnished to the House of Commons all the information they had in their possession, under the Vivisection Act. There would be some difficulty, he said, in publishing the reports of inspectors, as they were confidential documents. Lord Truro expressed a doubt as to whether the horrors of vivisection were kept within the narrowest possible limits. The motion was ultimately withdrawn.

COMMONS.

When the House sat last in the melting heat of the past week, hon. members showed commendable fidelity to dry duty by devoting the afternoon of yesterday week to arid discussions on the Highways Bill, clause 8 of which was reached and amended in Committee. But the powerful counter-attraction, may be, of an illuminated fête at the Botanic Gardens cut short the evening sitting and enabled hon. members to disperse at nine.

The very fair show of white hats on Monday at question-time became small by degrees and miserably less when Mr. Rodwell resumed the debate on the Cattle Plague Bill. Something had been expected to come of the questions regarding the system which permitted a mere copying clerk, paid at the rate of tenpence an hour, to become familiar with the contents of an important State Paper. But the prosaic answers of Mr. Bourke threw a damper on this curiosity, and it was not long ere the benches were thinned, as aforesaid, by a continuance of the cattle theme. Bucolic members enlarged on this subject with a relish smacking of the enjoyment exhibited by agricultural visitors to the Christmas Cattle Show. Even Sir William Harcourt joined in the bovine strain. The issue was that Mr. Forster's amendment was rejected and the Government bill for slaughtering foreign cattle at the port of landing in order to stamp out disease was read the second time by 319 to 162 votes, Ministerialists cheering at their majority of 157. A few other measures were advanced a stage ere the House adjourned.

Scotland and Ireland shared the sitting of Tuesday. Glasgow, through Mr. Anderson, asked that that lively measure, the Scotch Roads and Bridges Bill, should be referred to a Select Committee in order that an alleged grievance against clause 88 might be considered. But the Lord Advocate and Mr. Cross begged that the measure might be allowed to proceed; and Mr. Anderson's amendment was negatived by 123 to 81 votes. In Committee various amendments were fruitlessly proposed. Mr. Downing next took up the running with his motion, declaring it to be unjust and impolitic to continue the deportation of Irish paupers from England and Scotland to Ireland. Mr. Sclater-Booth averred that the Government were anxious to do all in their power to mitigate the evils complained of; and, in the end, Mr. Downing contented himself with accepting Mr. Verner's amendment (which was agreed to), viz.:—"That the law requires consideration with a view to amendment."

Habitual drunkenness is so fruitful a source of crime and misery in this country that there was a general feeling of satisfaction on Wednesday that Dr. Cameron's bill for providing voluntary institutions or hospitals for the cure of inebriates should be read a second time without cavil. The sitting closed with a brief debate on Mr. French's measure for doing away with the jobbers who bought land in Ireland to squeeze the uttermost farthing out of their tenants. This Landed Estates Court Leases Bill, however, proposed to give undue power to the tenant, said the Attorney-General for Ireland; and Mr. French was defeated by 179 to 78 votes.

The Government were subjected to a large number of inquiries on Thursday, but few of them were worth recording. The Chancellor of the Exchequer informed Mr. Childers, his querist, that there would be no object in making a financial statement with respect to the effect of the additional expenditure upon the finances of the year until he was in a position to state the amount of the supplementary Estimates. This could hardly be ascertained satisfactorily until the conclusion of the negotiations now proceeding at Berlin. But, as they had advanced so far, he was led to hope that they might be brought to a close within ten days or a fortnight. The accounts would then be made up, and he hoped soon after that he would be able to make a statement. In reply to a second question from Mr. Childers, Mr. Bourke said that he had already stated that it was not consistent with the rules of the Foreign Office that temporary consistent with the rules of the Foreign Office that temporary consistent with the rules of the Foreign Office that temporary

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Meyerbeer's grand opera "Le Prophète"—the revival of which after an interval of nine years was recorded by us last week—was repeated on the Thursday. The performances of Madame Scalchi as Fides and Signor Gayarré as John of Leyden were again characterised by high vocal and dramatic merit; the lady having improved her representation by some abatement of the occasional excessive demonstrativeness previously observable.

Yesterday (Friday) week Mdlle. Cepeda repeated, with enhanced effect, her performance as Valentina in "Les Huguenots." The next event of importance will be the production of Flotow's new opera "Alma" on Tuesday next. The intermediate announcements consisted of repetitions of operas cast as before.

The last Floral Hall concert but one of the season took place on Wednesday afternoon, the programme having again comprised performances by most of the principal artists of the Royal Italian Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The third appearance of Madame Pappenheim occurred on Saturday, when that lady sustained the character of Leonora in "Fidelio" for the first time in this country. We have already spoken of the high merits, vocal and dramatic, of the artist, as manifested in her two previous performances, as Valentina in "Les Huguenots;" and these were again displayed on the occasion now referred to, although the singer seemed to be somewhat under the influence of illness. She, nevertheless, made a very favourable impression in the arduous scena including the "Invocation to Hope;" in the duet with Rocco, the gaoler, while assisting him to dig the grave for her husband, the doomed Florestano; in the magnificent quartet, with that character, Rocco, and Don Pizzaro, in which the latter is foiled by Leonora in his attempt to stab Florestano; and in the ecstatic duet between the liberated husband and the heroic wife. The cast of the opera otherwise was nearly identical with that of its performances under Mr. Mapleson's management at Drury-Lane Theatre. Mdlle. Bauermeister was again Marcellina; Signor Bettini, Florestano; Herr Behrens, Rocco; and Signor Galassi, Don Pizarro; Signor Franceschi having filled the part of Il Ministro.

The overture in E major was played before the opera, and that in C (No. 3 of the four written for the work) was given after the first, and was enthusiastically encored.

On Tuesday "Faust" was given, with the first appearance this season of Mdlle. Hélène Crosmond as Margherita. The lady performed the character in the English version of the opera, during Mr. Mapleson's winter season at Her Majesty's Theatre, this year. Again Mdlle. Crosmond was well received; the cast otherwise having included Madame Trebelli as Siebel, Madame Lablache as Martha, Signor Campanini as Faust, Signor del Puente as Mephistopheles, and Signor Galassi as Valentino.

This (Saturday) evening Balfe's posthumous opera, "Il Talismano," is to be produced, for the first time at Her Majesty's Theatre.

The twenty-seventh season of the New Philharmonic concerts came to a close on Saturday afternoon with the fifth performance of the series. Two pieces were introduced for the first time, the more important one having been a new overture composed by the lady formerly known as Miss Alice Mary Smith—now Mrs. Meadows White. The work is the prelude to music composed to the lyric verses of Longfellow's "Pandora." The overture contains passages in anticipation of the music which follows, and is a highly effective and suggestive piece of orchestral writing, with good contrasts and climaxes in the instrumentation. It pleased greatly, and was much applauded. The other novelty was a sacred song, "Espoir en Dieu," composed (to lines by Victor Hugo) by Baron Bódog d'Orczy, late Intendant of the Imperial Opera, Pesth. It is written for a soprano voice, with obbligati accompaniments for harp, horn, and harmonium, which were well played, respectively, by Messrs. Cheshire, Mann, and Trew. The rather gloomy vocal portion was expressively rendered by Mdlle. Paprini, who contributed other solos; Miss Elene Webster having given, with much effect, Donizetti's aria "O mio Fernando." The orchestral pieces were the overtures to "Fidelio" and "Tannhauser," and Beethoven's symphony in C minor; and the instrumental selection was completed by Schumann's pianoforte concerto in A minor and Vieuxtemps's for violin, in the same key—both finely played, the former by Mr. Alfred Jaell, the latter by Herr Wieniawski. Mr. Ganz and Dr. Wylde divided the duties of conductor.

On Wednesday evening the Philharmonic Society brought its sixty-sixth season to a termination with the eighth concert of the year. The programme included Mozart's overture to "Die Zauberflöte," Mendelssohn's concert overture entitled "The Isles of Fingal," that by Weber written in commemoration of the fiftieth year of the reign of the King (Augustus IV.) of Saxony, and Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," all which were very effectively rendered by the fine band of the society. Mr. Charles Hallé gave an artistic performance of Beethoven's fourth pianoforte concerto (in G); as did Mdlle. Castellan of the andante and finale from De Beriot's seventh concerto for violin. Mdlle. Schou (principal soprano of the Copenhagen Opera) made her first appearance here, with great and deserved success. Her brilliant execution and exceptional high range of voice were displayed with special effect in the bravura air ("Gli angui d'inferno"), from "Die Zauberflöte." Prolonged applause and two recalls of the singer followed her performance. Other vocal solos were contributed by Mr. Barton McGuckin with much effect. Mr. Cusins conducted with his well-known skill, this having been the hundredth concert at which he has presided during the twelve years that he has held the office.

The third special concert of the season at the Alexandra Palace took place last Saturday afternoon, and was entitled a "Beethoven Festival," the first part of the programme having been selected from the works of that composer. The concert opened with the overture to "Leonora" and closed with the symphony in C minor, having also included the Turkish march from the music to "The Ruins of Athens," the march and chorus "Twine ye garlands;" the song "Know'st thou the land?" by Mr. Thurley Beale; the lied Englished as "Creation's Hymn," finely rendered by Madame Patey; the cantata "Calm sea," for chorus and orchestra; "Adelaida," sung by Mr. Sims Reeves; and the scena "Ah! perfido," declaimed by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous. Mr. F. Archer conducted with care and ability. A Mendelssohn concert is to be given on July 27.

The second grand opera concert at the Royal Albert Hall took place last Saturday afternoon, and the programme again consisted of more or less familiar pieces, executed by most of the principal artists of her Majesty's Theatre.

Mr. John Thomas, the eminent harpist, gave a harp concert at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoon, when performances on the instrument named, solo and concerted, formed prominent features in the programme.

Mr. Alfred Jaell was again the pianist at this week's matinée of the Musical Union on Tuesday, Signor Papini having been the leading violinist and M. Lasserre the violoncellist. The programme comprised Rubinstein's grand trio, in B flat, op. 52; Beethoven's quartet, No. 1, in F, op. 18; Mendelssohn's sonata in B flat, for piano and violoncello; and the canzonetta from his quartet in E flat (op. 12); and pianoforte solos.

Having already drawn special attention to Madame Trebelli's concert of last week, and the benevolent purpose for which it was given, it will not be necessary to dwell at length on the performances, which, excellent as they were, were more or less familiar. The concert took place, as already said, at St. James's Hall, on the afternoon of Thursday week, and included the fine performances of Madame Trebelli and other eminent vocalists, besides brilliant instrumental solos contributed by M. Jacquinot (violin), Madame Arabella Goddard and Miss Mehlig (pianoforte); in addition to which Mr. Henry Irving gave a reading from "Richard III." It is to be hoped that these generous services may have materially contributed to the object in view—the supplying additional funds for the establishment of suburban outposts in connection with that excellent institution, the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest, Golden-square.

We have more than once had occasion to speak in high terms of commendation of the brilliant playing of Mr. George Magrath, a young pianist from America, who has studied at the Stuttgardt Conservatoire. His skill and accomplishments were specially manifested at his matinée, which took place at St. George's Hall yesterday (Friday) week, when the first part of the concert included his performances in Mendelssohn's trio in C minor and Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata" for pianoforte solo. In each of these Mr. Magrath displayed thorough command of the keyboard and of all the varied shades of tone. His touch is firm and vigorous, yet elastic—these different qualities having been specially evidenced in the grandeur and impulse of the first and last movements of the sonata, and the grace and delicacy of the intervening andante. Mr. Magrath's skill was also successfully shown in detached pieces by Chopin, Rubinstein, and Liszt. The violinist and the violoncellist in the trio were Signor Papini and M. Lasserre, each of whom also contributed some excellent solo playing; vocal pieces having been effectively rendered by Mdlle. Thekla Friedlander, Miss Palmer, and Signor Broccolini. M. Marlois and Mr. T. Drew were the accompanyists.

The concerts of the week have included those of the clever vocalists, Mdlles. Ida and Elena Corani, on Monday; of Signor Ferri on Tuesday; Signor Fantoni on Wednesday; Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant, the skilled violinist, on Thursday; and of Signor Branca on Friday—all afternoon performances.

A concert is to take place on Monday—organised by Madame Etelka Gerster—in aid of a fund for the wives and families of shipwrecked sailors of the Grosser Kurfürst. The performances are to be given at the German Embassy.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

After all the excitement of Ascot, there has been a decided lull in the racing world, and the meetings that have taken place during the last few days may be dismissed very shortly. Hampton was as popular as ever with holiday-makers, and Julius Cæsar secured the two chief events; and, by beating Queen of Cyprus very easily in "the Cup," showed himself well able to stay two miles. The disappointing Turtle Dove at last rewarded her persistent backers by carrying off the Claremont Stakes, and Thornfield proved too good for Cairngorm in another juvenile event. Odiham Races require no comment; but we cannot pass over the Bibury Club day without noting the success of Scapegrace, a well-named son of Wild Oats, all of whose produce seem able to race. The Carlisle Meeting attracted a very large assemblage, and the sport was fairly good. Mrs. Pond (6 st. 8 lb.) was made a very hot favourite for the Cumberland Plate, and, though she overpowered her jockey and ran wide at all the turns, and also stumbled in the last few strides, she managed to win by a head from Constantine (7 st.), with Jagellon (6 st. 81b.) a fair third.

The annual sale of her Majesty's yearlings took place at Hampton Court on Saturday last, when the very satisfactory average of 302 gs. for seventeen was obtained. It must be admitted that this result was entirely due to the late lamented St. Albans, as his two colts made no less than 3150 gs., against 1995 gs. obtained for the remaining fifteen lots. The crack of the sale was naturally an own brother to Springfield, by St. Albans—Viridis; and, after a good fight between Lord Rosebery and Messrs. T. E. Walker, Gretton, and Jardine, he was knocked down to the last-mentioned gentleman for 2200 gs. Mr. Gretton, always a spirited buyer at yearling sales, gave 950 gs. for a St. Albans—Pamunkey colt.

The second meeting of the Coaching Club took place in Hyde Park on Monday, when twenty-four vehicles were brought together. The Prince of Wales and the Duke and Duchess of Teck were amongst those who were present at the gathering.

Cricket has undoubtedly been the leading "national sport" of the present week, and we must give the pride of place to the match between Oxford and Cambridge, as attracting the most general public attention. The Cambridge team have done so wonderfully well this season that their admirers would not hear of the possibility of their defeat; and though, at the end of the first innings, there appeared a chance of a fairly close finish, yet the Dark Blue Eleven collapsed in the most extraordinary manner at their second attempt, and were beaten by no less than 238 runs. A. G. Steel more than fulfilled the high expectations that had been formed of him, taking no less than thirteen wickets, at an expense of only 73 runs, and batting in fine style. At the same time, it must be admitted that the dead state of the ground was all in his favour, while it told against A. H. Evans, the Oxford fast bowler, who, however, only secured one wicket less than did his opponent, though, naturally, at a far greater cost. We append the full score:—

Umpires: West and Wheeler.

Turning next to the Australians, we note that a match against eighteen of Hunslet and District has been drawn, greatly in their favour. For Hunslet, Hall (79) batted splendidly, and on the other side C. Bannerman (52) and Messrs. D. W. Gregory (31), T. W. Garrett (27 and 45), W. L. Murdock (49), and F. E. Allan (not out, 38), did most of the scoring. Yorkshire has, however, turned the tables on the almost invincible colonials, and won the return match by nine wickets, the scoring on both sides being small. A very large assemblage witnessed the match between North and South at Nottingham last week, which was played for the benefit of the famous Notts veteran George Parr. South won by ten wickets; Midwinter (45), who is batting in fine form this season, making the top score for his side, but doing nothing with the ball beyond disposing of Mr. Hornby on each occasion. The following score, which is one of the largest ever compiled by an eleven, deserves insertion:—

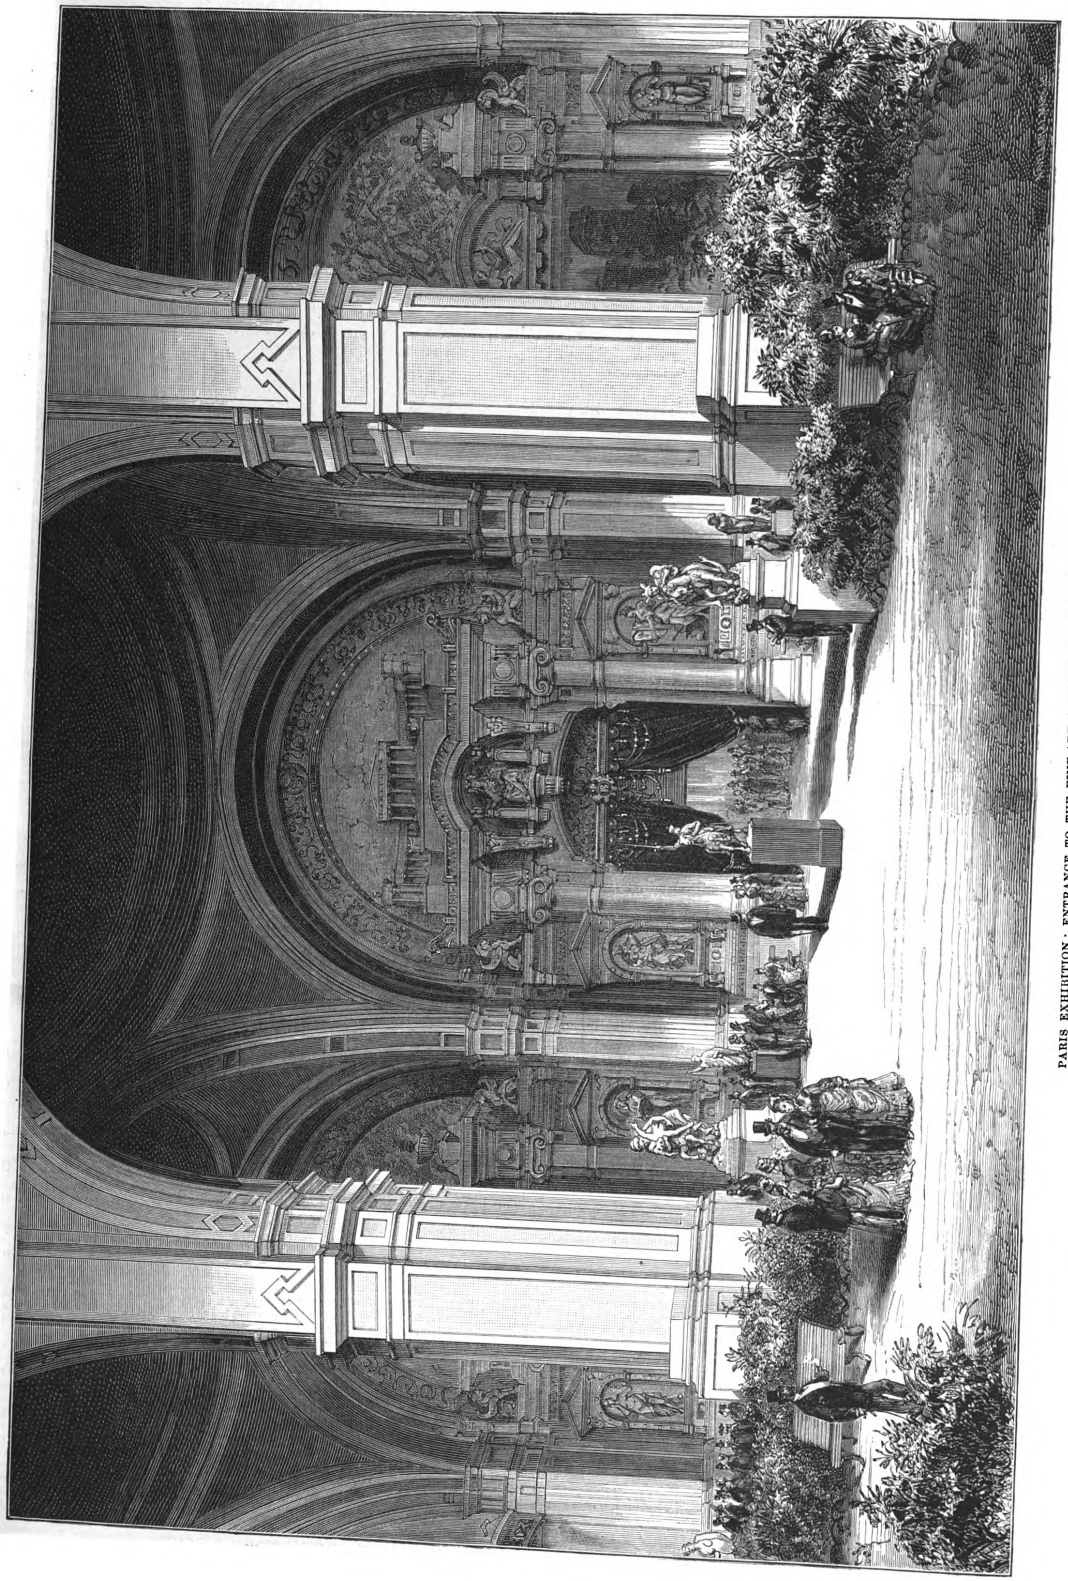
It was made in a match against Glasgow, and it will be noted that only one man failed to get into double figures, and only one was bowled. Mr. J. M. Cotterill is the famous Sussex player, the loss of whose services has been sadly felt by his county. Indeed, the victory which Sussex has obtained over Kent this week is the first that the once formidable team has been able to gain during the present season. We are very pleased to note that the subject of paid amateurs is at last being warmly taken up by most of the sporting papers. This is an abuse which is not to be met with in any other branch of sport, and we hope that this is the last season that the professionals will be required to contest against pseudo "gentlemen," who cannot claim superiority to them in any respect.



There was an immense attendance at the grounds of the Gun Club, Shepherd's-bush, on Friday week, to witness the pigeon shooting-match between Mr. Cholmondeley Pennell and Captain Bogardus, "the champion wing shot of America." The conditions were, to shoot at one hundred pigeons each, thirty yards' rise, for £300 a side. Never has there been a closer and more exciting match, as the two kept together until just at the finish, when the American, who had a little better luck than his opponent, got in front, and won by two birds, killing seventy against Mr. Pennell's sixty-eight.

Sunshine and International flavour to the rowing made the opening day of Henley Regatta exceptionally attractive. The Americans acquitted themselves well on Thursday, making amends for the defeat of the U.S. Triton, G. W. Lee, by Edwardes-Moss in the first heat of the Diamond Sculls. In the first heat for the Stewards' Challenge Cup the American Sho-wae-cae-Mettes four beat their countrymen of the Columbia College Boat Club by three lengths, the same distance separating the Dublin University four from the Columbia crew. The London four (F. L. Playford, stroke) proved victorious over the Kingston crew by three lengths, Jesus College, Cambridge, being third, in the second heat for the same prize. Jesus College, Cambridge, beat the London eight in the first heat for the Grand Challenge Cup; the second heat falling to the Thames Eight, who vanquished Kingston by two lengths. L. C. Cholmeley, Kingston, won the second heat for the Diamond Sculls by a length from T. W. Barker, First Trinity, Chillingworth, Ino R.C., being third. The first heat for the Visitors' Cup fell to Hertford College, Oxford, the Lady Margaret and First Trinity fours of Cambridge being respectively second and third. The Oxonians were victorious over the Thames pair in the first heat for the Silver Goblets; and the first heat for the Ladies' Challenge Plate fell to the Etonians, who worsted Cheltenham by four lengths.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

The northern vestibule of the Fine-Arts Gallery, situated in the Champ de Mars buildings at the meeting-point of the French and the Foreign Sections of the International Exhibition, is the subject of our present Illustration. Its façade is composed of three vast arches, upheld by great square pillars, and forming a triple portico, which has a grand aspect; while the architectural lines are agreeably softened by the mild yellowish-white tint of the structure in general. There is a spacious forecourt, beyond which is the entrance to the Fine-Arts Gallery, betokened over the doorway by the model of a Greek temple, with a hemicycle left a colonnade extended in rear of it, and to right and left; all of grey material, but suffused with a delicate rosy tinge. The side entrances, leading respectively to the French and to the foreign Sections, are decorated with coloured landscape designs, upon a surface of porcelain or earthenware tiles, below which are represented, by colossal female figures, the Arts of Sculpture, Architecture, Painting, Engraving, Pottery, and Metallurgy, each with her proper tools.

The Paris Exhibition may be reached by tramway, railway, and the Seine. At the stations of all five trunk lines of railway, tickets are granted for the Exhibition, the passengers being forwarded to their destination by the circular railway without any additional expense. There are five lines of tramways which lead to the Exhibition:—first, the tramway starting from the Rue du Helder, via the Boulevard Haussmann to the Trocadéro; second, the tramway leading from Mont Parnasse railway station to the Barrière de l'Etoile; third, the tramway running from the Bastille to the Mont d'Alma; fourth, the tramway from the Louvre to St. Cloud; and, fifth, the tramway from La Villette to the Trocadéro. The omnibus routes are as follows:—The Porte St. Martin to Grenelle, the Bastille to Grenelle, and the Eastern Railway Omnibus to the Trocadéro. On the Seine, the Bateaux Mouche and Hirondell which belong to one company.

THE QUEEN PLACING FLOWERS ON THE COFFIN OF THE LATE KING OF HANOVER AT ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR CASTLE.

FUNERAL OF THE KING OF HANOVER.

The funeral of the late King George of Hanover and Duke of Cumberland, first cousin to her Majesty Queen Victoria, and a Knight of the Garter, took place on Monday week in St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle; the coffin having been conveyed thither from Paris, where he died. The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and the Marchioness of Ely, attended the religious service in the choir of the chapel, occupying the Royal pew at the north-east corner, while the Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Teck, Princess Louise, Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, and Princesses Frederica and Marie of Hanover, daughters of the late King of Hanover, were in the stalls of the choir. The chief mourner was the Duke of Cumberland, K.G., son of the deceased King, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and by Prince Leopold, with the Duke of Teck, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Prince of Leiningen, Prince Albert of Solms-Braunfels, Count Gleichen, and the Marquis of Lorne. The French Prince Imperial was also present, and several of the foreign Ambassadors and English nobility, with the Marquis of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain, the Vice-Chamberlain, Lord Barrington, and the officials of the Royal household, the late King of Hanover's staff, Garter King-at-Arms and other members of the Heralds' College. The Dean of Windsor read the funeral service. The coffin had lain, since the evening before, in a recess of the chapel near the cenotaph of the late Princess Charlotte; and there it was privately visited by the Queen and Princess Beatrice, who with their own hands placed wreaths of flowers on the pall. It was brought out, for the funeral ceremony, on the Monday morning, to the western end of the nave, and was thence carried in solemn procession up the choir to the entrance of the Royal vault, immediately in front of the altar; here it was lowered into the vault at the conclusion of the burial service. The Queen and Princesses finally took a last look at the coffin in the vault, where it lies beside those of King George III. and Queen Charlotte, George IV., William IV., and Queen Adelaide.

PENNHOME, SHERWOOD, NOTTINGHAM.

The buildings named "Pennhome," lately erected at Sherwood, adjoining the town of Nottingham, comprise six separate dwellings. They are intended as residences for ladies of reduced circumstances who are nevertheless not wholly indigent. They have been erected at the sole cost of Maria Christian, the wife of Mr. Sidney Cartwright, J.P., of The Leasowes, Staffordshire. This lady is a native of Nottingham; and the first stone was laid by her on June 28, 1877. The property has been handed over to Nottingham trustees, who are nominated by Mrs. Cartwright, and who are to be subject to the Charity Commissioners. The six homes will be supplied with light and firing, and the rates will be paid, the requisite endowment for these purposes having been made by the donor. The buildings have been erected from plans by Mr. James W. Woodsend, architect, of Nottingham. Their external appearance is at once simple and characteristic. The projecting wings and porches, together with the overhanging eaves, give an agreeable effect of light and shade, relieved by bands of moulded bricks and string-courses of blue brick. The door and window heads are of Coxbeach stone, as well as the two tablets in the centre of the front; the one bearing the name of the founder and the other the name of the buildings and date of erection. The ground floor of each house is composed of porch with oak seat, sitting-room, 10 ft. 6 in. by 11 ft.; kitchen, 9 ft. by 8 ft. 6 in.; larder, scullery, and coal-place. These apartments are fitted up in a convenient manner, with cupboards and shelves. The larders are ventilated by a special air-flue. Each house has two bed-rooms, approached by a well-lighted staircase; the fireplaces in the bedrooms are in the angles, to avoid loss of space. Gas and water are laid on to each house; the usual conveniences are at the back, as well as a permanent clothes-line of galvanised wire. The work has been executed in a thoroughly sound and substantial manner by the builder, Mr. W. Woodsend, of Nottingham.

PENNHOME, SHERWOOD, NOTTINGHAM, FOR LADIES OF REDUCED FORTUNE.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

"My dear Sir,—Garrick's death is a striking event; not that we should be surprised at the death of a man who lived sixty-two years, but because there was a vivacity in our late celebrated friend which drove away the thoughts of Death from any association with him." Thus James Boswell, Esq., to Dr. Samuel Johnson, close upon a century ago (Feb. 2, 1779). Substitute seventy-five for sixty-two years, and Boswell's appreciative remarks on the death of David Garrick will apply with peculiar felicity to the late accomplished comedian Charles James Mathews. He was essentially a "vivacious" man. Not in the highest sense of the term a wit (although he said a number of smart and ready things which will live); scarcely a humourist in the broader acceptation of the quality; assuredly not a buffoon, although he shone to far greater advantage in farce than in comedy; but the most elegant, the most polished, the most sparkling, the most alert, the most agreeable of persifleurs. On the stage he was an embodied epigram; and an epigram is, I take it, an ingenious compound of a little wit, a little humour, and a great deal of ingenious smartness.

Every notable artist has two sides to his artistic character. Garrick wooed with equal success the Tragic and Comic Muse; but Johnson, who, while sincerely loving, was always growlingly disparaging "Little Davy," seemed resolutely bent on exalting the comedian in Garrick above the tragedian. Charles Mathews always appeared to me to possess the comic and mimetic portion of the genius of him whose death "eclipsed the gaiety of nations." More than one observation made by the Doctor respecting Garrick will be found to suit Mathews very well. "Garrick was so diffused: there was no man to whom he wished to unbosom himself. . . . He had innumerable friends but no particular friend. . . . There were more materials to make friendship in him, had he not been so diffused. . . . He was a very good man, the cheerfullest man of his age." It was Boswell who said that Garrick was pure gold, but beat out to very thin leaf. There again is Charles Mathews to a T.

A very admirable biographical notice of this versatile artist has appeared in the Daily News; and his personal merits have been most affectionately and tenderly touched upon in the World, the conductor of which journal, Mr. Edmund Yates, has an hereditary claim to speak en connaissance de cause on all pertainiug to the Mathews family. Under these circumstances it were impertinent in me to say anything further of him as an actor. I knew him pretty well all my life through. As a lad I have copied out scores of plays and "parts" for him; and I have watched the incomparable Eliza Bartolozzi (Madame Vestris) dress him for the part of the French lady in "Patter v. Clatter." The faultlesss symmetry of his gloves, his bracelets, his sandalled shoes in that costume could only have been surpassed by the Chevalier d'Eon.

The Season Number of Vanity Fair, next to a Chantilly basket which I lately saw at a wedding breakfast (I waited till a gentleman worth twenty thousand a year had hewn off one of the barley-sugar handles of the panier before I ventured to attack it) is the most elaborately dainty structure in literary confectionary that I have enjoyed for a long time. There is something frosted in it to please all palates, from blancmange to almonds, from maraschino jelly to tipsy cake. Mr. Carlo Pellegrini ("Ape") contributes a wonderful coloured portrait (a little too lifelike, perhaps) of the Earl of Beaconsfield; and Mr. James McNeill Whistler enhances the graphic attractiveness of the number by a weird etching purporting to represent "St. James's-street in the Season." I was not hitherto aware that the majority of the houses in the fashionable thoroughfare just named are a hundred feet high; that the west side of the street is destitute of any foot pavement; that the average allowance of legs to a hansom-cab horse is one and a half, and that hansom cabmen have, as a rule, two heads or none at all; but the etching is, nevertheless, full of superb qualities. It is not very like St. James's-street. It might serve for Pennsylvania-avenue, Washington, or for the Calle de Alcalá at Madrid—for the Corso Vittorio Emmanuele at Milan, or the Balschoi Morskaia at St. Petersburg. Still, it is wonderfully full of light and air, and especially of movement. Mr. J. M. Whistler gives us "all he can" as an etcher, and we must be content to "dream the rest."

The colossal statue in bronze of Captain Cook, by Mr Thomas Woolner, R.A., has found a temporary pedestal in the open space between the United Service and Athenæum Clubs in Waterloo-place. It is a very noble effigy of the world-renowned circumnavigator, clad in his habit as he lived, the uniform of a Commander in the Royal Navy. The ultimate home of this grand work of art will be Sydney, New South Wales, by the public spirit of whose citizens the monument was commissioned some years ago. But should there not be a permanent memorial to James Cook in the metropolis of Britain, and close to the club-houses of that United Service of which he was so renowned a member? Does not the circumnavigator likewise deserve a statue in his native town, Whitby, in Yorkshire?

It would not be, I apprehend, a matter of great difficulty or of overwhelming expense to obtain a replica or repliche in bronze of Mr. Woolner's statue of the Discoverer—the English Columbus. The sculptor need not be at the pains to prepare another model, since the original moulds could be used after repairing the slight injuries which they may have suffered in the operation of the first casting. At any rate, the subject is worth mooting. The Senior and the Junior United Service Clubs, the Army and Navy, the Junior Army and Navy, and the Naval and Military Clubs must have between them some six thousand members. Throw in the Athenæum, the Travellers, the Reform, the Carlton, and the Junior Carlton, and a very moderate "whip round" would suffice to secure a duplicate of the Woolner Captain Cook for Waterloo-place. And would not the great missionary societies, and the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts be willing to contribute?

An exceptionally graceful, delicate, and tasteful display was opened by the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress at Drapers' Hall, Throgmorton-street, on Tuesday last, in the shape of a competitive exhibition of ancient and modern, native and foreign, fans, promoted by the Worshipful Company of Fanmakers, a guild incorporated in the reign of Queen Anne.

> Haste, then, ye Spirits! To your charge repair;
> The fluttering fan to Zephyretta's care.

So sings Pope, in the "Rape of the Lock." Hasten to Draper's Hall, and you shall see not only Zephyretta's fan, but Madame de Pompadour's and Marie Antoinette's, H.R.H. the Princess of Wales's, and Princess Alice of Hesse's; regal and noble fans worth eight hundred pounds apiece; demure and useful fans that can be purchased for a couple of guineas; fans painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds and by Boucher; fans exquisitely decorated with microscopic birds and flowers by the Hon. Hugh Rowley, an artist happily extant among us; fans with gold and jewelled handles of ivory, ebony, tortoiseshell, and mother-of-pearl, and with "mounts" of silk, satin, chicken-skin, swan-skin, and marabout feathers, decorated with water-colour paintings of rare merit, or with richest point, Maltese, and Brussels lace. But the object of the Fanmakers' Company in organising this exhibition is not merely an artistic one. They wish to forward the cause of technical education; to give stability, as a British industry, to a craft which hitherto has mainly been carried on by foreigners, and to encourage clever young artists to devote themselves to the embellishment of fan-mounts. Which would you sooner do, Mesdemoiselles—go out "governessing," at from twenty or forty pounds a year, or sit at home, in your own pretty parlours, and earn from three to five pounds a week (much more if you have special gifts) by painting fan-mounts?

Sir Wilfrid Lawson's Permissive Bill has made its annual reappearance in the House of Commons, and has, of course, been lost by a very heavy majority. That was naturally to be expected; and we may expect to see the Permissive Bill trundled out of the House for some years to come. For how many Sessions did Mr. Berkeley fruitlessly bring on his Ballot motion? Some of these days the Permissive Bill, having got into the Commons, will not be "quoited down stairs like an Edward shovelboard," but will stay there, to go up to the Lords, to become eventually the law of the land. Tout vient à celui qui sait attendre. Meanwhile, Sir Wilfrid Lawson waits, like Patience on a monument, and smiles with good-humoured defiance at the Gin and Beer interest. Laughing good-humour seems to be inherent in the family of the humorous Baronet and member for Carlisle. I read in the Monthly Magazine for August, 1806, a notice of the death at Cheltenham of a Sir Wilfrid Lawson, of Brayton House, Baronet, "in whom the county of Cumberland has sustained the loss of a most worthy and independent county gentleman." "To the above qualifications," pursues the old Monthly, "may be justly added his strict integrity, admirable equanimity, disinterested friendship, unbounded hospitality, and that uninterrupted gaieté de cœur which not even pain nor sickness had power to subdue." "Gaieté de cœur" may carry the Permissive Bill at last. G. A. S.

THE MAGAZINES.

A contribution of George Eliot, especially one of the weight and compass of her "College Breakfast Party," suffices of itself to single out Macmillan for special attention among all the month's magazines. The first question raised by this remarkable performance is with what qualification it is to be allowed to rank among "poems." Poem in the sense of the "Legend of Jubal" it certainly is not; but it seems, on the other hand, equally evident that the authoress has aimed at no higher standard of expression than she must be admitted to have attained, and that the metrical form has merely been adopted for the purpose of bestowing additional precision and emphasis on thoughts grave and weighty, indeed, but not more essentially poetical than we are accustomed to encounter in her prose works. Tried by this standard, the piece may be allowed to count as a literary success, which it certainly could not if any high ideal of style or constructive art were supposed to have entered into the authoress's conception. The plan is that of one of the "symposia" with which we have lately been made familiar, save that the sentiments expressed, being placed in the mouths of a party of Undergraduates, are more interesting in themselves than on account of the interlocutors. Hamlet, a wealthy young man, with the expansiveness, sensibility, and irresolution of his prototype, meets his acquaintances at his intimate Horatio's breakfast-table, and listens to their contradictory views on the problems of life. Laertes is inspired with a somewhat pugnacious and aggressive "enthusiasm of humanity," a Quixotic delusion in the eyes of the sturdy pessimist Rosenkranz, and sheer folly in those of the aesthetic sensualist Osric, for whom George Eliot displays a contempt at variance with her usual serene impartiality. Her own views seem shadowed forth in the circumspect but still assured faith of Guildenstern in a Right and an Ideal independent of all external conditions—a faith which on one occasion finds expression in a passage of lofty eloquence. A Catholic clergyman with his single "open sesame" serves as a foil to the discursive speculation of the young men. At length Hamlet has a vision whose purport is not imparted, but which is implied to have been affirmative and encouraging; and, generally speaking, we seem left with the acceptable conclusion that George Eliot's prodigious powers are not likely to be enlisted on the side of pessimism or negation of any sort. In point of composition the piece is hardly satisfactory: the style is at once negligent and laboured, and the versification devoid of the natural sweetness and ingenious artifice which equally characterised "The Legend of Jubal." The thoughts, however, have all the massiveness and profundity of George Eliot at her best, relieved by some very felicitous strokes of epigram. The only other contribution of much importance also relates to poetry—Professor Shairp's reply to Mr. Arnold's demand upon the age that it should leave off production and take to criticism. Professor Shairp shows incontestably by an appeal to history that creation and criticism have in general been contemporaneous and compatible in English literature; that it has gone on bearing poems and criticisms together, as the orange-tree its fruits and blossoms. He also dexterously enlists Mr. Arnold against himself, by a quotation from his Essay on Goethe. Mr. J. C. Morison takes up M. Taine's indictment against the French Revolution, and endeavours to show that its excesses cannot be accounted for by the opposition it encountered, but that it was animated from the first by a spirit of pillage and ruthless vindictiveness. It seems to us that any similar movement in any country must have quickly degenerated into license when the force at the command of the authorities was so absurdly small. There are good suggestions in a paper on "Cheap Literature for Village Children;" and Professor Blackie becomes quite dithyrambic on the beauties of Italy in May.

Readers of the Cornhill will turn before all things to Mr. James's contribution, to see what he has made of his charming heroine, "Daisy Miller," and will find with regret that he has been able to find no better use for her than to put her to death. The disappointment thus created is the best proof of the spirit and elegance of the portrait. Notwithstanding the unsatisfactory conclusion, the second instalment is as full of bright and taking things as the first. Besides the very attractive continuations of "For Percival" and "Within the Precincts," the number contains three essays of considerable mark. "R. L. S.'s" paper on "English Admirals" contains some just observations on the men, and some rather sophistical ones on the presumed motives of their actions, all expressed with much charm of style. "Stray Thoughts on Scenery" has many just reflections, though few will sympathise with the writer's depreciation of the English parks. The leading idea of a clever essay on "The Tyranny of Fashion" is that feminine costume should be rescued from the sway of caprice, and put upon the same basis of recognised fitness and propriety as the masculine. It is proposed to effect this object by a reaction in the direction of the ancient Greek costume, and objections are parried by the undoubtedly just remark that a similar dress was worn by all British ladies during the four centuries of Roman occupation, and cannot therefore be unsuited to our climate. "Chinese Posting and Post-Offices" gives an entertaining account, not merely of the postal system, but of the general methods of travelling throughout the empire.

Fraser has one article of extraordinary merit, the second part of Vernon Lee's historical sketch of the "Accademia degli Arcadi." It is true that the Academy itself sometimes almost recedes from the view; but the reader is hardly likely to inquire too curiously for it, delighted as he is sure to be with the brilliant picture of the literary and social tendencies of Italy in the eighteenth century, of which the nominal subject of the paper is but the frame. Next in interest are the letters of Coleridge, Lamb, and Southey, addressed to Miss Betham, aunt of the authoress of "Dr. Jacob." Southey's letters exhibit his somewhat angular character in its most favourable light. Coleridge's are inexpressibly comical in the ingenuity and, at the same time, the palpable transparency of their excuses for the breach of his engagements. Lamb's are equally characteristic. "Among the Burmese" is the first of what promises to be a most valuable series of papers on the social life of this gentle and interesting people. The pictures of the general well-being are very pleasing, and none the less as this seems largely dependent on stability of British rule. The contents of the number also include interesting accounts of the archæological schools established at Athens and Rome by the honourable munificence of the French Government, of the religions of Asiatic Turkey, and the constitution of Norway.

The most remarkable contributions to the Fortnightly Review are a sedulously impartial essay by Mr. John Morley, and a deliberately sophistical one by Mr. Matthew Arnold. The very candour with which Mr. Morley investigates the difficult question of the Lancashire strike disables him from reaching any more positive conclusion than that all parties concerned would do well to become wiser and better. Mr. Arnold has somehow persuaded himself that it would be quite fair to tax Protestants for the support of an exclusively Catholic University, although no Catholic is taxed for the support of an exclusively-Protestant one; or that, at any rate, the revenues of the disendowed Church of Ireland might properly be handed over to another sect. It is difficult to suppose him serious; his object most probably is to show the ultra-liberal members who for party reasons have abetted the Irish Catholic episcopacy in this modest demand that they cannot consistently urge the disestablishment of the English Church; and here at least his logic is impregnable. Mr. Goldwin Smith pleads the cause of indignation meetings, but omits to remark that the term only applies to spontaneous manifestations of public feeling, and not to gatherings organised by party managers. Mr. Grant Duff concludes his interesting study of Emilio Castelar; and Mr. Saintsbury contributes a critique on Octave Feuillet, in whom he scarcely seems sufficiently interested to produce a good article.

The Nineteenth Century is below the average, but contains one very thoughtful paper on "The Place of Conscience in Evolution," by the Rev. T. W. Fowle. The development of the feeling of right from the animal emotions of anger, fear, pleasure, and the instinct of self-preservation, appears to Mr. Fowle easy to trace. "The difficulty lies not in man's moral but in his mental growth." Mr. Howell's historical sketch of the International brings into evidence the difference of sentiment which has always prevailed between its English and its foreign members. The former aim merely at the promotion of class interests, the latter at a complete remodelling of society. From any point of view the importance of the association would seem to have been enormously exaggerated. Dr. Adler vindicates Jewish patriotism against Mr. Goldwin Smith; Sir D. Wedderburn enforces the right of our Indian feudatories to considerate and liberal treatment; and Mr. Thoms advances some reasons for thinking that the testament ascribed to Peter the Great may not be an absolute invention.

Blackwood presents us with two phenomena—a pretty little comedy entitled "Apples," and a story by a German writer so thoroughly English in style that its foreign origin would never have been suspected. "Gordon Baldwin," by Rudolph Lindau, is really a very promising story: the interest is admirably kept up, and the selfish character of Forbes is depicted with great power and truth to nature. "The Two Muses" is a remarkably fine piece of earnest satire, revealing true poetical power. There are two other eminently readable contributions—the sketch of "Our Kentish Village," and the humorous exposition of Dr. Mackay's views on the derivation of thieves' Latin from Gaelic.

The two American magazines are, as usual, full of variety In the Atlantic Monthly attention will be chiefly attracted t Mr. H. James's new story, "The European;" in Scribner to beautifully illustrated article on "The Structure of Oxford.' Temple Bar, with other good matter, offers a careful and pene trating criticism of the works of Messrs. Burne Jones an Albert Moore, by Mr. Frederick Wedmore. The Universit Magazine has a portrait and memoir of another eminen painter, Mr. Poynter; with a good account of Théophil Gautier, and the stirring chapters of Mrs. Collins's "In Fni World." Good Words, London Society, The Month, and Tinsley Magazine fairly maintain their usual level. The Contemporar Review, the Gentleman's Magazine, and Belgravia have reache us too late for notices this week.

MESSRS. JAY

RESPECTFULLY request the honour of a visit from Ladies and Gentlemen visiting the British metropolis to inspect a variety of

ELEGANT COSTUMES.

Parisian Mantles, Artistic Millinery, Hats, and every variety in dress, specially selected by a very experienced mantle-maker in Paris, and representing the correct fashions of the season.

The following extract from an American paper is a pleasing testimony to the system of business adopted at this house:—

"We visited during our sojourn in London last year the warehouse of Messrs. Jay, the most noted establishment of the kind in the world. In looking through its numerous departments we were able to appreciate the true cause of the distinguished success which has attended the establishment for many years.

"Messrs. Jay receive here supplies of costumes and millinery direct from the first houses in Paris, and they are sold at much more moderate prices than ladies can procure them on the Continent. We take pleasure in directing the attention of our fair readers to this time-honoured establishment, where we are sure they will be honestly and JAYS.

ART IN PARIS.

THE UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.—ITALY.

(From our Correspondent.)

When the great art-revival reached its culminating point in Italy, and Rome and Florence were the twin art-capitals of the world, the genius of the people found expression in painting rather than in sculpture; and, in spite of the mighty things achieved by the chisel of Michael Angelo, it is by her pictorial rather than by her plastic triumphs that the Italy of the sixteenth century challenges universal admiration. Since then three centuries have elapsed, and, from causes which we have no space here to explain, this order of things is reversed. Not that Italy is as supreme now over other nations in sculpture as she was then in painting; but simply that the two arts, so far as she is concerned, and without any reference to other nations or the position they hold, have changed places, and that the tools of the sculptor seem to come more sympathetically to her hand than those of the painter.

Our readers will be quite prepared to hear, then, that in leaving the British Section and entering the Italian, we were by no means impressed with the pictorial side of the exhibition. The general tone of colour struck our eyes as lighter, brighter, and more gaudy than that we had just left; and a certain air almost of flippancy seemed to characterise the whole. Not that earnestness is altogether absent from Italian canvases as that it is so exceptional. In the several landscape works of Chevalier Vertunni, for example, we have no occasion to complain on this score; and if there is a little heaviness in his impasto, sometimes, it is the heaviness of a master. Marchesi, again, is an artist with a serious aim. His "Interior of a Sacristy" is full of subdued and harmonious colour; and the same may be said of Fontana, whose "Æsope" and "Mater amabilis" are painted broadly and effectively. Chevalier Giuliano is another artist capable of conveying real pleasures. His little procession of young girls singing joyously as they walk by a sea wall at the "Setting of the Sun" is one of the most satisfactory pictures in the section. The facial action of singing is most charmingly conveyed. C. Detti's "Duel" is very spirited, but too suggestive of Fortuny to be altogether satisfactory. The Spaniard's influence, indeed, is felt largely throughout the section. In a less pronounced degree, perhaps, Marchetti and Jacovacci owe some of their sparkle and inspiration to him.

Apart from this Fortuny fashion, it may be said that, as regards tone and colour, the Italians fall into one of two styles—either into the black, positive, effective manner of De Nittis, who is admirably represented here by a long and telling series of London views, slightly Frenchified, including Westminster, Trafalgar-square, the Bank of England, and "Canon Bridge," as it is called in the catalogue; or into the bright, light key of such men as Michetti and Joris, each of whom has a couple of capital pictures in the gallery. V. Volpe gives a fine example of genre painting in his priest leaning back in his chair. Nor is the French Corot without his Italian imitators; and, indeed, the French school generally makes itself felt in Italy, as in every other land. Gandi, the water-colourist, is an exception to this, and reminds one more of the English William Hunt than of anyone else. J. S. Rotta is another water-colourist whose figures are strong and well individualised.

Whatever of the old debt owing by France and Europe to Italy has in these latter days been paid back to her in the way of painting, there are two arts in which no other nation can do much other than stimulate her, and these are sculpture and engraving. In the latter, with the exception of a short period about a century ago, when her attention was excited for a time by the marvellous beauty and purity of line produced by the graver of the Scottish Strange, Italy, from the days of Marc Antonio Raimondi to the present, has never been without a supremely competent school of engravers. Its honours are still maintained by such men as the Chevalier Di Bartolo, who is accomplished alike with the etching needle and the graver.

Italy's works in sculpture, whether in the field of the realistic or the ideal, is much more varied, higher in aim, and more positive in achievement. When the examples in sculpture almost equal those in painting—in the former the number of works is a hundred and eighty-two, in the latter a hundred and ninety-three—we can scarcely expect the level to be equally lofty throughout. There are, accordingly, many pieces of sculpture which are merely pretty, and such as one could easily imagine would be raved about by the wandering wife of a rich English parvenu affecting the airs of a virtuósa. They are what English artists would contemptuously term "pot boilers;" but we must not forget that the Italians have a double incentive to the manufacture of these cleverly sculptured wares—first, the pot-boiling urgency; and, secondly, the importunity of rich, ignorant foreigners, both English and American, sojourning in Rome and other Italian art-centres, who will have sculptured souvenirs in their own tawdry taste from the studios they have been pleased to visit and affect.

Apart, however, from the baneful influences we have named, the sculptured art of Italy stands on a high level. We were particularly struck with the modelling of an old woman sitting back bowed in her chair, with that limpness of look and earthward consent of the whole body which extreme old age gives to people. It was a very small work, and, from having no number on it, we regret we are unable to give the artist's name. The same unconscious abandonment and prostration come out forcibly and painfully in the two Chinamen who lie, opium-drugged, upon a rude bench, whose author also we are unable to name. There are many examples of this realistic treatment. H. Ximines, of Florence, quite startles one with his two ragged and rather repulsive-looking gamins fighting in the most ferocious manner. Another realistic bit of raggedness stands at a corner in the cross gallery, and represents an urchin smoking a cigar with ineffable nonchalance; while a third composition is that of two London newspaper boys holding out with intense eagerness to the supposed passer-by, the one a Standard and the other a Daily News. So terrific is their haste to do business, that one of the boys does not give himself time to take the copper he has obtained for the last paper from between his gleaming teeth. The artist in this case, so far as we can make out, is J. Focardi, of London. But, of all the realistic work in the Italian collection, that which will commend itself most to the English visitor—whether from its masterly modelling, its finished and perfect carving, or from the nature of the subject treated—is that which represents the great Jenner vaccinating his own son, by the accomplished Professor Monteverde, of Rome. The nude child lies across the doctor's knee, and, with depressed shoulders and concentrated attention, he stoops over it to prick with the lancet the little arm. The intense expression of the face, the nervous firmness of the hands, and the conspiring action of the whole body towards the one object, may fairly be regarded as the ne plus ultra of realistic sculpture. Along with two members of the Royal Academy of England—the one a sculptor and the other a painter—and a third gentleman who is eminent as a decoratist, we stood before this group. After combating the objection of the first named to the work—not on account of any lack of artistic power on the part of the Italian, but on the score that an English doctor would not lay the child naked across his knee, as in the statue, and that the whole action was anti-English—and convincing him, we hope, that the English or anti-English character of the action had nothing to do with the merit of the idea as expressed objectively by the chisel of the Italian Monteverde, we all came to the conclusion that it ought to be bought by the English College of Surgeons and placed in their hall.

Among ideal subjects with an historic reference we find the central place of honour occupied by J. J. Papini's "Cleopatra" reclining on a couch. The work is full of technical excellence, carried to the extent of bravura; and to our eye the face of "the Serpent of Old Nile" is too pronounced in the Paphianism of its expression. The "Cleopatra" of E. Braga, on the other hand, errs in this, that the figure, which is standing, has none of that litheness which we know belongs to female humanity of the Oriental type. It is more European than Egyptian, but is none the less beautifully modelled on that account. For ethnological correctness of form and face we were particularly struck with J. Ginotti's negress tugging indignantly at the manacles which bind her. The tendency to ostentatiousness and defiant emphasis to which we have already referred, and for whose paternity we must go back to the facile Bernini, comes strikingly out in Borghi's otherwise noble bronze statue of "Oliver Cromwell," whom we see in long boots, filling augustly the chair in which he sits. With such portentous moustachios as we have here, the Great Protector need only have shown himself to rout completely all his Philistine foes. We prefer the marble figure of the late Pope smiling in his chair, with outspread hands, as in welcome. If our catalogue directs us rightly, it is the work of Chevalier Pagliacetti. In the shape of portrait-busts, that of Mazzini, by L. Gaugeri, of Rome, is one of the finest in the whole Italian section. Nor must we omit mention of Costa's "Victor Emmanuel," Zucchi's "King Humbert," or the portraits by Castellani and Gernito. Salvini's "Giotto" as a boy, Maraini's "Sappho," Calvi's "Othello," Barcaglia's "Waking of Aurora" and his Cupid on the shoulders of Venus, the "Clytemnestra" of Avellini, the "Savonarola" of Biggi, and the "Spartacus" of Lucchetti, and the others which we have named are only a few of the many noble works in sculpture which Italy has to show the stranger. The visitor, moreover, must remember that they are not all to be found in the rooms immediately devoted to the fine arts; on the contrary, some of the best will be found scattered in various parts of the Italian section. On the whole, Italy makes a brave show, and fresh art-vitality seems to have come to her with her renewed political life.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.

To the old question "What is poetry?" there remains, I believe, but one answer which has not yet been given; but this answer is, as it happens, the right one. Cannot any poet—that is, any really living human being—guess it? "What is poetry?" Everything. Surely this answer is true enough, comprehensive enough—even, rightly understood, exclusive enough; for there are many nothings in the world. Everything that is, that has a real existence, that is not a mere lifeless sham, is poetry; and every true description of every such reality is poetry in the literal sense—the poetry of words.

Yet the converse of this proposition cannot be said to be true; for there are many things which have no substantial existence—half-formed thoughts, indefinable states of mind, dim, unconscious perceptions—which are yet of the very essence of poetry. These are the offspring of the first sweet summer breezes (accompanied by so strange yearnings), or of the occult influences of the night—in which are born all mysteries, chimeras, and non-existent things generally. Some of these come with sleep, but many when sleep will not come; and poetry, even with those who are thought unpoetical, is hardly ever absent altogether from a sleepless night.

Most people know some, at all events, of Heller's Nuits Blanches—"Sleepless Nights"—fantastic studies for the piano, which even a moderate player can make interesting. These express almost every variety of feeling which the inability to go to sleep brings to us—in one it is as if myriads of little demons were pricking and pinching us; in another there is a sort of steady beating, as if some one in the next room were slowly playing a devil's tattoo on the ground; in another a heaving and throbbing, like that of distant steam-engines at work; in another a yearning cry, which shows that sleep is far away and not to be hoped for; while in another is a lulling murmur, deceitfully promising an ever-approaching sleep—which never comes.

It is torture—a long, wearying, changeful yet monotonous torture—the endurance of a night without sleep, even when one is not kept awake by actual pain: when one is, it is terrible. If one could only know at the beginning that sleep would not come, it might be wiser to give it up at once and take to reading; or even dress and go out for a moonlight walk—one of those strange, solitary walks, when the world is so beautiful and oneself so weary, when one would like to weep and cannot be sure whether it is from joy or sorrow. Of such a walk, surely, although preluded by a dream-troubled sleep, Shelley wrote his magical "Lines to an Indian Air"—

> I arise from dreams of Thee
> In the first sweet sleep of night
> When the winds are breathing low
> And the stars are shining bright:
> I arise from dreams of thee,
> And a spirit in my feet
> Has led me—who knows how?
> To thy chamber-window, Sweet!

And, though he very likely suffered for it in a headache next day, the poet was right not to try to allure again the vanished goddess of sleep—who, like other goddesses, ethereal or earthly, keeps aloof more coyly the more she is wooed. The innumerable plans of inducing sleep to visit us when we are overtired, or not tired enough, are of very little worth: if she will come

> She will, you may depend on't;
> And if she won't—she won't, and there's an end on't.

The common way of counting so many hundreds, or thousands, has the great drawbacks that, in the first place, it is a disagreeable and worrying process—and all ways of seeking sleep should be pleasant and soothing—and, in the second, one may very soon drop into a mechanical way of counting, and go on at the same time with it and with any train of thought which has been troubling us. A better plan, for the arithmetically disposed, is to go through some simple tables, which will require a little, and a very little, mental effort: as, twice two are four, twice four are eight, &c.; which, by the time one gets to twice a hundred-and-twenty-eight, becomes just last—a blessed sign of sleepiness!

Methods not like these are sought by the poetical mind when it is unduly wakeful: in one of the loveliest, and not one of the most hackneyed, of his sonnets, Wordsworth has told us picture of the simple thoughts to which his great mind naturally turned. All the most beautiful sights and sounds of the country move at his call before him in quiet procession:

> A flock of sheep, that leisurely pass by,
> One after one ——

coming, we can imagine, through the opened gate of a meadow into a green lane, and wandering down it: les brébis passent et se ressemblent! There is no sight more touching in its peaceful beauty; as there are no sweeter sounds than > —— the sound of rain, and bees

> Murmuring; the fall of rivers, winds and seas—

though one is not quite sure, among these last, which are sounds and which sights. Next the poet calls up visions of great expanses, boundless and tranquil—

> Smooth fields, white sheets of water, and pure sky.

Who can fail to love the mind which instinctively took refuge from all troubles in thoughts, or inward pictures, of such loveliness and purity? Yet even these cannot give him rest: he lies sleepless through the night, and must hear the small birds' melodies > —— first uttered from my orchard trees,

> And the first cuckoo's melancholy cry.

Words which bring to our minds those of another poet who has "uttered nothing base;" who, when he tells us, in one of his curiously vivid lines, how as the night passes away

> The casement slowly grows a glimmering square, remembers, in like wise,

> The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds.

And in "Locksley Hall," also, Tennyson has reminded us of one of the miseries of lying awake—the constant and pitiless beating of "the rain upon the roof." It has its poetry, there can be little doubt, this weary, dreary penance of sleeplessness, like most penances and most miseries. Perhaps one may say that this poetical possibility is (little as we could acknowledge it at the time) the redeeming element in many tortures. The agony really unbearable is that which is vulgar, hideous, for which one would not ask sympathy, which moves onlookers only to a coarse, hard ridicule.

Not that all sleepless nights are torture. There is in a long night-journey a fresh and almost wild delight which day's healthier pleasures scarcely equal: we moderns can imagine how glorious must have been a moonlit journey on the box of the York coach—or, grander still, a horse-back expedition in those remote times "when knights were bold"—we can call up some vision of these delights when we think of our own rushing, rapid journeys in the "night mail north." The start, with the station's great arching roof overhead, open at one end to the sombre sky; the contrast of the cries of porters and the laughing of travellers with the silence that one can feel around, even in busy London; the long or hurried farewell, as the train slowly moves off—passes and leaves the platform, grunts and puffs, then seems to pant like an eager horse as it feels the open pathway under it, and settles to its splendid pace of close upon sixty miles an hour. "The moon looks out, the fields rush by," as some poet must have said somewhere; there is an immense feeling of loneliness as we hurry through unknown places—all weird and unearthly in the dark or the moonlight—as we stream along under our flying banner of fire. It is an hour or two after midnight when we leap from the train, and hurry into the warm, bright room for a hasty, hot, confused, delightful breakfast. Children scald their mouths with steaming coffee, Scotchmen rush in battalions upon the cold roast beef; hardly anyone is quite awake; everyone is laughing except those who are very cross, and they make the others laugh the more. Then, into the train again—only twenty minutes are allowed, and nobody wants to be left behind: foolish those who did, for all who are awake behold a series of the grandest pictures—the broad plains of the Black Country, with every now and then a gaping pit from which the furnace flames roar and surge like (as the country people roughly say) "hell's mouth itself." And then, after the night, there comes ——

But we must not make the thousandth attempt to describe a sunrise, lest it should turn out no better than the other nine hundred and ninety-nine. Only let it be said, and remembered, that there is the sunrise to end every sleepless night: the most exquisite beauty to compensate for what is often the most dreary torture. Here, as so often elsewhere, our greatest pains are bound up (sometimes indisseverably) with our highest pleasures.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

At a meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution on the 4th inst., held at its house, John-street, Adelphi, payments amounting to £1850 were made on some of the 268 life-boat stations, including rewards to the crews of life-boats and shore-boats for recent services. Amongst the contributions lately received were £600 from Miss Barlow, of Leicester, to defray the cost of a life-boat to be named the John Clay Barlow, after her late brother; and £4 12s., contents of contribution-box at St. James's Schools, Burnley. The late Mrs. Sykes, of Grasmere, had left the institution a legacy of £600; the late W. Trowell, Esq., of Fletton, Huntingdon, £100; and the late Miss F. A. Burrell, of Durham, £100. The institution's instructions for the restoration of the apparently drowned continue to be extensively circulated on the coast and elsewhere. The committee expressed their deep regret at the death of Admiral Sir W. H. Hall, K.C.B., who had been one of their members for many years. Reports were read from the institution's four inspectors of life-boats on their recent visits to twenty-two life-boat stations.

Earl Granville, as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, on Saturday last turned the first turf of a direct railway between Deal and Dover. The ceremony was followed by a luncheon.

A supplement to the London Gazette was published last Saturday containing the announcement that "her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, is pleased to prolong till Dec. 31, 1878, the time for the registration of trade-marks used in the textile industries."

A meeting of citizens was held in the Mansion House, Dublin, yesterday week—the Lord Mayor presiding—to take steps for the relief of the sufferers by the China famine. Sir Thomas Wade, British Minister to China, said there are five distressed provinces, covering an area more than three times the size of the United Kingdom. The population is 120 millions, fifteen millions of whom are starving. A large sum of money was subscribed.

The receipts on account of revenue during the quarter which ended on Sunday were £18,817,695, against £18,866,868 in the corresponding quarter of last year. The receipts for the year ended Sunday were £79,714,126, against £79,084,492 in the year ending June 30, 1877. The increases during the past quarter compared with the corresponding period of the preceding year, have been in customs, land tax, and house duty, post office, interest on advances, and in the miscellaneous items; while there has been decreases in the excise, stamps, and property and income tax. Upon the year there has been a net increase of £629,634.

NEW BOOKS.

Curiosity, rather than any stronger or worthier sentiment, is the influence under which we take up The History of England: related for the rising generation by the late M. Guizot, and translated in good style, for the most part, by Moy Thomas (Sampson Low and Co.), a work of which two large, handsome, profusely and nobly illustrated volumes are now before the public. For it is quite certain that an English reader, desirous of studying a full, true, and particular account of the historical events which have combined to make his country what it now is, from the day "when Britain first at Heaven's command arose from out the azure main," would not turn for information to the pages either of the late illustrious M. Guizot or of any other foreign authority. Not that M. Guizot's account is at all less full, true, and particular than it should have been for the instruction of his grandchildren, but that he could not be expected to feel that deep interest which identity of nationality inspires. On the other hand, such accounts as his not only arouse curiosity, though that may be the chief feeling with which they are approached; they also achieve the useful purpose of enabling us to see ourselves as others see us. This "History of England" is not only uniform, as regards externals, with the same author's "History of France," already brought out by the same enterprising publishers, but it corresponds thereto in other respects. It contains in a collected form certain "tales of a grandfather," taken down from his lips, expanded, and edited, with affectionate and reverential care, by his gifted daughter, Madame Guizot De Witt, and intended for the benefit principally of the young. The plan, however, is slightly different; for, as the tales were related to a French audience and published originally for the edification of French readers, the narrator "felt that in this case the knowledge which would enable the reader to supply any hiatus is less extended; he was, in consequence, careful to preserve the regular and chronological sequence of events." Nor will the English reader have any reason to complain of this method. It may, perhaps, entail some little sacrifice of dramatic effect and picturesque arrangement; but, on the other hand, it is less bewildering and less likely to load the memory with pictures in which the cart precedes the horse. The first volume may be said to commence with the Roman invasion under Julius Cæsar, and it ends with the death of Henry VII. The second begins with the reign of Henry VIII., and ends with the death of Charles II. The latter is, of course, the volume in which we expect to find M. Guizot at his best, for it contains a portion of our history, that portion in which Cromwell is the prominent figure, whereon the late illustrious historian and statesman is an acknowledged authority. The student would probably go to Mr. Freeman for all that concerns the Norman invasion; to Mr. Froude for what relates to the House of Tudor; and to Mr. Gardiner for the personal government of Charles I. But for readers—especially young readers—who are not exactly students M. Guizot has bequeathed a history which will give them, in pleasant and readable style, a sufficiently comprehensive array of facts and a sufficiently trustworthy estimate of incidents and of characters. Moreover, the histories of France and England are at certain epochs so intermingled one with the other that he who speaks with authority, as M. Guizot certainly spoke, about the French cannot fail to command respectful attention when he discourses of the English; for the two are, in fact, one for the purposes of general information and instruction. As regards the illustrations, they will probably be considered to fail occasionally in respect of accuracy of costume and other points: they are numerous and spirited, most of them are fine, many of them are truly noble, some of them are melodramatic, and a few of them are grotesque.

It is not likely that there will be much difference of opinion among persons who are qualified to speak from personal experience or from trustworthy testimony, to say nothing of the internal evidence afforded, about Walks in Algiers, by L. G. Séguin (Daldy, Isbister, and Co.), a book which seems worthy of being regarded as a model of what such works should be. "Algiers and its surroundings" are the theme of the volume; and it appears to be allowed by general consent of all who have had an opportunity of examining the pages that whatever we are told therein can be safely depended upon, whilst the excellent style in which it is told must be admitted by every reader, travelled or untravelled. A very tempting description is given of Mustapha Supérieur, which, as "everybody" knows, is "the most attractive and aristocratic suburb of Algiers," the suburb where "the English colony has its head-quarters." And be it known to anybody who does not already know it that the English colony, as is not unusual with colonies of that nationality, is bidding fair to make a peaceful conquest of the whole place. The suburb takes its name from Mustapha, the "last Dey but three," who once upon a time dwelt there in a beautiful palace which is "now used as the summer residence of the Governor-General." The time for living in this lovely suburb is from October to June. To the walks which may be taken therefrom in any direction there is no end, and their attractiveness is equally without limit. Turn which way you will, you can "scarcely fail to discover some new charm of landscape, some picturesque nook;" you may wander up and down wooded slopes, always taking a fresh route, with scarcely any fear of going wrong, if you have a taste for flowery lanes, if you have an eye for colour, if you have an ear that rejoices in the song of thrush and nightingale. There is a great deal to be said for the climate of Algiers as superior to that of Nice and other places of resort for invalids and idlers: but to be content with Algiers you must be a lover of nature, and must not hanker after the mundane pleasures to be found in the neighbourhood of Monaco or even of Pau. You may, if you travel first class, and pay £10 9s. 6d. for your fare through from London to Algiers, reach Marseilles in sixteen hours and a quarter from Paris, and Algiers from Marseilles in thirty-six hours; but of course, for enjoyment, it would be advisable to go more gently, and break the journey at Lyons, if nowhere else. There is a want, it appears, of really good hotels in Algiers; but as to them and as to everything else that especially concerns the traveller or the invalid in search of a healthy place of abode abundant information is supplied in the volume under consideration, a volume which both for those who contemplate a visit to Algiers and for those who do not is much to be commended as a delightful collection of useful and agreeable notes, memoranda, and descriptions. Illustrations, moreover, there are, to the number of about a score, including plans of Algiers and of the environs; and let it be added in a spirit of grateful appreciation that there is an index. One remark must be made in conclusion: the author, who is probably indulging in a small joke, writes of "le génie militaire" as though it meant "military genius," whereas it of course means what we should call "the engineers;" and, moreover, it means "the engineers of the army" as opposed to "le génie maritime" or "engineers of the navy." The matter seems to be worthy of observation, because so many good writers, who might reasonably be supposed to know better, are apparently ignorant of what is one of the commonest expressions in the French language.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.

The camp will be open to-day (Saturday), and the shooting will begin at nine o'clock next Monday. The winner of the Silver Medal will be known on Thursday, the 11th, and the names of the sixty who are entitled to shoot in the second stage will be announced. The St. George's contest (second only in interest to the Queen's) is in the programme for Friday, the 12th, and the Lords and Commons Match will take place on Saturday, the 13th, in the afternoon. The Queen's Prize, second stage, will be shot for on Tuesday, the 16th, and there will also be on that day the first stage of the Army and Navy Prizes and the Public Schools Veterans' Match. On Wednesday, the 17th, the University teams will compete for the Chancellor's Cup. The match between the regular Army and the Volunteers for the Donegal Cup, and the contest amongst the regulars for General Eyre's prize, is also fixed for the 17th. Thursday, the 18th, will be a busy day, the principal events being the Elcho Shield, the Public Schools Match, the Volunteer Cadets' Match, and the Kolapore Cup. The last shooting day is Friday, the 19th, when the principal attractions will be the Loyd-Lindsay Prize for mounted men and a similar contest for volunteers on foot. The prizes will be distributed on Saturday, July 20, and there will be the usual athletic sports and games later in the day. The space for the regimental camps is allotted, and will be occupied by the London Rifle Brigade, the 3rd London, the Victorias, the South Middlesex, the St. George's, the London Scottish, the 19th, 29th, and 37th Middlesex, the Civil Service, the Queen's (Westminster), and the 1st Surrey. The council have approved a white cap cover to be worn by competitors; but the use of the approved pattern is not compulsory, and any regimental cap covers authorised by commanding officers may be worn.

The London Scottish, as usual, took possession of their camp at Wimbledon last Saturday for a week's drill prior to the national shooting gathering; an example that this year has been followed by the Queen's (Westminster), a strong body of whom went under canvas.

The metropolitan volunteers had a heavy day's work last Saturday, as ten regiments were inspected officially, while three took up residence under canvas at Wimbledon, and others participated in minor field-days and marches, bringing up the total force under arms to something considerably over 7000 men. First in point of time, as it probably was in importance, was that of the London Rifle Brigade in Hyde Park, by Colonel Burnaby, the commanding officer of the Grenadier Guards. The corps, in ten good companies, in addition to two companies of cadets, were under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Hayter, M.P., whose field officers were Lieutenant-Colonel Haywood, Major Hope, and Captain Ewens. The regiment was put through a long series of movements, extending over nearly a couple of hours, and including the "attack formation," on the principle practised by the Guards on their Wimbledon field-day, a fortnight since, the movements concluding with an advance in line and general salute. In his address at the close of the drill Colonel Burnaby expressed himself well satisfied with what he had seen of the regiment this year, as this was the fourth occasion on which he had had the pleasure of meeting them. The 20th Middlesex were inspected upon the Horse Guards parade by Lieutenant-General Stephenson, the commanding officer of the Home District. The corps was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Gore-Browne, and showed a strength of 627 of all ranks on parade. At the close of the drill, which included a novelty in the shape of the bayonet exercise, excellently performed to the word of command of the Sergeant-Major, General Stephenson made a short congratulatory address. The 3rd Middlesex Artillery, who showed a field state of 810 on parade, under Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Truro, underwent a satisfactory inspection at Wellington Barracks by Colonel Waller, R.A., the Inspecting Officer of Auxiliary Artillery for the Home District. The 4th Middlesex, Lord Truro's other regiment, of whom nearly 450 answered to their names, passed through a similar ordeal in Hyde Park, where the test was applied by Colonel Fremantle, of the Coldstream Guards.—The St. George's, to the number of 476, paraded at Wellington Barracks, under Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. C. H. Lindsay, and marched thence to the grounds of Lambeth Palace, where they were inspected by Colonel Fitzroy, of the Coldstream Guards. The 1st Middlesex Engineers were also inspected by Colonel Gordon, R.E., the battalion and company drill being executed in Battersea Park, and the engineering work at the head-quarters of the corps. Lieutenant-Colonel Ransome was in command.—The 26th Middlesex (Customs and Docks), who mustered nearly 800 of all ranks, went by special train from Waterloo to Bushey Park, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Kennard, M.P., and were inspected by Colonel Wynne, of the Grenadier Guards.—The Civil Service Rifles, a large detachment of whom have been under canvas for a week at Sandown Park, were inspected there, the remainder of the corps going by train to Esher; while at Carshalton the 1st Surrey Administrative Battalion, comprising nearly 800 men of the Brixton, Wimbledon, Carshalton, Epsom, and Shaftesbury Park Corps, went through the same ordeal under Colonel Sprot, commanding the fiftieth sub-district.—The Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Mapleson, were inspected in Regent's Park.—The 2nd London, under Lieutenant-Colonel Vickers, went to Blackheath for a field-day; and the 10th Surrey took the train to Horsham, returning to London on Monday by march route. The East London Engineers proceeded to Rochampton for a mimic field-day at the residence of Colonel Crowle.

On Sunday the 1st London Engineers and the 37th Middlesex attended Divine service—the first named at St. Giles's, Cripplegate, where the sermon was preached by the Chaplain, the Rev. P. P. Gilbert; the latter at St. Giles-in-the-Fields, the Rev. Canon Nisbet, Chaplain of the corps, officiating.

The annual fête of the 1st Cambridge Rifle Volunteers was held last week in the handsome grounds of Sidney Sussex College, granted for the occasion by the Master and Fellows. All sorts and kinds of amusement had been provided; and the band of the 11th Hussars played a selection of music. Educated dogs, feats of swordsmanship, a double telephone, the ascent of grotesque balloons, and a grand illumination of the grounds were amongst the attractions; and the whole wound up with a display of fireworks.

The bronze medal of the National Rifle Association for Staffordshire has been won by Mr. Buxton, 8th (Burton) Corps.

The Suffolk Agricultural Show took place last week at Ipswich. The Duke of Hamilton, Lord Rendlesham, the Marquis of Exeter, and the Marquis of Bristol were among the prize-takers.

The Domestic Economy Congress at Manchester came to a conclusion yesterday week. During the day papers were read and discussions held on the ventilation of dwellings, cookery, needlework, clothing, food, and other subjects.

PARIS AT THE CAFÉ.

(From a Correspondent.

All along the line of the grand boulevards (from the Madeleine right away to the Château d'Eau), and all along the Boulevard St. Michel—in the quarter thronged with visitors and the quarter thronged with students—these are the two great lines of cafés. Of course, every street in Paris is dotted with them here and there, but in these it is no matter of dots; from the Pont St. Michel to the Luxembourg Garden alone, I have counted—I think it was fifty!

For a man with a spare hour, or two or three, on his hands, there is no place like a Parisian café; above all, a café in the Latin quarter—where, despite the greater show of the Italiens and their kin, there is far more variety, more interest, more life. On a sunny day in July one may sit—say before some café on the eastern side of the Boulevard St. Michel (not too far above or below the Cluny Museum)—and watch the constant stream of students, of every nation and of every colour, white, yellow, brown, and black; of soldiers in all sorts of uniforms—some very fierce little men, and some very mild, but all very little; of grisettes, or rather of the new generation which has risen up and taken their place, as the big, brutal Hanover rat has dispossessed his quiet little black predecessor. Bonnes pass, with chattering children, on their way to the gardens of the Luxembourg, where the band plays, and the marionettes act their funny drama twenty times a day; and priests go by, sour and close-shaven or ruddy and countrified, demure all of them, with downcast eyes, yet noticing everything—even to the bonnes. Little boys come to you as you sit and beg you to buy boxes of lights; little girls put flowers on the table before you and then run away—not that they mean the flowers as gratis offerings: you may be sure of their return. Occasionally you see a beggar, though these are rare in Paris; but if you throw away the smallest bit of your cigar there are little boys to pick it up—in the city are seven hundred boys, I am told, engaged in this one occupation.

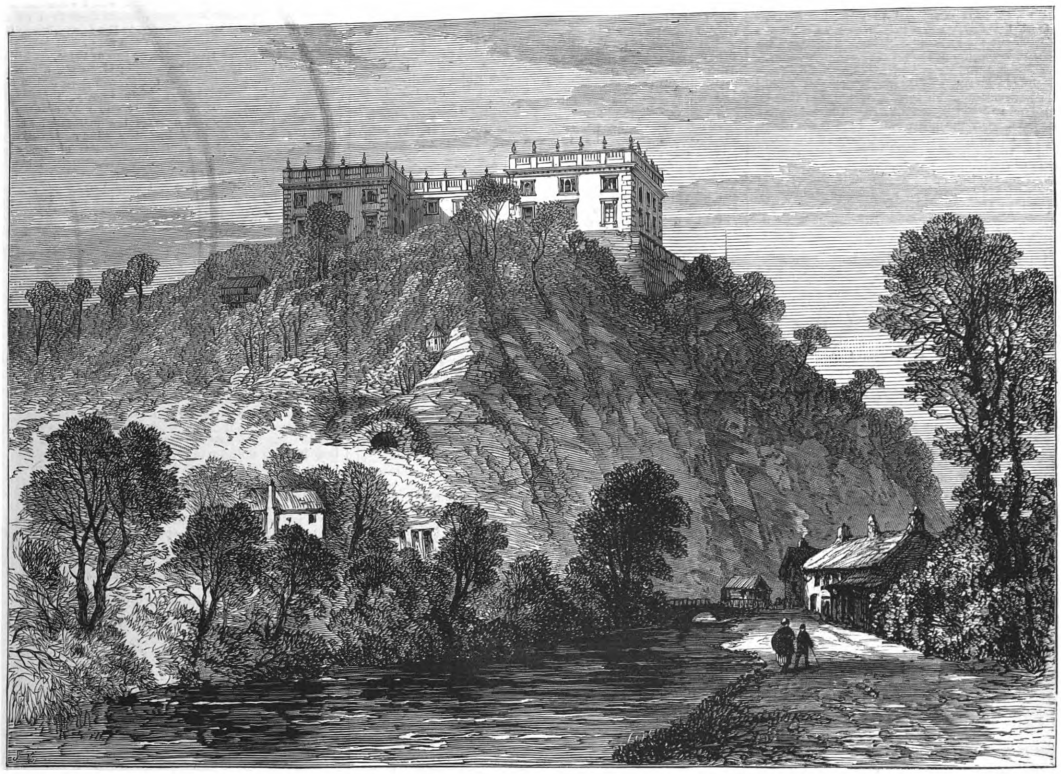
If, however, you prefer the Italiens or the Capucines for your coffee, or your "grog," or your ice (you can get delicious ices at these first-rate restaurants for a franc and a half, which is undeniably a first-rate price), you have only to take an empty chair—not always an easy thing to find in front of a shaded café on a hot afternoon—and you may see half the lazy people of Europe pass and repass, in carriages, open cabs, and omnibuses, on horseback and on foot; or if, again, you wish to sojourn for a while in the famous "Elysian fields," you may think yourself—in the evening, especially—on the outskirts of some gigantic fair. Paris is, indeed, the pleasure-ground of Europe; it is not a very noble métier, but the French like it, and do their work extremely well—amusing themselves while they amuse others.

In every other quarter of the town there is something, and something fresh, to be seen—except, indeed, in those long, white, dreary boulevards which intervene between the busy city and its charming environs. But in the city there are, here, all all the strangers shopping, paying high for their broken French, and grumbling; here, the busy, merry, sharp-tempered Frenchwomen haggling over halfpence; here, the speculators, the agents de change, the agioteurs, who make such hellish hubbub at the Bourse; here the quiet, round-shouldered workmen, smoking as they go to or from their work; everywhere soldiers, priests, sisters of charity, and young girls in the white dress of the première communion.

But it need hardly be said that it is not merely for the solitary idler that the café is a resource and a pleasure. What we in London have lost a century or more—the old coffee-house, where comrades met to make merry, to discuss politics, trade, literature, even to do business—this still exists and flourishes in Paris, with such differences as the difference of time and nation naturally make. From the young "bloods" of Queen Anne's day to the actual gommeux, from the sober old English citizens to the modern examples of French respectability, is a step, no doubt, yet it is almost a question whether it is a greater step than that from a nineteenth century Englishman to his French contemporary—among the young men, at all events; so distinct a type has the rough athletic Briton of to-day become.

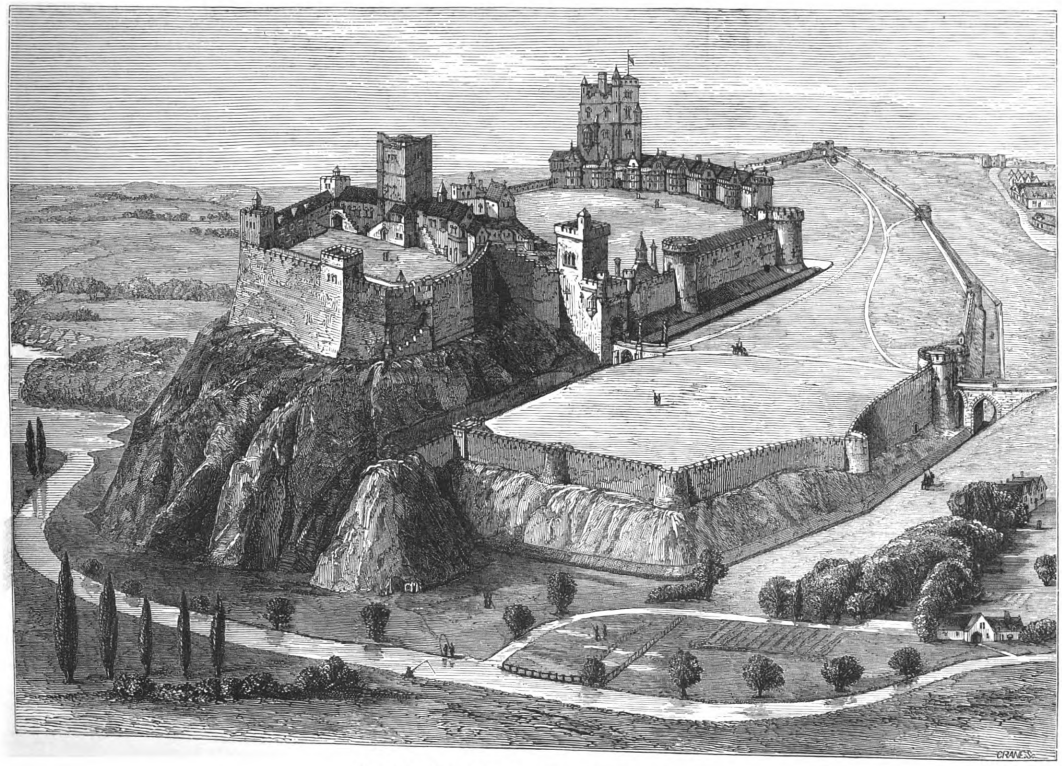
Still, what was an everyday luxury, if not an absolute necessity, to the Englishmen who lived with Dryden or with Addison, has become absolutely necessary—is as the very breath of life—to every Frenchman. The French cannot live without talking—they confess it readily—and this accounts for many of their institutions, as, for example, their gregarious student life, with its hotels filled with lads of twenty: in London medical or legal students generally live alone, very seldom "chum" with more than one friend. As for cafés, a Frenchman has applied to them his eternal quotation—S'ils n'existaient pas, il faudrait les inventer.

And look at their advantages for the innumerable men, young or old, of all classes who have no fixed evening occupation. In England, in London even, for the bachelor multitudes who can hardly be expected to spend their evenings at home, there is no refuge but the club; and a club has the disadvantage of being a fixture—a party of friends in Paris can carry their club with them, establishing it at the nearest cafe. Besides, the English club is considerably more expensive than a Parisian café of the usual kind.



For it is really a very cheap amusement, your café—that is say, it may be made very cheap; and the Frenchman has not the Englishman's passion for making cheap things dear by paying more than is necessary for them. No Parisian thinks it at all mean to spend an hour or so at a café, reading all the available newspapers or playing at dominoes, taking nothing but his cup of coffee at 35 or 40 centimes (though I must confess that he generally adds to it a petit verre), and giving the waiter only two sous; and the way in which cafés increase and multiply show that it is not mean—that the proprietors can well afford to give him this accommodation at this price.

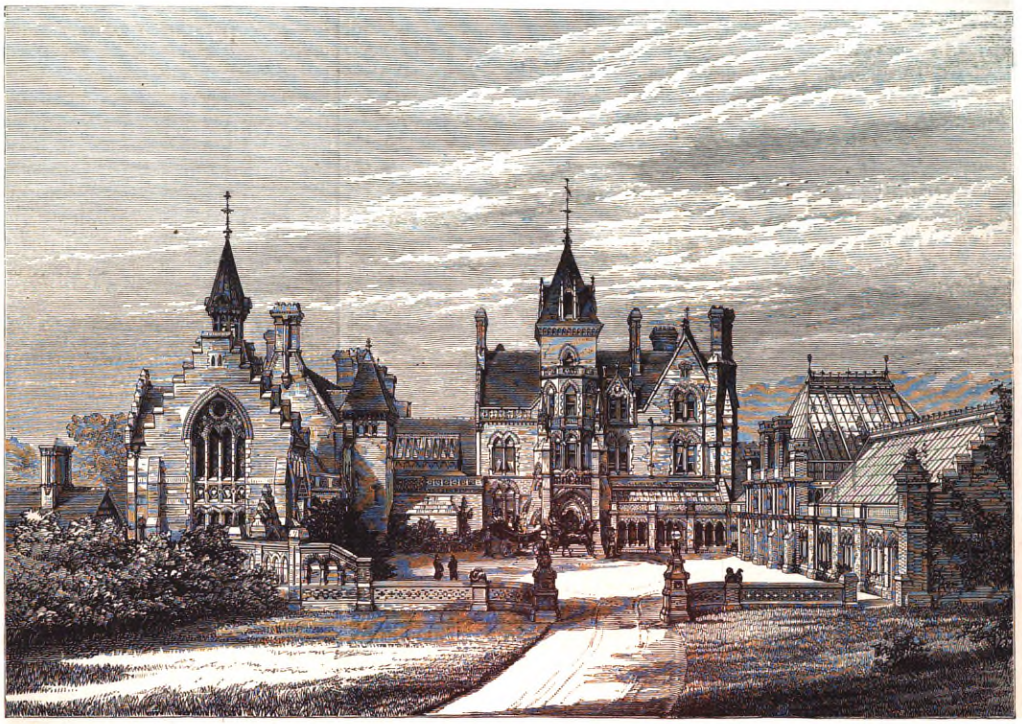
So they are cheap enough, those merry parties of comrades who drink little and talk much, which are held night after night at every café on each side of the Seine: those informal clubs that can change, break up, move their quarters, or double their numbers, at a moment's notice. At them almost every Parisian acquires a dash, a liveliness, a readiness in talk, rare among Londoners; it is odd to notice how a man who in Paris has seemed rather quiet and insignificant, in London leads the conversation or takes, at all events, a prominent part in it. As talkers, the French are certainly unrivalled; and it is to a great extent their cafés which have given them this supremacy.



Of some of these cafés, which have become historical, or which are at the present day the most popular and interesting, I hope in ensuing articles to give some brief account.

It has been decided by the Trinity Board to build the new Eddystone Lighthouse themselves, and not under contract. There were three tenders, that of Mr. Pethick, of Plymouth, the lowest, being £105,000, while the estimate of the Board's engineer was £90,000.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO NOTTINGHAM.



THE MIDLAND COUNTIES ART-MUSEUM, NOTTINGHAM CASTLE: WEST FRONT.

NOTTINGHAM CASTLE IN THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO NOTTINGHAM.

BESTWOOD LODGE, NEAR NOTTINGHAM, THE SEAT OF THE DUKE OF ST. ALBANS, VISITED BY THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

THE LATE MAYOR OF NOTTINGHAM.

A sad personal calamity had taken place just before the opening of Nottingham Castle by the Prince and Princess of Wales as an Art-Museum for the Midland Counties. This misfortune was the death of Mr. W. G. Ward, the Mayor, to whose public spirit and indefatigable exertions the success of the scheme has been chiefly owing. On the evening of Thursday, the 13th ult., while riding with his eldest son near his house, he had an apoplectic seizure, and, falling from his horse, sustained a fracture of the skull, from which he died in the course of the following day. Mr. Ward, who was born at Nottingham in the year 1825, was connected, under the late Mr. George Moore, with the business of Messrs. Groucock, Moore, and Copestake. At the age of twenty he was appointed to the management of important departments, and shortly afterwards was placed at the head of the Nottingham house of that firm. At the age of thirty he began business as a lace manufacturer on his own account, and soon obtained a leading position in the town. The firm of Ward and Cope, in their factory at New Basford, now have a hundred first-class machines employed in the manufacture of lace curtains, theirs being the largest establishment in the trade. Mr. Ward had been an active and useful member of the Town Council since 1869, and an Alderman since 1874. It was chiefly through his influence that the Borough Extension Act was carried, by which Nottingham now ranks as the thirteenth town in the United Kingdom in population, and fifth in extent of area; so that from the mayoralty of Mr. Ward the town may be said to make a fresh start in prosperity and municipal dignity. He has also done much good public service as a member of the School Board and of the Chamber of Commerce, and in promoting a system of arbitration for disputed questions between employers and employed. The Nottingham School of Art, over the managing committee of which he presided, has been more especially indebted to Mr. Ward's energy and ability in directing its affairs. The marked success achieved by the students of the Nottingham School of Art induced the Department of Science and Art to make, in the early part of 1872, overtures to the Town Council with a view to the establishment of a permanent museum. A letter from Sir Henry Cole, then of the South Kensington Museum, to Mr. Ward, in that year already Mayor of Nottingham, was laid before the Council in February, 1872, when it was unanimously resolved to accept the offer of the Education Department; a committee was appointed, and an annual grant of money voted. Within a few months an exhibition of pictures and other specimens of art-work—lent by the authorities at South Kensington—was opened in the Exchange Rooms, Nottingham, and was attended with such popularity as to determine the Council to provide a suitable site for a permanent institution, and the Castle was at once suggested as the most eligible. Application was at once made to the trustees of the Duke of Newcastle, Mr. Gladstone and Lord de Tabley, who granted a lease of the Castle and grounds for a term of 500 years—the Council to use and maintain the same as a public Museum and Exhibition. Clauses to that effect having been inserted in the next Improvement Act carried through the Legislature, it was resolved to devote a minimum sum of £20,000 towards the restoration of the Castle and its adaptation to the purpose This was the origin of the new "Midland Counties Art-Museum," which was opened last Wednesday, and of which we give a separate description. The late Mayor of Nottingham will be remembered by his fellow-townsmen especially in connection with this final and crowning success of his useful public life.

THE LATE MR. W. G. WARD, MAYOR OF NOTTINGHAM.

NOTTINGHAM CASTLE.

The opening this week of the new Midland Counties Art-Museum at Nottingham, by the Prince and Princess of Wales, is an event of more than local interest. But the site upon which this institution has been erected claims particular notice for the sake of its historical and antiquarian associations and the renown of Nottingham Castle. We have to thank an accomplished Nottingham architect and archæologist, Mr. T. C. Hine, F.S.A., for the materials by which we are enabled to describe and illustrate this subject. Mr. Hine compiled and printed, last year, for limited circulation, a volume containing a series of brief historical notes, arranged in chronological order, with the dates set forth in the margin of its pages, concerning remarkable events in the annals both of the Castle and of the town. These extend from the Norman Conquest down to the purchase of the Castle by the Town Council, in 1875, for an Art-Museum. The book is illustrated by many photographic reproductions of old prints and drawings, facsimiles of ancient manuscripts, maps, and plans, which bring the former aspects of Nottingham plainly before the reader's eye. One of these, being the view of "Nottingham Castle in the Sixteenth Century," was drawn by Mr. Hine from his accurate and matured studies of the plan and construction of that grand baronial edifice, which was superseded, two hundred years ago, by the ducal mansion that was notoriously ruined by an incendiary fire in 1831. We are permitted by Mr. Hine to copy this view of the ancient Castle in our Engraving; and we may also consult his antiquarian commentary, together with a neatly written "Historical Sketch" by Mr. J. Henry Brown, for the information here desirable to recall to mind. It need scarcely be observed that Nottingham Castle has frequently been mentioned as the scene of important events in the history of England.

The name of Nottingham is Saxon, and refers, like that of Sneinton, the eastern suburb, to the "Snottenga," or caves, which from time immemorial have existed in the rock, of New Red Sandstone formation, on which the town and Castle stand. It is probable that some of these caves, perhaps originally hollowed out by subterranean streams of water, were the dwellings of a primitive race of mankind long before the Roman conquest of Britain. But Mr. Hine's opinion seems to be well founded, that the rock-face in Nottingham Park, in the grounds of Mr. J. Leavers, west of the Castle, perforated with five tiers of small niches, like pigeon-holes or "columbaria," accompanied by a sort of furnace, having a chimney, at one side, exhibits the remains of a Roman "sepulchrum commune." A very similar example, found at Rome, was represented in one of our Illustrations some years ago, and others have been described as existing in Naples and Sicily. The bodies of the dead were burned in the "bustum" or furnace; and the ashes, put into glass or porcelain jars, were preserved in the niches of the "columbaria." This has nothing to do with the many larger excavations in different parts of the Nottingham rock, vulgarly called "Druids' Dens" or "Papists' Holes," which were certainly used as dwellings, and were very likely, at some time or other, cut out for that purpose, though now mostly reduced to be cellars or storehouses. The place may have been a stronghold of the early British inhabitants, but we are not told of any Roman fortifications there. The Castle Rock, rising about 130 ft., with a precipitous south side, overhangs the Lene rivulet, and overlooks the meadows where that stream flows into the river Trent, with a fine view, south-west, over Clifton Grove and Wollaton Hall, eastward to Belvoir, and with the entire town of Nottingham close by at the other hand. In the Castle Rock itself there is a singular hidden cleft, the nether part of which may have been formed by the action of water, but which has been made into a covert passage, with a spiral staircase at the top, from the lower level to the Castle platform, as well as to the Keep; with loopholes, or openings for light, cut in the face of the cliff, and with stockades and gates, apparently once existing, to close the passage at discretion. This is "Mortimer's Hole," which readers of English history will remember, and there are several other cavernous passages, varying in depth and length, beneath the foundations of the Castle.

About the earliest historical incident recorded of Nottingham is the defeat of King Alfred, in 868, in an attempt to take it from the Danes, who held it till 922. They were again in possession of it, under Sweyn and Canute, in the eleventh century, and Earl Tostig refused to give it up to Harold in the year of the Norman Conquest. William the Conqueror gave it to his natural son, William Peverel, who built a regular Norman castle here. The town was then divided by a wall, running north and south, into two separate boroughs, the English and the French or Norman town The monastery or priory, called that of Lenton, was founded by William Peverel, who died in 1113. This place suffered much from violence and rapine in the wars of Stephen, but its injuries were repaired by Henry II., who held a Parliament at Nottingham. It was bestowed by Richard I. upon his brother John, who conspired against him, and usurped the kingdom, while Richard was detained abroad on his return from the Crusades. Richard had to besiege Nottingham Castle, and to take it by storm, after which he held a Parliament there, and passed judgment against John, and other rebels But Cœur de Lion soon relented, and even gave the Castle again to his unworthy brother. John lived here as King twenty years later, and here cruelly put to death, by hanging, a number of little Welsh boys, children of the princes and chieftains of Wales, whom he had received as hostages for their parents' loyalty. King Henry III. occasionally visited Nottingham, and so did the first two Edwards. It is well known that Queen Isabella, after the murder of her husband at Berkeley, lived in Nottingham Castle with her paramour Mortimer; and here it was, in 1330, that Mortimer was arrested and carried off to judgment and execution. The party who came to seize him, by order of the young Edward III., gained access through "Mortimer's Hole." King Edward III was much at Nottingham in the early part of his long reign, while engaged in the Scottish wars. It has been said that his Royal Scottish captive, King David, taken at the battle of Neville's Cross, was imprisoned in a dungeon of Nottingham Castle, and that he carved a representation of Christ's sufferings on the dungeon wall. This story, however, is discredited by Mr. Hine, who does not think it likely that David was confined elsewhere than in the Royal Palace or Tower of London. The dungeon or cell, with the sculptured figures, has been looked for in vain; it may probably have been the retreat of some religious recluse. In 1411 Owen Glendower was imprisoned at Nottingham Castle.

During the Wars of the Roses, this place being a great stronghold of the House of York, Nottingham witnessed many transactions of considerable note. Edward IV. here collected his troops and proclaimed himself King in 1461, and he did so again in 1471, after landing on the coast near Hull, when he returned from his short exile in Flanders to avenge his dethronement by Warwick. Under Edward IV. and Richard III., whose Court was repeatedly held here, the Castle was greatly enlarged, strengthened, and adorned, becoming then such as it appears in our Illustration, from Mr. Hine's drawing, which is based on Leland's description and Smithson's plan of 1617. It was one of the most magnificent buildings of the Plantagenet castellated style.

The space previously occupied by the ancient Norman fortress, which is nearly that where the modern edifice—namely, the Duke of Newcastle's mansion, converted into the Art-Museum—now stands, was partly comprised within the Inner Ward of the Castle as it existed in the sixteenth century, upon the southern projection of the Rock, shown to the left hand in the view presented by our Engraving. The Inner Ballium, a second area, like the Inner Ward, entirely surrounded with buildings, and having at its rear the great tower built by Edward IV. and completed by Richard III., which the last-mentioned King used to call his "Castle of Care," is shown by this view farther in the background. The semi-circular plot of ground, inclosed by the rampart and moat, sweeping round to include the lower part of the hill, which appears to the right hand in our Engraving, is the Outer Ballium. This view is supposed to be taken from the south-east, being in truth a bird's-eye view from a point over the Trent meadows; the town of Nottingham, such as it was in the reign of the Tudors, would lie to the right hand, beyond the margin of our Engraving. The Keep Tower of the Inner Ward surmounted the State apartments, including the Great Hall and the Queen's Chapel, belonging to the Castle as it was in the time of Edward III. and under the Lancastrian Kings. Edward IV. built a more commodious and splendid set of Royal apartments in the Inner Ballium; and these are to be distinguished by the gable-roofed front, extending along the north side of that inclosure, beneath the grand composite tower, of Perpendicular architecture, with a flag on the top of it. The bridge over the moat, from the Outer Ballium to the Inner, with the portcullis, barbican, gate-house, and tower above, and guard-house adjacent, will also be perceived in our view. At the farther side of the Inner Ballium is the Garrison Chapel, with the house of the Chaplain. Altogether, we may say that Mr. Hine has succeeded in giving us a very clear idea of the plan and appearance of Nottingham Castle as it was left by the last of the Plantagenets, and as it remained, with little substantial alteration, under the Tudor Sovereigns. Richard III. here marshalled his army for the decisive battle in August, 1485, and departed for Leicester immediately afterwards, to encounter a fatal defeat and death on Bosworth field.

An epoch of still greater historical importance, the outbreak of the Civil Wars, in August, 1642, is connected with a memorable scene at Nottingham Castle. That ill-advised monarch, Charles I., when his quarrel with both Houses of Parliament had grown desperate, here set up his army standard, having issued his proclamation at York some thirty days before, to "suppress the rebels," amongst whom were Hampden and Cromwell. The "standard" could not easily be got to stand; for the wind blew a storm all day, and the stony ground allowed no fixing of the tal flagstaff. The King, then lodging at Thurland Hall, had come out with his friends and servants of the Court, and with eight hundred horsemen, to see his banner raised against the Lords and Commons. Every to see his banner raised against the Lords and Commons. Every Royalist spectator disliked the untoward omen; and it was still worse when they stuck up the flag on King Richard III.'s Tower, and the wind blew it down again. What a mercy, if Charles had taken warning by this, and had sent Hyde and Falkland to negotiate terms of peace! But no, the civil war was to begin at Edgehill and go on to Naseby; and poor King Charles I., in February, 1647, when he had been delivered by the Scots to the English, was brought a prisoner through Nottingham town, with two more years of captivity before him and death on the scaffold at last. The Castle had been held for the Parliament, under the Governorship of Colonel Hutchinson, whose wife has told us much of those troublous days; there was some fighting with the Newark Royalists, but no regular siege. The Governor, however, at the end of that war, persuaded Parliament to disband the garrison and dismantle the Castle, at which Cromwell was displeased; but there was an end of the fine old Royal and baronial fortified palace, the subject of our Illustration.

Next arose upon this renowned site the aristocratic mansion, in the Grecian style of architecture, erected between 1674 and 1679, by William Cavendish, first Duke of Newcastle. His Grace had purchased the site of Nottingham Castle from the Duke of Buckingham, and had cleared away the remnants of the ancient building. The edifice which he constructed here, with its horizontal façade, its Corinthian columns, pediments over the windows, and scroll-shaped architraves in the upper storey, and with an equestrian statue of the first Duke above the central doorway, was totally unlike our idea of a castle, but was a handsome ducal residence The wife of this Duke was the celebrated Margaret, Duchess of Newcastle, whose literary and biographical fame, like that of Mistress Lucy Hutchinson, is inseparably wedded to her husband's part in the history of his times. The monument of the Duke and Duchess, with an epitaph recording her virtues, may be seen in Westminster Abbey.

"The New Castle of Nottingham," as the Duke of Newcastle's house was naturally called, soon became once more a place to claim the English historian's notice: for it was the abode of Princess Anne, with Lady Churchill and other partisans of the Revolution, in November, 1688, when the Prince of Orange came over to relieve James II. of the government of this Protestant nation. According to Macaulay, in those days Nottingham was "the head-quarters of the northern insurrection," the Town Council having promptly joined the Earl of Devonshire and other Whig peers in opposition to King James. It is stated by Mr. Hine that the apartments occupied here by Queen Anne, some time before her accession to the throne, with the furniture and tapestry, were to be seen within the recollection of persons now living.

The second Duke of Newcastle's daughter, Lady Margaret Cavendish, married John Holles, Earl of Clare, to whom, upon the failure of male heirs to her father, she conveyed the ducal title of Newcastle. Another branch of the Cavendish family, acquiring by marriage the great Hardwick estates in Derbyshire, had been honoured with that of Dukes of Devonshire. But in 1768, on the death of Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle, without heirs male, his niece's husband, Henry Clinton, ninth Earl of Lincoln, obtained the vacant Dukedom. He assumed the surname of Pelham, and his descendants, in five generations, have been Dukes of Newcastle and owners of Nottingham Castle, but their ordinary residence has been at Clumber, in the same county.

The first Pelham who was Duke of Newcastle, Thomas Pelham, held the office of Secretary of State more than thirty years; and, in the historical memoirs of the eighteenth century he makes a conspicuous figure, though not a glorious one. He was fussy and officious, awkward in his personal demeanour, and singularly indiscreet, though some of the ridiculous stories told of him may not be strictly true. One of the best is that of his sitting with the Duke of Argyll (see "The Heart of Mid Lothian") to examine a Scotch witness upon the affair of the Porteous Riots at Edinburgh. "You say that the gun was loaded," his Grace thus addressed the witness; "what sort of shot was the gun loaded with?" "Ou ah," the Scotchman answered, "it micht be jist the soort they shute Dukes an' Fools wi', ye'll ken that richt weel." Dukes and fools, and ammunition to shoot them! His Grace of Newcastle was thrown into a violent fit of alarm and fury. He would have instantly committed that witness to the Tower, or, at least, to Newgate, and had him pressed to death for the extraction of his guilty secret, no less than a plot to slay the ducal members of the King's Privy Council. But the good Duke of Argyll, one of the wisest and most patriotic of Scotchmen, assured his terrified colleague that "dukes and fools" were only "ducks and fowls," and that the contemplated slaughter was a harmless kind of sport.

The grandson of that not very sagacious Minister of State was the fourth Duke of Newcastle, the famous Tory Duke who ordered his tenants to vote for the candidate of his nomination, and, when complained of in Parliament, asked with surprise, "My Lords, may I not do as I like with my own?" But in October, 1831, when the House of Lords threw out the Reform Bill, there were terrible riots at Nottingham. A black flag, inscribed "The Bill and No Lords," was paraded through the streets. The Castle was attacked by a savage rabble, who easily got in, drove out the servants, destroyed the furniture, and set fire to the noble edifice. It was completely ruined, and though compensation, to the amount of £21,000, was paid by the hundred or county, his Grace would never repair the building, which has been left in ruins till lately purchased for an Art-Museum.

The last Duke of Newcastle, another Henry Pelham Clinton, who died in 1864, was an excellent man in public and private life, the early and intimate friend of Mr. Gladstone, and a statesman of considerable ability. He held the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland, when he was Earl of Lincoln, and that of Secretary of State for the Colonies and for the War Department, at different periods between 1852 and 1864. His son, the present Duke, has fallen into pecuniary embarrassments, and his estates who are Mr. Gladstone and Lord de Tabley. The family of Clinton, from Warwickshire or Oxfordshire, were ennobled by King Edward III.; and it is very curious to remark what was the service, in 1330, for which the Barony was conferred. Sir William de Clinton, Chief Justice of Chester, Constable of Dover Castle, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, was one of the party at Nottingham Castle who clambered up through "Mortimer's Hole," to arrest the pestilent traitor, the minion of an adultress Queen, and to vindicate the honour of this realm of England. This singular coincidence has escaped the observation of Mr. Hine, and perhaps of the other local historians; but it seems worthy of notice, as the Clinton family have just parted with the Castle.

The architectural work of repairing and adapting the former Ducal Mansion for the purpose of an Art-Museum, at the cost of the Town Council, has been performed in a very complete and satisfactory manner, under Mr. Hine's direction, with the assistance and advice of Sir Henry Cole, Mr. G. H. Wallis, and other persons of great official experience at the South Kensington Museum. It is considered that the new Nottingham and Midland Counties Museum will comprise the best galleries of art in any provincial town or city of the United Kingdom. We present two exterior views, one of the east front, the side towards the town and railway station, on which side there is a lofty esplanade, with trees and sloping green banks; the other view of the west front, overhanging the Lene rivulet, with a precipitous cliff towards the Park, and with some of the caverns above mentioned, partly overgrown with bushes. The west front of the building has a receding centre, with a semicircular portico of Grecian columns, at each end of which is a porch, leading to the staircase of the right or left wing, respectively, and to the different apartments on the ground floor. The largest of these rooms is 54 ft. long and 26 ft. wide; the smallest is 25 ft. in length, and they include refreshment-rooms, dining-room, kitchen, and other accommodation. The staircases, which are of stone, afford much space for the exhibition of pictures and statuary. The upper storey consists of two large galleries, one of which is 146 ft. long by 26 ft. wide, and four other rooms, altogether forming a most convenient suite of apartments for a properly arranged Museum of Art. The colouring of the walls, with regard to the due effect of paintings, has been carefully taken into consideration: the lighting, warming, and ventilation of the rooms have had equal attention. Our View of the interior of the Museum may here be referred to. The curator and director appointed is Mr. G. H. Wallis, late of the South Kensington Museum, and Mr. Holbrook is the secretary. An account of the Loan Exhibition, and other present contents of the Museum, with the proceedings on Wednesday at its opening by their Royal Highnesses, will be found in another page of this week's Number of our Journal.

THE INFANT ORPHAN ASYLUM, WANSTEAD.

The Prince and Princess of Wales yesterday week attended the fifty-first anniversary of the Infant Orphan Asylum at Wanstead. Headed by the Prince and Princess, the whole company went over the building. While visiting the nursery their Royal Highnesses inspected the beds and play-room, and presented a number of small prizes, including dolls, balls, pictures, and books, to the occupants, the youngest of whom was only two years and a half old. One of the children in the institution, a Danish girl, eight years of age, recited an address which had been prepared for her, and presented a bouquet to the Princess. After the ceremony there was a luncheon, at which the Prince of Wales presided, the Princess sitting on his left. His Royal Highness having proposed "The Health of the Queen," the Duke of Manchester gave "The Prince and Princess of Wales," which was received with great cheering.

The Prince of Wales said,—Ladies and Gentlemen, on the part of the Princess, as well as on my own part, I beg to return our warmest thanks to the noble Duke for the manner in which he proposed the toast, and to the company for the manner in which they received it. It has afforded the Princess and myself the greatest possible pleasure and gratification to be here on the fifty-first anniversary of this most excellent and commendable institution. What I have seen, and what you have seen, will do more than anything I can say to prove how excellent this institution is, and how worthy it is of support in every possible way. The manner in which the children sang, the discipline under which they are evidently kept, and their clean and healthy appearance are matter of sincere congratulation to all who take an interest in the welfare, or who trouble themselves in connection with the management, of this institution (Cheers). I may say that there was one little girl who perfectly astonished us (Cheers). The remarkable elocution which she possesses would be well worthy of many a distinguished member of Parliament (Laughter). It is particularly interesting to the Princess and myself to be here on the forty-first anniversary of the Queen's coronation (Cheers). The first stone of the building in which we are now assembled was laid by my lamented father a few months before I was born, and I hold in my hand the mallet used on that occasion, which has been sent to me by Sir Charles Reed, the Chairman of the London School Board, whose father, Dr. Andrew Reed, was one of the promoters of this institution, and always took the deepest interest in its welfare. It is seventeen years ago this day since the Prince Consort visited this institution, and it is twelve years since I and the Princess were here last. I have little more to say in commending to your support an institution which has existed for half a century, which maintains 600 children, and which I believe has educated and sent forth 3000 children up to the present time (Cheers). To maintain an institution like this requires, as you may well suppose, a considerable amount of money—I believe I am not incorrect in saying that it needs about £1800 a year. It is supported almost entirely by voluntary contributions; and I feel sure that those who are present on this occasion will tell their friends how pleased they have been, and how worthy the institution is of support. I now give you, most heartily, "Prosperity to the Infant Orphan Asylum" (Great cheering).

Their Royal Highnesses soon afterwards left for town, and the chair was taken by the Bishop of St. Albans.

The band of the 3rd Essex Artillery Volunteers played a selection of music in the grounds during the afternoon, and it was not until evening that the majority of the company left the pleasant surroundings of the asylum for the metropolis.

The subscriptions announced amounted to about £1500, including the annual subscriptions of ten guineas from the Queen and one hundred guineas from the Prince of Wales.

The Right Rev. Robert Gregg, Bishop of Ossory, has been elected Bishop of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross by the Synod of the diocese, in succession to his late father.

The evening fête of the Royal Botanic Society was held on June 27 in the society's gardens in Regent's Park. The president of the society, the Duke of Teck, and the Duchess of Teck arrived soon after half-past ten, bringing with them a party of guests from Kensington Palace, who were received by Lord Rendlesham, Sir Walter Stirling, Professor Bentley, Mr. J. Heywood, F.R.S., Mr. Vivian, and other members of council, and Mr. W. Sowerby, the secretary of the society. They made the circuit of the grounds, which were inclosed with covered arcades, along each side of which were placed rows of little coloured oil lamps. Lights were also disposed in the beds, on the sloping banks, and among arbours of green leaves. The large marquee was filled with an exhibition of floral decorations for the table and the ball-room, and the rhododendron tent was lighted by Dr. Siemens's electric light. The lake was lighted with a pleasing choice of colours, and the broad walk was festooned with opal and ruby globes of ground glass illuminated by gas. From a high tower among the trees near the principal entrance coloured fires were burned on the arrival of the Duke and Duchess of Teck. During the few hours the fête lasted three military bands performed, being the bands of the Coldstream Guards, the Scots Guards, and the 2nd Life Guards, which played alternately.

OBITUARY.

MR. SEGRAVE OF CABRA.

O'Neill Segrave, Esq., of Cabra, in the county of Dublin, who died on the 25th ult. at Kiltymon, his seat in the county of Wicklow, aged fifty-nine, was the representative of one of the oldest families in Ireland (his ancestor, Richard Segrave, was Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer there in 1404), and possessed an extensive estate in that country. He was a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Dublin, and served as High Sheriff of the county of Wicklow in 1870. Early in life he was Lieutenant in the 7th Dragoon Guards. He married, May 23, 1848, Matilda, third daughter and co-heir of John Hyacinth Talbot, Esq., of Talbot Hall, in the county of Wexford, M.P., but leaves no issue. His brother and heir, Captain Henry Segrave (whose eldest daughter, Frances Emma, was married in 1876 to the present Sir John Talbot Power, Bart., of Edermine), succeeds to the estates.

MASTER MURPHY.

Jeremiah John Murphy, Esq., Q.C., Bencher of King's Inns, and ex-Master in Chancery in Ireland, died recently. This able and learned lawyer, after a brilliant career at the University of Dublin, where he gained its highest honours, was called to the Irish Bar in 1828, became a Queen's Counsel, and filled for many years the high judicial office of Master in Chancery. He belonged to the influential family of Murphy, of Cork, one of which, a cousin of Master Murphy's, N. D. Murphy, now represents that city in Parliament. Master Murphy married Maria, only child of Michael Balfe, Esq., of South Park, in the county of Roscommon, by Sally, his first wife, daughter of John Dolphin, Esq., of Turoe, in the county of Galway, and leaves issue. One of his sons is Prior of Downside.

The deaths have also been announced of—

William Todd Naylor, Esq., of Liverpool, and Hartford Grange, Northwich, on the 25th ult., aged sixty-three.

Mrs. Ferrier, eldest daughter of Professor Wilson, and the wife of Prosessor Ferrier, on the the 30th ult., aged sixty-five.

Mrs. Clara L. Balfour, well known as a writer and lecturer on temperance and other subjects, on the 2nd inst., at her residence in Croydon, in her seventieth year.

Lieutenant-Colonel Sir George Clay, Bart., late of the 19th Foot. He was born in 1831, and succeeded his brother in the title in 1876.

Lieutenant-Colonel Charles T. Otway Mayne, of H.M. Bengal Staff Corps, youngest son of the late Charles Otway Mayne, of The Manor House, Great Stanmore, on the 24th ult., at Akola, West Berar, aged forty-three.

The Rev. Edward Bridges Knight, late Rector of Chawton, Alton, Hants, second son of the Rev. William Knight, of Steventon Rectory, in the same county, on the 23rd ult., at Purbrook, Dorking, aged forty-eight.

The Rev. Marshal Spink, B.D., Perpetual Curate of St. Nicholas, Saltash, on the 29th ult. He had lived at Saltash about twenty years, and for many years had been an Alderman of the Corporation, and was Mayor three successive years.

Mr. Robert Master, Commissioner of the Turkish Compassionate Fund, at Constantinople, on Saturday last, of typhus fever. His remains were interred at Scutari on Sunday, the English Ambassador being represented by his two secretaries.

Major-General John Cameron, R.E., C.B., Director-General of Ordnance Survey, on the 1st inst., at Southampton, after a short illness. He entered the Army in 1834, and attained the rank of Major-General in 1868. General Cameron was a Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Engineers.

General Harry Thomson, late of the 6th Bengal Light Cavalry, aged ninety-eight. This veteran officer, the senior in the Indian service, served under Lord Lake seventy-five years ago. He entered the Army in 1800, and attained the rank of General in 1861.

Robert Vaughan Williams, Esq., of Bodlonfa, Flintshire, M.A., J.P., late Judge of County Courts, Chester and North Wales, on the 21st ult., at Denbigh Lodge, Lower Norwood, aged fifty-six. He was the youngest son of the late William Williams, Esq., of Peniarthucha, in the county of Merioneth.

Michael Linning Melville, Esq., of Hartfield Grove, Sussex, and of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law, late H.M. Judge at Sierra Leone in the Courts of Mixed Commissions, on the 22nd ult., aged seventy-three, having survived his wife only six months. Mr. Melville was son of the late Robert Melville, Esq., M.A., M.D., by Barbara, his wife, daughter of Benjamin Crosthwaite, Esq., of Greystone, Cumberland.

Henry Buckworth Powell-Montgomery, Esq., J.P. and D.L., of Wilverley Park, Lyndhurst, late Captain Grenadier Guards, on the 24th ult., at Wilverley, aged fifty-eight He was eldest son of Henry Weyland Powell, Esq., of Foxlease Park, Hampshire, and assumed the additional surname of Montgomery in 1871. He married, 1869, Loretta Emmeline, only daughter of Colonel Northey, and widow of Sir William Dixon, Bart.

The Rev. Langhorne Burton Burton, M.A., of Somersby, Rector of Bag, Enderby, and Somersby, on the 25th ult., at his Rectory. He was the eldest son of the late William Burton Raynor-Burton, Esq., of Somersby, who assumed the latter surname on inheriting the estates of his great-uncle, Robert Burton, Esq., of Lincoln, and of Enderby Hall. He married, in 1837, Charlotte, daughter of the Rev. John Hale, Rector of Holton, and leaves a daughter, Lucy Katharine, wife of B. Rothes Langton, Esq., of Langton, and four sons.

Genius works with any tools and on any materials. It is stated that at the second Annual Industrial Exhibition, opened in Hove on Tuesday, was a case of beautifully carved little nicknacs, which had been made by a street scavenger out of the tooth-picks he had found in the streets.

The Christian Evidence Society have issued the list of prizes and certificates awarded at their eighth annual examination in Christian evidences. In the advanced grade—in the "General Evidences of Christianity," the first prize was taken by John P. Dallen, of London; the second by Florence Jewell, of Emsworth; the third by Edward B. Lawson, of Leeds. In "Miracles," the first prize was taken by C. F. Cooper, of Liverpool; the second by Bessie L. Inwood, of St. Albans. In the elementary grade examination—in Whately's "Christian Evidences" and Bateman's "Why do you Believe the Bible?" the first prize was taken by Georgina S. Pelling, of Belfast; the second by William Hunter, of Belfast; the third by A. M. Cowell, of London; the fourth by Susanna E. Young, of London; for the fifth prize the following were equal—Jessie Cassels, of London; John P. Lovley, Maggie Stinson, and Federata Williamson, all of Belfast. Upwards of seventy first and second class certificates were also awarded in the two grades. Copies of the list and of the scheme of study and examination may be obtained at the office of the society, 2, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C. The society are desirous to extend this most important and useful department of their work by promoting the study of evidences in high schools and among Sunday-school teachers and others.

The only reply. If he had moved the K to R sq, then follow—18. Kt takes P (ch); and 19. R to K 8th (ch), &c. White, however, appears to overlook the best continuation—the capture of the B with Kt.

19. Q takes B (ch)	K to R sq
20. Q R to Q Kt sq	Q to B 6th
21. Q to B 5th	Kt to Q 4th
22. Kt to Q 7th	K R to K sq
23. K R to Q B sq	Q takes P
24. R takes Kt P	R to K 3rd
25. P to K R 3rd	R to K Kt sq
26. Kt to B 5th	R to K 4th
27. Q to Q 3rd

An oversight that affords Black an opportunity for a striking termination.

27.	R tks Kt P (ch),

Between the same Players.—(Sicilian Defence.)

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Herr A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K 3rd
3. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
4. B to Q Kt 5th	Kt to Q 5th
5. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt
6. Kt to K 2nd	Kt to B 3rd
7. Kt to Kt 3rd	B to Q 3rd
8. Q to K 2nd	B to Q Kt sq

We do not think the form of Sicilian adopted in this game affords a good defence. The second player loses time, and, as will be seen, his game becomes practically lost before his forces are half developed.

9. P to Q Kt 3rd	P to Q R 3rd
10. B to Q 3rd	P to Q 3rd
11. B to Kt 2nd	P to K 4th
12. Castles (K R)	Castles
13. P to K B 4th	R to K sq
14. Kt to R 5th	Kt to Kt 5th
15. R to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 3rd
16. Kt to Kt 3rd	B to Q R 2nd
17. P to B 4th	P to Q 4th
18. P takes Kt P	R P takes P

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Herr A.)
19. Q R to K B sq	P takes P
20. Q takes P	B to K 3rd
21. R takes K B P

A capital stroke, and quite in Mr. Bird's brilliant style; indeed, his play in the two games before us is marked by all the vigour and ingenuity that might be expected from him. Mr. Andersen, on the contrary, shows here little of the resource and keen perception of position by which the play of that great master is usually distinguished.

21.	B takes R
22. R takes B	Q to K Kt 4th

If, 22. K takes R, White wins easily by 23. Q takes P (ch).

23. Q takes Q Kt P	Q to R 5th
24. P to K R 3rd	Kt to B 3rd
25. R to Kt 7th (ch)	K to R sq
26. R takes Kt P	R to K Kt sq
27. R takes Kt

After this Black has no resource.

27.	P to K 5th
28. Q takes P, and Black resigned.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The management of the Paris Congress and the competitors are alike to be congratulated upon the punctuality with which the several rounds in the tourney have been commenced and brought to a conclusion. Since our last issue, in which we published the score of the players down to the completion of the third round, two more rounds, the fourth and fifth, have been contested. The result of the fourth was that Bird won two games of Andersen, Blackburne won one and drew one with Englisch, Clere won one and lost one with Mackenzie, Rosenthal won two of Gifford, Zukertort won one and drew one with Mason, and Winawer won two of Pitschel. In the fifth round Andersen won one and lost one with Mason, Bird won one and lost one with Clere, Blackburne won one and lost one with Mackenzie, Englisch won one and lost one with Winawer, Rosenthal won two games of Fitzchel, and Zukertort won two of Gifford. In pursuing the following score, which shows the result of the play down to Wednesday last, the day upon which this part of the present issue was sent to press, our readers will bear in mind that each competitor has to play two games with all the others, and that drawn games count half a point to each side:—

	Won.	Drawn.	Lost.	Score.
Winawer	9	—	1	9
Blackburne	7	2	1	8
Rosenthal	7	1	2	7½
Zukertort	5	4	1	7
Andersen	6	—	4	6
Clere	6	—	4	6
Englisch	3	3	4	4½
Bird	4	—	6	4
Mackenzie	3	2	5	4
Mason	2	2	6	3
Gifford	1	—	9	1
Pitschel	0	—	10	0

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated May 15, 1878) of Sir Frederick Leopold Arthur, Bart., late of Queen's-gate, Hyde Park, who died on the 1st ult., was proved on the 19th ult. by William Mackinnon, Francis Lloyd, and Llewelyn Malcolm Wynne, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator gives to his executors £100 each; to his wife, furniture and household effects and pecuniary legacies amounting together to £750; to his brother, John Raynor Arthur, £2000; to his younger sons, £8000 each, and to his daughters, £4000 each, in addition to their portions charged on his real estate. The residue of his personalty is directed to be laid out in the purchase of real estate, which is to be settled to the use of his eldest son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male.

The will (dated March 19, 1878) with a codicil (dated May 21, 1878) of Mr. William Chapman Hewitson, late of Oatlands Park, Surrey, who died on March 28 last, was proved on the 11th ult. by John Hancock, Samuel Stevens, and Henley Grose Smith, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator bequeaths £10,000 to the Infirmary of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Northumberland, and Durham; £5000 to the Orphan House, Ashley Down, near Bristol, established by George Müller; £3000 each to the London City Mission, Bridewell-place, and the Natural History Society of Northumberland, Durham, and Newcastle-on-Tyne; £2000 each to the Wesleyan Missionary Society, the Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, the Arethusa and Chichester Ships, and the Surrey County Hospital, Guildford; £1000 each to the Metropolitan Convalescent Institution, Walton-on-Thames, the Charing-Cross Hospital, and the London Missionary Society; £500 to the Horley House Institute for Training Missionaries, Bow; and £200 to the Society for the Suppression of Vice. His entire collection of butterflies, with the cabinet and store-boxes, the testator leaves to the British Museum, on certain conditions, one of which is that it is to be called "the Hewitson Collection;" 250 catalogues of it are to be printed by his executors at the cost of his estate, and distributed among museums and lepidopterists, as they may see fit. To the Natural History Society of Northumberland, Durham, and Newcastle-on-Tyne he leaves all his natural history books, except Gould's Birds. There are numerous legacies to "the following worthy persons, some of them brother naturalists, with my love," and to others. All his real estate is directed to be sold, and the residue of his property is given to the said John Hancock.

The will (dated May 12, 1878) of Sir William Grey, K.C.S.I., late of Marldon, Devon, who died on May 15 last, was proved on the 20th ult. by Edward Harbord Lushington and William Francis Hungerford Grey, the son, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Dame Georgina Chicheley Grey, his household furniture and effects, £400, and a life annuity of £900; and there are some other bequests. The residue of his property is directed to be divided between his two sons, William Francis Hungerford Grey and Leopold James Henry Grey, and all the children by his present wife.

The will (dated May 18, 1869) with three codicils (dated Dec. 23, 1871; March 3, 1874; and Aug. 6, 1875) of Mrs. Diana Caroline Brown, late of No. 72, Marina, St. Leonard's, who died on May 11 last, was proved on the 25th ult. by her husband, Henry Alexander Brown, and Arthur Henry Clerke Brown, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testatrix bequeaths £100 each to the Church Pastoral Aid Society, the Soldiers' Friend and Army Scripture Readers Society, and the Friend of the Clergy Corporation for the Widows and Orphans of Clergymen; and £50 each to the Scripture Readers' Society, the Church Missionary Society, the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, and the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society. There are a large number of bequests to relatives and others, the principal legatees being testatrix's nieces, Mrs. Lora Lubbock, Miss Caroline Neville, and Miss Augusta Neville.

The will (dated Dec. 20, 1873) with two codicils (dated Feb. 13, 1875, and April 16, 1878) of Mr. Ramsay Robinson Clarke, late of No. 42, Jermyn-street, and of No. 9, Argyle-place, Regent-street, who died on April 20 last, was proved on the 5th ult. by Frederick George Berkeley, the nephew, and Frederick Mowbray Berkeley Calcott, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator, after making some bequests, bequeaths the residue of his property to his sisters Lucy Clarke and Susan Berkeley, and the children of his deceased sister Catherine Bryan.

The will and codicil (both dated July 31, 1872) of Mr. Daniel Birt, late of No. 10, Blessington-road, Lee, Kent, Barrister-at-Law, who died on May 16 last, were proved on the 6th ult. by Mrs. Amelia Birt, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000 The testator bequeaths to his wife £200 and his furniture; and there are a few other legacies. The residue of his estate is left upon trust for his wife for life, or until she marries again, and then for all his children.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

DR. PROSSER JAMES,
Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the world.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1878.

We take for granted that with the close of the present week the Congress at Berlin will have finished its labours and have signed a European Treaty for the present—and, perhaps, for the final—settlement of the "Eastern Question." The result of its deliberations has been stigmatised by some as "a patched up peace," not likely to be maintained unbroken for five years, or for ten, at most. Such a prediction is tinged with party passion. Six weeks ago war was in like manner declared to be inevitable. The forecast, however, has been belied by the event, and it is something to have removed the probability of the awful calamity from the immediate present to the proximate future. But is there any solid reason for anticipating this comparative failure of the work of the Congress. We confess we see none. No doubt, there will be some remaining swell after the storm has passed harmlessly by. Compromises have been effected which leave none of the Powers much room for triumph—Turkey, perhaps, least of all; but, on the whole, there seems a fair prospect that the new arrangements agreed upon will settle down into something like substantial tranquillity, and that the world may resume its industrial and commercial occupations with some confidence that they will not be suddenly disturbed by an outbreak of hostilities. We take leave, therefore, to rejoice in what has been done, not only as an instant good, but as containing within itself the germs of future benefit; and, so far as relates to the Eastern Question in its modern phases, we hope we have heard the last of it.

The interest, however, of the British people in the success of the Berlin Congress is, for the time being, eclipsed by the excitement caused by the official communication to it of the Anglo-Turkish defensive alliance, and of the cession of Cyprus. The Convention which embodies and records these momentous issues is dated June 4. It was kept a profound secret until a few days since. There had been, it is true, rumours, originating in more than one quarter, indicating with more or less definite significance the conclusion now borne out by the facts of the case. There can be no question of the gravity of those facts, looked at from whatever point of view. England is pledged by the document already designated to protect by military force the Asiatic Frontiers of the Sultan's possessions against any future aggression by Russia, and to prevent all future extension of the limits assigned to Russia by the Congress. With a view to this Turkey cedes to England the occupation and administration of the Island of Cyprus so long as Russia retains the territory ceded to her by the Sultan and sanctioned by the Congress. The Ottoman Empire on the other side of the Bosphorus, in fact, is guaranteed to the Porte by her Majesty's Government, and the cession of Cyprus is nominally assented to as a means to the end.

We have no materials for judging how this convention will be regarded by the British Public. The arrangement has been made and may be described as a fait accompli, without any previous consultation either with Parliament, or with the constituencies. It has been like the fall of a thunderbolt from a clear sky. It is, perhaps, the most unqualified exercise of prerogative which has been ventured upon during the present century. It sets aside without ceremony the traditional usage of the Foreign Office. Technically, it is constitutionally correct, as it would be technically correct for her Majesty, upon the advice of her Ministers, to veto any measure which has passed both Houses of Parliament. The right of the Crown to conclude treaties with Foreign Powers is indisputable. But the usual practice has been, informally at least, to take into consideration the ascertained wishes of the country in the exercise of that right in all matters of high importance. In this instance the nation stands pledged to a policy the bearings of which may prove to be incalculably momentous both in regard to its duties and to its interests, without so much as knowing beforehand what has been done in its name. The mode in which the transaction has been effected will, perhaps, be more seriously regarded than the end which has been thus achieved. It is an innovation, and a bold one, upon constitutional custom. It will inevitably challenge energetic discussion; and, although it may be looked upon as morally certain that it will receive the sanction of the present Parliament, it is not at all impossible that it will initiate changes tending rather to the restriction than to the expansion of the action of the Crown in respect of the control of our foreign policy.

Apart from the manner in which the constitutional right of the Sovereign has been employed, the substance of the Convention may be variously criticised. There is, no doubt, something to be said in its favour. The very definiteness of the object at which it aims will tend to promote—and, perhaps, peacefully promote—its successful operation. It brings us face to face with Russia on so sharp a line of separation that it will probably induce caution on both sides, and, by inducing caution, will discourage intrigue. The effect of it will be, we trust, largely beneficial to the subjects of the Porte, whether Mohammedan or Christian, in Syria, Asia Minor, and Mesopotamia; for it is evident that we cannot protect the Turkish Power against external foes without internal interference with such maladministration of Turkish authority as all experience has proved to be most provocative of aggression. The history of India will probably be repeated in the Asiatic possessions of the Sultan. England will stand between that Potentate and his Asiatic subjects, and will feel herself responsible for such reforms as will ensure moderately good government. It may be that she will prevail upon the Turkish Sovereign to call in the aid of tried and skilled administrators from India, and to sustain them in their action for the benefit of the inhabitants. It may be so, we repeat; but what a tremendous accession to our national responsibilities does the possibility involve! The military aspect of the subject is of minor importance as compared with its political bearing. All this has to be maturely considered. We have had put upon us an undertaking which, even if it should confer certain advantage upon Western Asiatic races, may seriously prejudice the interests of our people at home. We refrain from pronouncing any hasty judgment on the thing done, nor do we urge the duty of refusing national responsibility where results greatly conducive to humanity may be anticipated. But, on the other hand, we may rationally pause before assenting to a career which will unquestionably multiply the political obligations of the country and will expose it to dangers which cannot be contemplated without lively apprehension.

Neither the defensive alliance with Turkey nor the cession of Cyprus to England will affect in any way the business of the Congress, nor is it likely to put in peril the Berlin Treaty. It lies outside the range of the affairs which that diplomatic assembly was summoned to discuss and adjust. It will be differently viewed, of course, by different European Powers. It offers no affront to either of them. It can hardly be said to touch their amour propre. It seems a pity, therefore, that it should have come upon them as a coup de théâtre. But its real purport affects England only, and it is here at home that final judgment of it will have to be pronounced.

A down train was leaving Chester on Monday evening, and had reached the junction of the Birkenhead and Holyhead lines, when the last two carriages left the rails, and about thirty persons were injured, one of whom has since died.

The Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by several members of the Horse Guards staff, visited Aldershott on Monday, and witnessed a sham fight by about 16,000 of all arms. The forces were divided into two armies, the northern being commanded by General Wardlaw and the southern by General Anderson. The general idea was that Lieutenant-General Wardlaw's division was supposed to represent the advanced guard of a northern army moving from Wokingham through Frimley, in the direction of the Fox Hills, and Major-General Anderson's division was considered as representing the advanced guard of a southern army marching from the direction of Godalming.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, came to London on Saturday last, and visited the Duchess of Cambridge, at St. James's Palace, where her Majesty met the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Teck. The Queen travelled by a special train on the Great Western Railway to and from Paddington, and returned to Windsor shortly before eight p.m. Mr. and Lady Florence Chaplin and the Lord Chancellor dined with her Majesty. The Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Capel Cure, Rector of St. George's, Hanover-square, officiated. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz visited her Majesty on Monday, and remained to luncheon. Mr. Theodore Martin arrived at the castle, and dined with the Queen. Princess Christian dined with her Majesty on Tuesday. Princess Beatrice came to London and went to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden. The Duke of Connaught accompanied her Royal Highness to the Opera, after which she returned to Windsor. Miss Violet Lindsay arrived at the castle. Count Gleichen visited the Queen on Wednesday, and remained to luncheon. The Judge Advocate-General had an audience of her Majesty. The Queen has taken her usual out-of-door exercise.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales visited the Duchess of Cambridge and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz at St. James's Palace yesterday week. The Duke of Connaught visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House, and remained to luncheon. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz likewise visited their Royal Highnesses. The Grand Duke and the Duke also lunched with the Prince and Princess on Saturday last. Colonel C. S. Gzouski (of Canada), President of the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association, was presented at Marlborough House on Monday to the Prince by Sir John Rose. The Princess, with her daughters, has driven out daily.

The Prince and Princess will have a garden party at Marlborough House this (Saturday) afternoon, to "meet her Majesty the Queen."

The Prince has appointed Captain Henry Frederick Stephenson, C.B., Royal Navy, to be Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness, vice Major John Cecil Russell, resigned, and Major John Cecil Russell to be extra Equerry to his Royal Highness. The Hon. Mrs. A. Hardinge has succeeded the Hon. Mrs. Stonor as Lady in Waiting to the Princess.

The Grand Duke and the Grand Duchess (Princess Alice) of Hesse and Princess Ella arrived at Buckingham Palace yesterday week from Flushing. They were received on landing at Queenborough by Colonel du Platt, Equerry to the Queen, who attended them (travelling on the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway) to London. Shortly before noon their Royal Highnesses left Buckingham Palace and proceeded by the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway to Eastbourne. The Prince and Princess of Wales visited their Royal Highnesses at Buckingham Palace and accompanied them to the Victoria station.

Princess Christian presided on Wednesday at the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Prince Consort's Windsor Association and distributed the prizes, numbering nearly 200.

Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne paid a visit last week to Prince Waldemar and Princesses Victoire, Sophie, and Margaret of Germany, who are staying at the Cavendish Hotel, Eastbourne.

The Duke of Connaught has appointed Captain Maurice Fitzgerald, of the Rifle Brigade, now extra Equerry, to be Equerry to his Royal Highness; also Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur Frederick Pickard, V.C., of the Royal Artillery, to be extra Equerry; and Captain Alfred Mordaunt Egerton, of the Royal Horse Guards, to be Equerry to his Royal Highness, in the room of Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur Frederick Pickard, V.C., of the Royal Artillery, appointed extra Equerry.

Prince Waldemar with Princesses Victoire, Sophie, and Margaret of Prussia, visited the Brighton Royal Aquarium on Monday.

The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz dined with Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatton on Monday at their residence in St. James's-square.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck have dined with the Earl and Countess of Ilchester and with Lady Molesworth.

The Archbishop of Dublin and the Hon. Mrs. Chenevix Trench have arrived in Arlington-street, Piccadilly.

His Excellency the Brazilian Minister and the Baroness de Penedo have left London for the Continent. During the Minister's absence the Chevalier de Souza Correâ will act as Chargé-d'Affaires.

The Duke of Devonshire held his second reception on Wednesday at Devonshire House.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of the Earl of Lonsdale and Lady Gladys Herbert, youngest daughter of Lady Herbert of Lea and sister of the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, was solemnised on Saturday at St. Paul's Church, Wilton-place. The Earl of Lonsdale arrived with the Right Hon. James Lowther, M.P., his best man. The bride, who came with her mother, was received by her brother, the Hon. Sidney Herbert, M.P., who gave her away, in the absence of the Earl of Pembroke, through indisposition. The bridesmaids were Lady Sybil Lowther and Lady Verena Lowther, sisters of the bridegroom, Lady Augusta Rous, and Miss A'Court. The bride wore a pearl-white satin duchesse princesse dress with a long train and ruffles of Brussels point lace. The skirt was trimmed with Brussels point flounces, arranged with fringes of orange-blossoms. Her hair was worn à la Grèque, with a diadem of diamonds and pearls, and wreath of orange-blossoms, over which flowed a long Brussels lace veil, fastened to the hair by diamond stars. Her other jewels were a pearl and diamond necklace, and bracelets en suite. The bridesmaids were dressed in the style of Louis Quinze, with waistcoats of white silk over a jupe of white muslin and lace, the whole being trimmed with gold braid. They wore caps of soft red silk with gold aigrettes, and each wore a diamond arrow brooch, with the initials "G. L." in rubies and diamonds, surmounted by a coronet tipped with pearls, the gift of the bridegroom. The service was performed by the Ven. Archdeacon Buchanan, assisted by the Hon. and Rev. Robert Liddell, the Vicar of St. Paul's. The wedding party afterwards went to Herbert House, Chesham-place, where Lady Herbert of Lea gave a breakfast; and shortly before one o'clock the Earl of Lonsdale and his bride proceeded to Euston, on their way to Lowther Castle, Penrith, where they pass the honeymoon. The Countess's travelling dress was of olive silk and Indian cashmere, with trimmings of shaded gold and fringe, and mantle and bonnet en suite, the latter being ornamented with poppies and shaded gold. The wedding presents were unusually numerous. Prince Leopold presented the Countess with a lace fan mounted in mother-of-pearl. Lord Lonsdale's gifts to his bride were of enormous value, and valuable presents were sent by the tenantry and households upon the several estates of both families and from the inhabitants of Whitehaven.

The marriage of Mr. Walter Hume Long, of Rood Ashton, Wilts, with the Lady Dorothy Boyle, fourth daughter of the Earl and Countess of Cork and Orrery, is fixed to take place on Thursday, Aug. 1, at St. George's Church, Hanover-square; that of le Comte de Lasteyrie and Miss Goodlake is fixed for Saturday, July 20; and that of Miss Whatman to Captain Arthur G. Dugdale, Royal Artillery, on Thursday, July 25, at Boxley church, Kent.

Marriages are arranged between Earl Beauchamp and Lady Emily Pierrepont, daughter of Earl and Countess Manvers; between the Hon. Richard Maitland Dawson, third son of the Earl of Dartrey, and Miss Long, daughter of Colonel Long; also between the Hon. Anthony Lucius Dawson, youngest son of the Earl of Dartrey, and the Hon. Mary Frances de Ros, only child of Lord de Ros; between the Hon. Wilbraham Tollemache, M.P., eldest son of Lord Tollemache of Helmingham, and Miss Mary Stuart Hamilton, youngest daughter of Lord and Lady Claud Hamilton; and between Mr. Gerald Spencer, R.H.A., eldest son of Colonel the Hon. Robert Spencer, and Miss Meyrick, eldest daughter of Sir George Meyrick, Bart., of Hinton Admiral, Hants.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO NOTTINGHAM.

The opening, on Wednesday week, of the new Midland Counties Art-Museum, in the restored buildings of Nottingham Castle, and the festive reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales in that ancient town, with their stay of two or three days at Bestwood Hall, the seat of the Duke of St. Albans, were described in our last publication. We gave Illustrations of the exterior and interior of the Museum, and one of the old Castle, as it existed in the sixteenth century, the edifice more recently called by that name being the stately mansion of the Dukes of Newcastle, in the Greco-Italian style of architecture, which has been left in ruins since the incendiary fire of the Reform Bill riots in 1831. Several Illustrations are now presented of the procession that escorted their Royal Highnesses through the town and up to the Castle on Wednesday week, and of the ceremony at the formal opening of the Museum and the Loan Exhibition of works of art prepared for this occasion.

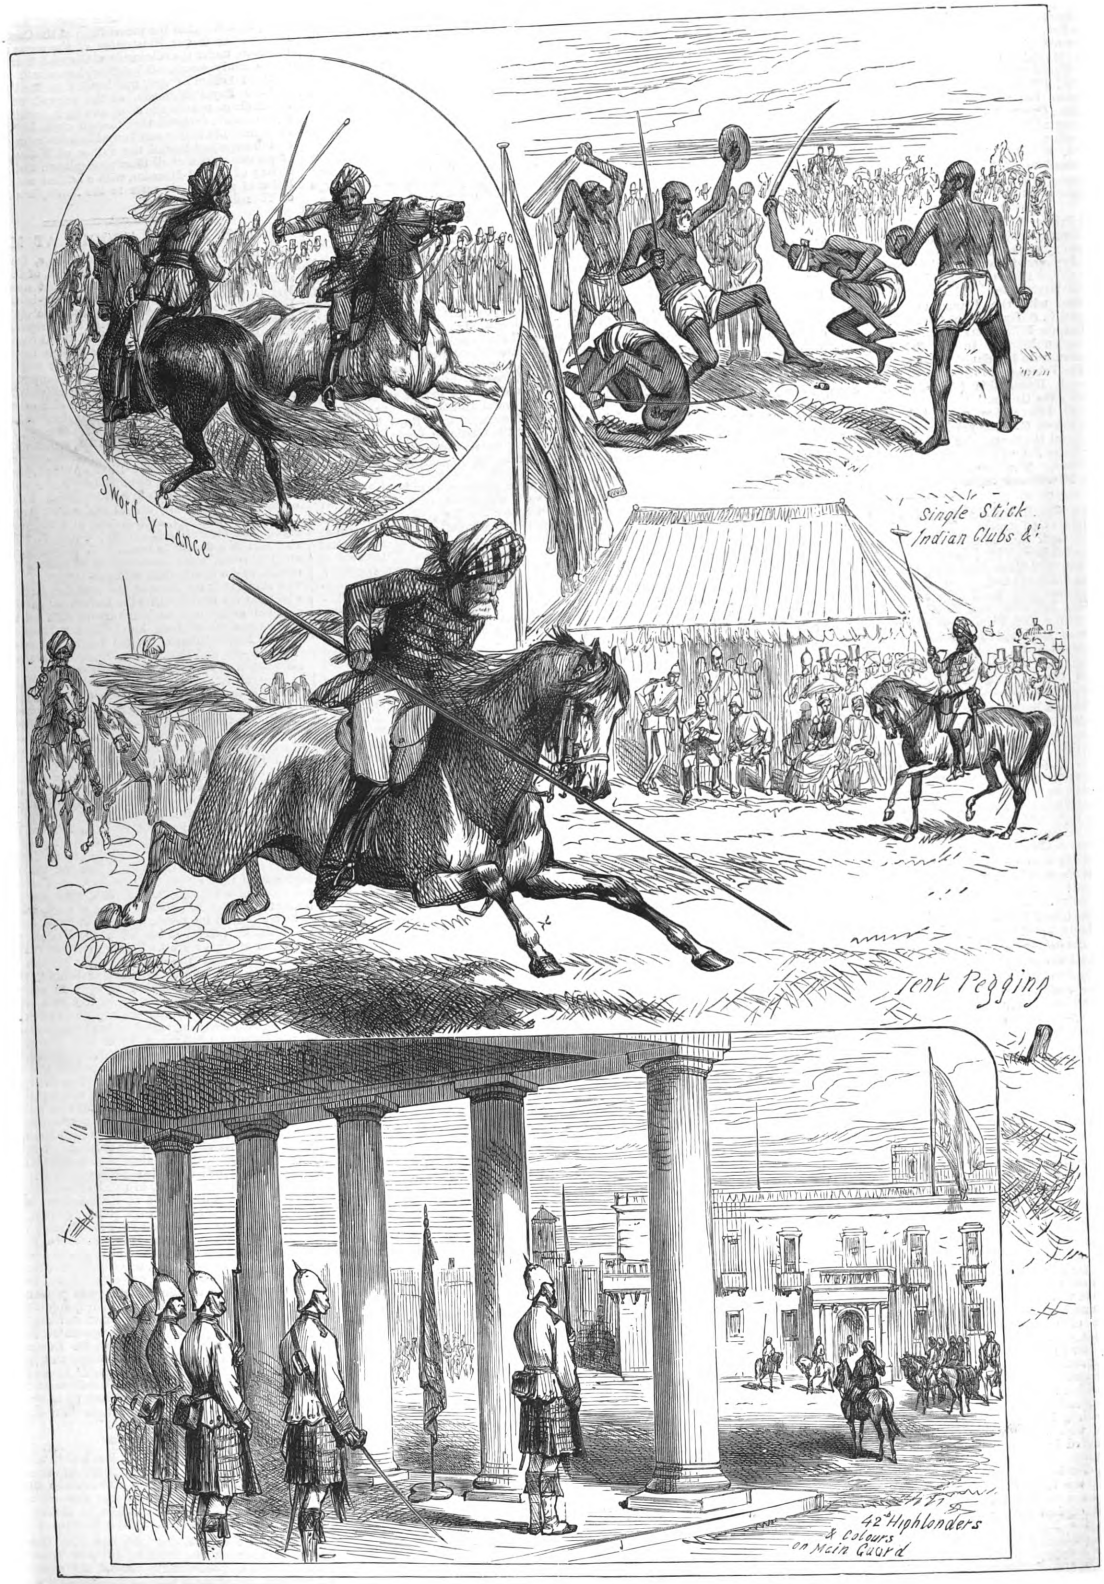
The scene in the well-known picturesque and old-fashioned Market-place, where a vast multitude of Sunday school children were assembled to greet the Royal Visitors with the singing of "God Bless the Prince of Wales," was full of animation. The whole place was decorated upon a systematic and uniform plan. The houses were adorned with festoons of artificial flowers, backed with white lace on a crimson ground, extended below the first-floor windows, and above the continuous row of pillars; a different series of festoons, likewise on a crimson ground, was placed over the windows; there was a trophy, composed of six small flags, between each two windows of the upper storeys, with the flags of all nations at the windows; and larger banners, on flagstaffs, were displayed at the summit of the buildings. One house was entirely covered with bright blue decorations. Along the side pavement were erected poles of ornamental appearance, surmounted by scarlet, blue, or yellow standards, and bearing also trophies of small different-coloured flags, similar to those in the upper front of the houses, with a line of miniature flags stretched all the way between the poles. The Market-place contained, altogether, more than a thousand flags, and the thousand yards of crimson baize, with five hundred yards of lace, were used in its house decorations. In front of Long Row, at the hour of the Royal procession through the town, were gathered about 17,000 children, marshalled in tolerable order by the teachers and superintendents of the Sunday schools. They sang now and then, to beguile the time of waiting, either the National Anthem, or the Old Hundredth, or one of Moody and Sankey's hymns. The procession arrived at the Market-place about half-past twelve o'clock. It was preceded by an escort of the Lancers and the Notts Yeomanry Cavalry. The foremost two carriages were those containing the officials of the Friendly Societies, the Oddfellows, the Foresters, the Albion, and others, attired in their regalia. Next came the Municipal Corporation, the Aldermen and Town Councillors and borough officers; the borough magistrates and the county magistrates; the Dissenting ministers, with the Roman Catholic Bishop and priests; the county and borough members of Parliament; the Mayors of Leicester, Lincoln, Retford, and Grantham, in their robes of office; the Bishop of Lincoln, in his robes, with a Canon bearing the pastoral staff; the High Sheriffs for the county and borough; Lord Belper, Lord Lieutenant of the county; the Mayor of Nottingham, Mr. Oldknow, with the Deputy-Mayor and Town Clerk; and, lastly, the Prince and Princess of Wales, in a carriage-and-four, with outriders and a cavalry escort, followed by other carriages of the Royal party. The procession halted a few minutes while one of the little girls, assisted by the Town Clerk, presented a bouquet of flowers to the Prince and Princess. Miss Laycock, daughter of the High Sheriff, also gave a bouquet. The band played "God Save the Queen," the children sang two or three verses, first, of "God Bless the Prince of Wales," then of the National Anthem, with which their Royal Highnesses were greatly pleased, as well as with the cheering of the immense multitude in the fine old Market-place.

Having spoken of the decorations there, we may also notice the triumphal arches in Derby-road and Mansfield-road, which are shown in the upper compartments of our front-page Engraving. The one in Mansfield-road consisted of a central arch and two side arches, of the Moorish form, brilliant with blue, crimson, and gold, divided by two square towers, each surmounted with four corner flagstaffs and one taller central flagstaff, bearing crowns and banners; the sides of the towers were open, filled with beautiful plants and flowers, under a blue and white canopy, and decorated with lace, arranged in geometrical patterns within a gilt border. The side arches were draped and adorned with various devices; over the central arch was an escutcheon with the Prince's feathers, and a trophy of flags. This arch in Mansfield-road was erected from the design of Mr. Dutton Walker, architect, of Nottingham, and was decorated by Messrs. Piggott Brothers, of London, under the superintendence of Mr. W. Smith, of the Corporation Estates' Office. The triumphal arch in Derby Road, at the corner of the Post Office, was erected by the members of the Nottingham Rowing Club. This likewise consisted of a central and two side arches, which displayed a combination of evergreens and lace on a crimson ground; it was surmounted by one of the eight-oared outrigger racing-boats of the Club, with light masts at the bow and stern, supporting a cord and many little flags; the side arches were adorned with shields upon crossed oars, bearing the Royal Arms and the initials "N.R.C." It should have been mentioned that the decorations of the Market-place were supplied by Messrs. Wemersley and Co., of Middlesborough-on-Tees, Yorkshire.

We omitted last week to state that Messrs. John Elgin and Co., of Long-lane, West Smithfield, London, were employed by the Corporation of Nottingham for the decorations of the Exchange, the Castle and grounds, and the Royal Pavilion; and it was the same firm, not Messrs. Defries, that contracted for the street illuminations at night.

The entrance to the grounds of Nottingham Castle, from Park-drive and Lenton-road, is shown in our Artist's sketch of the arrival of the Prince and Princess there; it was prettily adorned with bannerets and pennons, and the 85th Regiment, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Brownrigg, were drawn up along the road as a guard of honour. We have given an account of the proceedings at the Castle, and will now merely refer to our Illustration of the scene at the principal entrance, under the colonnade of the west front, where the key of the newly-completed building, henceforth to belong to the Midland School of Art, was handed to the Prince of Wales; and his Royal Highness, at the request of the Mayor of Nottingham, opened the door, and then, turning to the company outside, declared the Museum open, inviting them all to come in. The Mayor and Town Clerk are represented standing on the steps just behind the Prince of Wales. For the more ample description of all these proceedings, and for a complete history of the Art-Museum, with a critical notice of the exhibition of pictures, we refer to the Nottingham Daily Guardian of Thursday, the 4th inst.

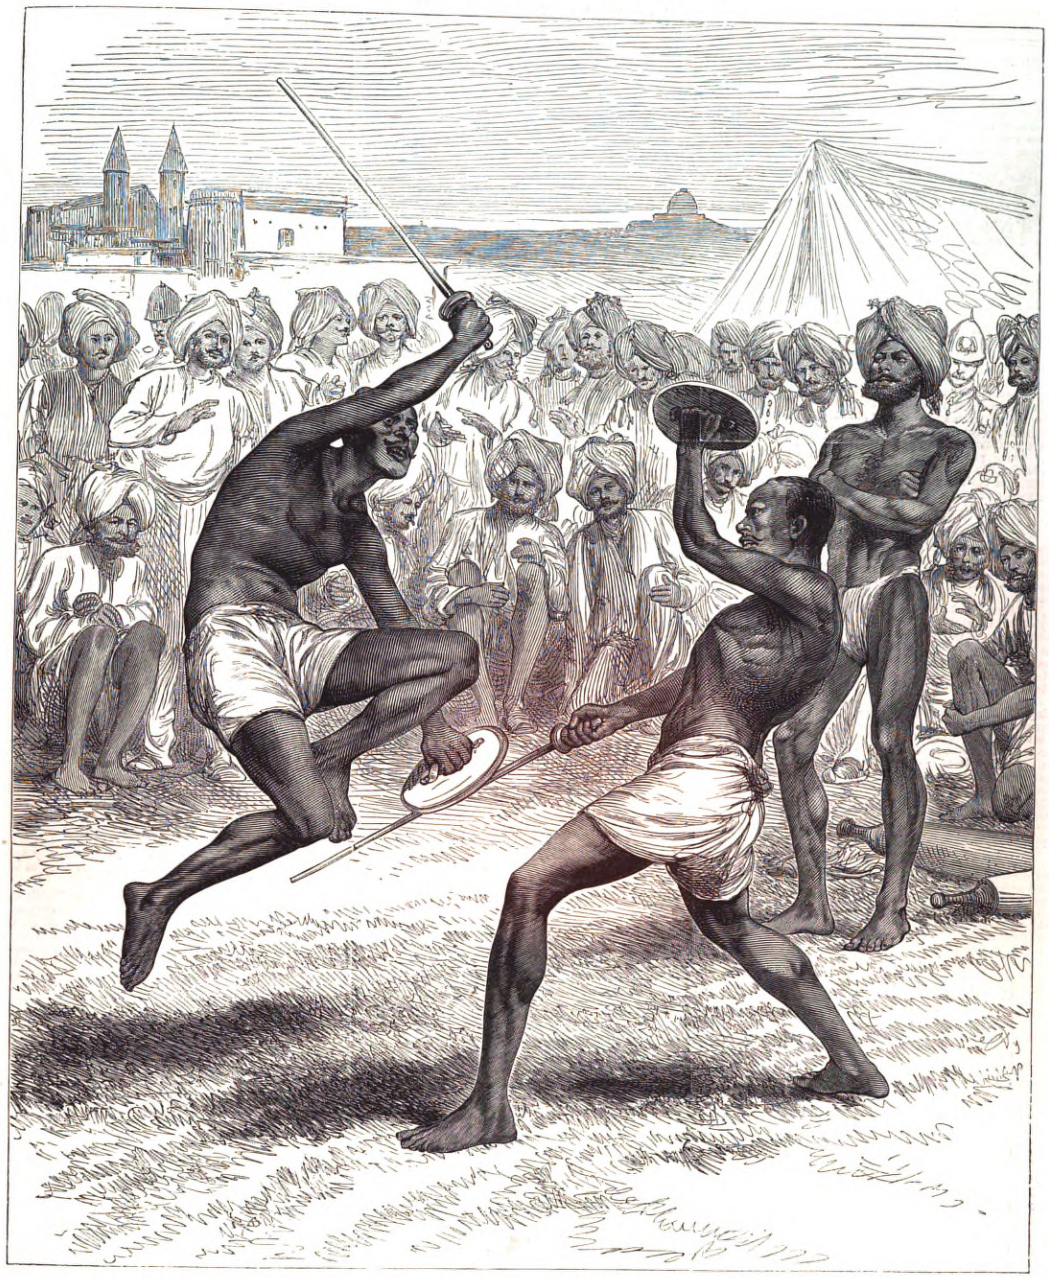
THE INDIAN TROOPS AT MALTA.



We present several additional Illustrations, from Sketches by Lieutenant Allan Gilmore, 61st Regiment, of the Indian native soldiery, both infantry and cavalry, just now stationed at Malta. The Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who lately travelled from England to Malta and back for the sole purpose of inspecting these Indian troops, held a levée at the Governor's Palace on the 19th ult., at which the native Indian regimental officers were formally presented to him by their respective Colonels; and it is this scene which forms the subject of one of our Illustrations. His Royal Highness, wearing his Field Marshal's uniform, with the blue, red, and white sash of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and several stars and crosses on his breast, will at once be recognised. General Sir A. Borton, K.C.B., the new Governor of Malta, stands at his left hand, with two aides-de-camp behind him, wearing red tunics and blue trousers. Facing the Duke of Cambridge are General Sir James Talbot Airey, commanding the infantry brigade at Malta, and two Admirals in naval uniform. The native officers of the Bengal Cavalry are in the act of passing before the Commander-in-Chief, and saluting him, at the same time presenting the hilts of their swords for him to touch. They are clad each in a dark blue tunic, with red cuffs, white breeches and top-boots, a red cummerbund or sash, with gold filigree tassels, and a blue turban with gold stripes. The native officers who stand next are those of the 13th Bengal Native Infantry, who wear red tunics with blue facings down the centre, and gold border and buttons, blue turbans with red tassels and gold fringe, and blue-black knickerbocker trousers. The 25th Madras Native Infantry, in red tunics and green facings and white stocks, and the 2nd or Prince of Wales's Goorkhas, in Rifle uniform, appear in the background.

The exhibition of a variety of Indian military sports and games, both in the camp and on the ground of the Marsa, before the Duke of Cambridge and the Governor, was viewed with interest by a pretty large assemblage of spectators. In one of our Illustrations, a native officer of "Hodson's Horse," galloping at full speed with lance carried low, is about to transfix a tent-peg stuck in the ground before him, so as to bear it off in triumph. The Duke of Cambridge and Sir Arthur Borton are seated in front of the marquee of large tent, with several of their staff standing behind them; and the general company, both ladies and gentlemen, are sitting or lounging about to the right and the left hand. The upper corner of the page shows a sort of medley of four different kinds of athletic exercises going on at once for the entertainment of his Royal Highness. Two of the figures, again represented in a separate Engraving, on the opposite page, are those of a Goorkha and a Sikh, who are engaging in a bout at single-stick. Each man has a stick, which is padded, so as not to hurt too much, in his right hand, and a very small round shield, carried on his left hand, but no protection for the head, chest, or arms. There were two Sikhs opposed to one Goorkha, and the Sikhs were by far the finer looking men. The performance of the man behind, with a pair of Indian clubs, is one familiar enough to every amateur of gymnastic or athletic exercises in our own country. The figures of tumbling swordsmen require some explanation. A man is blindfolded, and seated on his haunches on the ground, in the Oriental fashion; a fig is then placed between his heels, which are set close together. A sword is now put into his hand, and he takes a leap into the air, of course tossing up the fig with his heels in making the spring from the ground. He whirls round in the air, making almost a circle, and tries to hit and cut the fig, without ever seeing it, before it falls. In the last figure, at the left corner, a man with a pair of long, pliant, elastic swords, one in each hand, is seen rolling his body over and over on the ground. The swords going round and round with him, above and below him, it was wonderful to see how he avoided cutting himself. Another feat was to use the pair of swords in a series of whirling movements, like those done with a pair of Indian clubs, but frequently passing the sword-blades, with great rapidity, between the arms and the naked body, and yet not inflicting a wound.

The main guard at the grand entrance the Governor's Palace during the stay of his Royal Highness was increased so as to consist of one Captain, one subaltern officer with regimental colour, two sergeants, one corporal, and thirty privates. The colour, under double sentries, was placed in a stand beneath the portico of the main guard, opposite the Palace. The open space between the main guard and the Palace is for the guard mounting parade at the appointed hour, but is a common lounge for the Maltese townsfolk. In our Illustration of this subject, the Duke of Cambridge and the Governor appear coming out of the Palace, with six Lancers riding before them. The guard, composed of a detachment of the 42nd Highlanders, with their colour, is drawn up in open order, the officers in front saluting, the men at the "Present!" and the bugler sounding the "general salute."



The Manchester Chicago Relief Fund Committee have in hand an unappropriated balance of £2053. At a meeting held on Monday it was resolved that this amount, less £100 which is to go to the Haydock Explosion Relief Committee, should be divided amongst the medical charities of Manchester, on the same principle as the Hospital Sunday Fund is divided.

The Bristol Post says that Mr. and Mrs. George Müller landed at Liverpool on Sunday, on their return from the United States, and came on to Bristol the next day. They were present at the usual Monday evening service at Bethesda Chapel, when Mr. Müller said that he had travelled more than 19,000 miles since he was last in Bristol, and had preached 249 times, in more than 200 churches, and had written invitations to 108 places in America, beside those to which he went. Both he and Mrs. Müller are in excellent health.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The complete returns of the results of the twenty-two elections held in France on Sunday show that of the candidates returned seventeen are Republicans and three are Conservatives. In two cases a second ballot will be necessary. The Republicans won fourteen fresh seats, and the majority now numbers about 380.

M. de Freycinet, the Minister of Public Works, has accepted an invitation from the Municipality of Boulogne to lay the foundation-stone of the new harbour. He has appointed Sept. 2 for the ceremony.

The Shah of Persia, before his departure from Paris, conferred the First Class of the Order of the Lion and Sun on Sir Albert Sassoon, in recognition of encouragement and assistance rendered by him in past years to Persian commerce.

The Duke of Sutherland and the Duke of Westminster have arrived in Paris.

M. Thulie has been elected President of the Paris Municipal Council.

A duel with swords was fought on the 4th inst., on the Luxembourg frontier, between Señor Caicedo, Minister of San Salvador in Paris, and Señor Medina, Minister of Guatemala. Señor Caicedo was slightly wounded in the shoulder.

The press pavilion at the Exhibition was opened last Saturday with speeches by M. Spuller and M. Berger. The Exhibition juries are busy, and five honorary medals to French painters have already been awarded—viz., to MM. Meissonnier, Cabanel, Gérome, Français, and Bouguereau. The international chess tournament is now progressing at the Palais de l'Industrie. Some particulars will be found in our Chess column. The English concerts at the Exhibition are fixed for the 17th, 18th, and 20th inst. As will be seen in our Music column, the Prince of Wales has greatly interested himself to ensure a worthy representation of English music.

Alberty de Cadenet, chief mechanician at the Grand Hotel, Paris, has been condemned to a month's imprisonment and 200f. fine as being partly responsible for the accident to the lift by which three persons lost their lives in February last. The evidence showed that fissures had gradually formed in the cast-iron cornice attaching the hydraulic piston to the framework of the lift.

Martin, the furniture broker in the Rue St. Lazare, Paris, who inveigled a collector of the Société Générale into his shop on the pretence of getting change for a 1000f. bank-note, and then murdered him, was tried on Monday. He received a good character as a husband and father, and the jury gave him the benefit of extenuating circumstances. He was sentenced to hard labour for life.

SPAIN.

The King and Royal family left Madrid on the 4th inst. for the Escurial, where the funeral service for the late Queen Mercedes is to be held. The ceremonies, which will be carried out at the expense of the State on a most magnificent scale, have been postponed from the 10th to the 17th inst. Great preparations are being made for the ceremonial, and the musical Society of Madrid has engaged to perform the Requiem Mass on the occasion.

The Government has conferred on General Martinez Campos the Golden Fleece worn by the late King of Hanover, and has appointed General Jovellar Captain-General of Cuba.

ITALY.

The Court mourning for King Victor Emmanuel ended on the 10th inst., on the morning of which day the new ironclad Dandolo was launched at Spezia. The King and Queen, with the Ministers, arrived at eight o'clock, the senators and members of the Chamber of Deputies at nine. Some 50,000 spectators had assembled. The city was magnificently decorated, and the ships in the port were gaily dressed out. Queen Margherita christened the ship, which, however, did not glide quite off her stays, and had to be pulled into the water by two powerful vessels. The Dandolo is one of the largest vessels in the Italian navy; it is armour-plated, with two turrets, armed with four guns of 100 tons; engines constructed by Penn, of Greenwich, 7500-horse power; tonnage, 10,569; money value, 13,920,000 lire. The Duilio, launched from the dockyard of Castellamare on May 8, 1876, is the exact counterpart of the Dandolo. Other sixteen ironclads complete the first category of the men-of-war of the Italian fleet, including the Italia and Lepanto still in construction, the Palestro, Principe, Amadeo, Roma, Venezia, Maria Pia, Conte Verde, Castelfidardo, Ancona, S. Martino, Affondatore, Terribile, Formidabile, Varese, and Messina.

The Chamber of Deputies was prorogued on Monday until November. Duke Colonna da Cesaro, one of the most distinguished of the younger members of the Chamber, died at Leghorn on the same day of heart disease. He was for some time Attaché to the Italian Embassy at London, and in 1862 left that service to take part in the expedition to Aspromonte.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Prince Auersperg, the President of the Council of Ministers, tendered the resignation of the members of the Austrian Cabinet to the Emperor Francis Joseph yesterday week. His Majesty has addressed an autograph letter to Prince Auersperg intrusting him with the direction of the Ministry of the Interior, but reserving his decision in regard to the resignation of the Ministry. His Majesty has, however, acceded to the request of the Minister of the Interior, Baron de Lasser, to be allowed to resign on account of bad health, and has conferred upon him the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Stephen, creating him at the same time a life member of the Upper House of the Reichsrath.

The President of the Chamber of Deputies of the Austrian Reichsrath, Dr. Rechbauer, has been appointed Privy Councillor of his Majesty.

The Shah of Persia arrived at Vienna on the 5th inst. His Majesty, who was received at the railway station by the Emperor Francis Joseph, proceeded to the Hofburg, the Imperial residence. State banquets have been given in honour of the Shah.

The commencement of the occupation of Bosnia and the Herzegovina has been postponed until August.

SERVIA.

In opening the Skuptschina on Sunday Prince Milan, in his speech from the throne, stated the motives for entering upon a second campaign against Turkey, and thanked the national militia for their services in the field. His Highness dwelt upon the article of the Treaty of San Stefano relative to the independence of Servia and the extension of her territory, and expected that the Congress would sanction Servian independence and increase Servian territory by those districts in which Servians for centuries past have demanded union with Servia. The Prince also hoped from the justice and goodwill of the Great Powers an amelioration in the condition of the Servian countries not united with Servia. Servia, independent and enlarged, would, he said, acquire fresh strength for the development of all the national forces. The Prince concluded by recommending the Skuptschina to confine itself to the most pressing matters, such as the Budget, the laws enacted during the war, the discussion of the law upon invalided soldiers, and the reorganisation of the active army.

Senator Matie has been elected President and M. Vasits Vice-President of the Skuptschina.

Prince Milan has issued a proclamation in which he announces the independence of Servia, and expresses a belief that it will be recognised by Europe. He thanks the Congress for what it has done in favouring Servian aspirations, and calls upon the national representatives to be prepared for further financial sacrifices.

AMERICA.

President Hayes, in a speech at the commemorative celebration of the battle of Wyoming, spoke in favour of a policy of equity and good faith towards the Indians, and said that if war became necessary he would give the commanders the means to conduct it successfully.

A disastrous encounter with the Indians is reported in American telegrams. Fifty volunteers under Captain Sperry, who marched to Willow Springs, thirty miles south of Pendleton, to scout in the Indian country south of Columbia River, were ambuscaded by the hostile Indians on Saturday, and the entire company killed or wounded, except seven. Captain Sperry himself was among the killed. Intelligence has been received by the Government that, in order to prevent the crossing of the Indians, the Columbia river is being guarded by the Federal troops.

General Howard reports that on Monday last he advanced from the south-west in two columns, and attacked the hostile Indians at Butler Creek. The Indians were strongly posted on a steep ridge, but, after a stubborn contest, were driven to another position in the rear, which the troops stormed and captured; the Indians retreating, were pursued five miles, abandoning their horses, provisions, and camp materials. The loss on the side of the United States troops is said to have been trifling. General Howard has opened communications with General Wheaton on the Columbia River.

CANADA.

By the latest telegrams we learn that disturbances were feared at Montreal at the Orange celebrations on the 12th inst. The Mayor has issued a proclamation stating that no crowds would be allowed to assemble, and that measures would be taken to preserve the peace and arrest all disturbers. The Orange leaders have taken legal opinion as to the legality of this proclamation, and have therefore given notice that the procession would take place. The Government, at the request of four magistrates on Montreal, has ordered 2000 men to encamp in Dominion-square on the 11th inst., under Major-General Smyth, who was to be sworn Peace Commissioner. The Mayor of Montreal has gone to Ottawa to endeavour to prevent the troops from being called out, and, if the measure should be persisted in, to have them placed under his own direction. He has stated that, if the magistrates should have the direction of the troops, he should retire from all active participation in the efforts to preserve order. Six regiments and two battalions of artillery were on Thursday stationed in different parts of Montreal.

Forbearance on the occasion of the Orange celebration was unanimously counselled by the Protestant and Catholic ministers of Montreal in their sermons on Sunday last. The Catholic Bishop of Montreal has issued a pastoral letter urging all Catholics to keep the peace, to support the authorities, and to abstain from alcoholic liquors on the 12th inst. A meeting of 10,000 Irish and French Canadians was held at Montreal on Monday night, at which resolutions were unanimously passed upholding the Mayor.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

News has been received from the Cape by way of Madeira to June 18. Edmund Sandili, the Gaika chief, is still negotiating with the Colonial Government respecting terms of peace. The sub-chief Namba surrendered unconditionally on June 11. A Times telegram says:—With the death of the Chief Sandilli, Seyolo, and Anto, and the surrender of Dhimba, the Kaffir rebellion is at an end. General Thesiger will come to Cape Town next week, and then proceed to Natal. The principal defensive measures proposed by the Ministry have passed the Assembly. The Budget speech proposes fresh taxation to the amount of about £200,000.

AUSTRALIA.

The Victoria Parliament was opened on the 9th inst. by Sir George Bowen, the Governor, who, in his speech on the occasion, announced the introduction of bills for a new loan for public works and for the purchase of the Hobson's Bay Railway. His Excellency also announced that an International Exhibition will be held at Melbourne in 1880. Another telegram from Melbourne states that the Mayor and Secretary for Public Works have placed Carlton Gardens in the possession of the Commissioners for the purposes of the Exhibition, and tenders for the building, in accordance with the accepted design, will be called for immediately. All parties are unanimous in the desire to make the exhibition a success.

A telegram from Brisbane dated the 6th inst. says that the Queensland revenue for the last financial year has slightly exceeded the Ministerial estimate. The colonisation of New Guinea is attracting increased attention, and a rush to the gold districts there is expected. The Governor of the Fiji Islands being absent, it is expected that the High Commissioner's jurisdiction in New Guinea will devolve on the Governor of Queensland.

NEW ZEALAND.

A telegram from Wellington, New Zealand, dated the 6th inst., says:—"Sir George Grey has had a most satisfactory interview with the Maori chief Rewi at Waitara. Rewi gives his entire adherence to the Government. Another meeting is arranged for September with Rewi and the native king jointly to arrange for the completion of the Government system of railroads through the North Island. It is believed that no difficulties will arise in making necessary arrangements, and that the natives will probably give land for purchase.

The Newfoundland Legislature has been dissolved.

Hödel, who made an attempt on the life of the Emperor of Germany, was tried on Wednesday and sentenced to death.

Princess Salm-Salm, the well-known authoress, died at Würzburg, on the 9th inst.

A son of the Khedive is, by special permission of the Queen, about to enter the Royal Military Academy as a cadet.

The Dowager Queen Caroline Amalia of Denmark completed her eighty-second year on the 5th inst. Her Majesty is the oldest living member of the Royal families in Europe.

It is announced in a telegram from Batavia that large reinforcements of Dutch troops are being sent to Atchin, where it is rumoured that a serious outbreak has occurred.

The Oaklands, Captain W Lawrence, chartered by Sir Arthur Bligh, K.C.M.G., Agent-General for South Australia, left Plymouth on the 5th inst. for Port Adelaide with 384 emigrants, among whom were eighty-five single female domestic servants.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Stockbridge proper was as enjoyable a meeting as ever in many respects, though the epidemic, which has run through as many of the chief stables, caused the racing to be rather below the usual standard. Backers received a terrible blow in the Stockbridge Cup, in which they laid odds of 9 to 2 on Lollypop, and then had the mortification of seeing Ecossais hold him quite safe at every part of the journey, and finally beat him in a canter by three lengths. We remember that in 1874 it was confidently predicted that Ecossais's fore legs would never carry him to the end of that season; and yet, at seven years of age, he is as sound as possible, and capable of carrying all sorts of weights, and of winning races in the best company. Truly, "never prophesy unless you know" is a wise maxim. Scapegrace earned fresh laurels in the Mottisfont Stakes by defeating Strathern cleverly, though only in receipt of 2 lb., and the son of Wild Oats must be one of the best youngsters that have run this season. On the Friday the rich Hurstbourne Stakes produced a rather poor field, and was won by Caxtonian, a son of Sterling and Countess Agnes. T. Cannon, the popular jockey, had a very successful two days, as he carried off four races with his own horses, and rode the same number of winners.

The July Meeting—the most pleasant of any held at Newmarket—commenced on Tuesday, and was honoured by the presence of the Prince of Wales, who was the guest of Count Festetic. The first race of importance was the July Stakes, for which the Adventurer—Lady Morgan colt, now named Ruperra, who was amiss when he won his first engagement at Ascot, had been specially reserved. Gunnersbury and Leghorn also emerged from temporary retirement. The remaining five competitors were all "dark," the best-looking of them being Rayon d'Or, a son of Flageolet and Araucaria, and therefore half-brother to Chamant. He is, however, still very backward, and will do much better later in the season. Gunnersbury made the running at such a pace that he had Ruperra in difficulties before they had gone more than half way; but Fordham, who had no spurs, rode him with immense determination; and the colt, struggling on with marvellous gameness, caught Gunnersbury, who was then swerving about from distress, and won by a length. Ruperra is not yet nearly so fit as he can be made; and his victory in the Derby next season, with Fordham on his back, would be one of the most popular that has ever been accomplished. Trappist (9 st. 7 lb.), the favourite for the Cheveley Stakes, was hopelessly out of it after he had gone a quarter of a mile, and the uncertain Chevron (8 st.) won as he liked. The Exeter Stakes on Wednesday was not far enough for Lansdown, who was only third to a filly of the Duke of St. Alban's, called High and Mity. She is a daughter of Parmesan and Nobiesse; so her name, though by no means elegant, is singularly apt. Some remarkably speedy horses ran for the July Cup, including Lollypop, Julius Cæsar, Redwing, Trappist, and Ecossais. The weights were too much against Lord Falmouth's filly to give her a chance of success, and Trappist carried 10 st. 11 lb., including the full penalty of 12 lb. He and Ecossais had all the best of the start, and nothing but Lollypop ever got near them, Trappist eventually beating Ecossais by a clever half length, while Lollypop was about the same distance from the second. The meeting of Jannette and Thurio, over the Bunbury Mile, was watched with intense interest, and the result has made the former as good a favourite as Insulaire for the Leger. Certainly Thurio was attempting to concede 8 lb.; but the filly appeared to have more than that amount of weight in hand as she passed the post.

We regret to note that the sale of the Middle Park Yearlings, which took place last Saturday, was by no means a success, the fifty-four realising a total of 11,585 gs. only, or an average of about 214 gs., which shows a marked falling off from last season. Only two lots reached four figures, a splendid son of Rosicrucian and Anderida, for whom Lord Rosebery gave 1100 gs., and the Macaroni—Lady Sophia colt (1200 gs.). There were no less than thirteen young Rosicrucians, and we can imagine how the average they made—383 gs.—would have been increased if the unfortunate Beauclerc had been in a condition to win the Derby. At the time of writing the sales of blood stock at Newmarket seem very poorly supported; but we shall be better able to allude to them next week.

Both cricket-matches between the Gentlemen and Players resulted in favour of the former, and it must have been specially galling to the professionals to lose the first of them. They were only beaten by fifty-six runs, and of the 278 obtained by their opponents, no less than 148 were made by Messrs. W. G. and G. F. Grace, who, it is notorious, have no claim to appear among the amateurs. The bowling of Mr. A. G. Steel was as successful as usual, and proved fatal to nine wickets. At Lord's the scoring was far heavier, and the Players were defeated by 206 runs. Selby (88 and 64) batted magnificently, as did Emmett (57 and 47); but, with the exceptions of Midwinter (16 and 24) and Pooley (35 and 15), no one else did much. Long scores were very plentiful on the other side, W. G. Grace (90), A. P. Lucas (18 and 91), the Hon. A. Lyttelton (53), the Hon. E. Lyttelton (44 and 66), A. W. Ridley (58), and A. G. Steel (41) doing most of the rungetting, and nothing finer than the batting of Lucas, Grace, the Hon. E. Lyttelton, and the two professionals we have already mentioned, has been seen this season. Last week the Australians defeated an Eighteen of Stockport by 149 runs, the feature of the match being the fine batting of Messrs. T. Horan (14 and 70) and G. H. Bailey (34 and 35). This week they met a very strong team representing the Orleans Club and Ground. A. Bannerman (not out, 71) and Mr. T. Horan (64) batted in rare form; but, on the other side, Messrs. T. E. R. Fryer (61), C. J. Thornton (40), and I. D. Walker (not out, 60) scored very fast, and the match was drawn much in favour of the Orleans Club. This was, we believe, the first match played at the Orleans Club, and one can only regret that such a perfect ground is not a little larger.

For once Henley Regatta escaped without rain, and the meeting was a brilliant success in every way, the attendance being enormous, and the racing closer and more exciting than we ever previously remember to have seen it. The Thames R.C., favoured by the station, beat the Cambridge eight for the final of the Grand Challenge Cup; and, for about the eighth year in succession, the London R.C. took the Stewards' Cup for fours. The Diamond Sculls was at the mercy of Edwardes-Moss, after his fluky defeat of G. W. Lee, the American sculler, on the previous day; and the Silver Goblets were an equally good thing for him and Ellison. One of the most generally popular victories of the day was that of the Columbia College crew in the Visitors' Challenge Cup, as every one would have been sorry to see the plucky Americans fail to take a prize, especially after the unlucky mistake which deprived Lee of a well-earned triumph.

Rear-Admiral Commerell, a Constantinople despatch says, while in one of the boats of his flag-ship near Gallipoli, was caught in a sudden storm. Three of the boat's crew were drowned, and the Admiral himself narrowly escaped.

THE CHURCH.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Brandram, T. P., Lecturer of the Theological College, Chichester, to be Priest, Vicar, and Succentor of Chichester Cathedral.
Mackey, D. J.; Canon and Precentor of St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth.
Sheppard, Henry Drought; Rector of St. Peter's, Wallingford, Berks.
Tanner, J.; Rector of Chipping Ongar, Ch. Ch.
Vernon, Canon; Rector of Etton, Yorkshire.—Guardian.

Forty Bishops preached in the churches of the metropolis on Sunday, thirty-one being foreign or colonial.

Bishop Maclagan was enthroned in Lichfield Cathedral on Thursday.

A purse of 100 guineas has been presented to the Rev. J. H. Johnson by his parishioners on his leaving Glen Innes, in the diocese of Grafton and Armidale, for England.

The new archdeaconry of Bodmin has been conferred by the Bishop of Truro on the Rev. Reginald Hobhouse, Rector of St. Ive's, Cornwall, and proctor for the clergy in convocation.

The Bishop of London on Tuesday consecrated the Church of St. Mary Magdalen, Paddington, which has been opened by license for ten years, and which is one of the most complete ecclesiastical buildings in London. His Lordship was attended by Mr. J. B. Lee, his registrar and secretary, and preached.

On Thursday the Festival of the Choirs of the Deaneries of Burnham and Maidenhead was held at Windsor. There was a procession of clergy and surpliced choirs, with banners, to St. John's Church, where Archdeacon Potts preached the sermon. Afterwards the clergy, choirs, and visitors dined in Windsor Home Park, under the marquee used for the Prince Consort's Association.

The Bishop of Winchester has reopened the church of Twyford, Hants, called "the gem of Hampshire villages." The church has been rebuilt from designs by Mr. Waterhouse, at a cost of £9000, of which Sir T. Fairbairn (to the memory of whose children one of the windows is filled with stained glass) has contributed a large portion. In pulling down the old nave evidences of work anterior to the transitional style of the Church of St. Cross, at Winchester, were found.

At St. Nicholas parish church, Newbury, a flower sermon was preached on Sunday by the Rector, the Rev. E. Imber Gardiner. After the sermon some hundreds of bouquets of beautiful flowers were carried by the children to the chancel, and deposited in large baskets arranged within the communion rails. A collection was made in behalf of the Children's Hospital, Great Ormond-street, and in the evening the flowers were dispatched by the Great Western Railway to that and similar institutions in the metropolis.

The Bishop of St. Albans on Tuesday consecrated a new church, dedicated to Holy Trinity, at Leytonstone, where there is a growing poor population. The church is of Early Gothic architecture, and will contain 800 persons. All the seats are free. The church has been built by Mr. James Brown, of Finsbury-pavement, at a cost of about £6500, this being exclusive of gifts by neighbouring residents and others of a handsome font, lectern, &c. An anonymous donor has given a site for a parsonage and Sunday schools.

Dr. Tyrrell, Bishop of Newcastle, New South Wales, has announced that he has by his will given £250,000 to the various funds in the diocese. The following shows the amounts required and the various funds which are to be endowed:—the Bishop's income of £1200 a year, £30,000; the stipends of dignitaries—one Archdeacon, £5000; three Canons and Rural Deans, £6000—£11,000; clergy stipends, £100,000; superannuated clergy, £10,000; fund—sick clergy, £5000; new clergy, £25,000; the training of future clergy, £25,000; the religious education of the young, £44,000.

The New Testament Company met on Tuesday in the Jerusalem Chamber, for their eighty-second session, and sat each day this week until Friday inclusive. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol presided. The other members present were the Archbishop of Dublin, the Deans of Lincoln, Lichfield, and Rochester, Archdeacons Lee and Palmer, the Master of the Temple, Professors Lightfoot, Kennedy, D. Brown, Milligan, and Newth, Dr. Scrivener, Dr. Vance Smith, Mr. Humphry, and the secretary, Mr. Troutbeck. They proceeded with the second revision of the Epistle to the Ephesians.

On the 29th ult. the Bishop of Winchester consecrated a chapel-of-ease and burying ground for that part of the parish of Stour Provost which is known as Stour-row. The building, which was erected about ten years ago, mainly through the exertions of the late Rector, the Rev. R. Barrett, cost about £1200, the chief contributors being the Marchioness of Westminster, King's College, Mr. A. Morrison, and Mr. Barrett himself. It will accommodate about 150 worshippers.—The Right Rev. Prelate has also reopened the parish church of Buriton, which has undergone a thorough restoration, the tower being the only portion of the structure that did not require renovation. By means of a subscription, a new chancel window has been inserted in memory of Mary, the wife of J. M. Sumner, Rector of Buriton, by the parishioners. In the southern aisle there is a memorial window of the late Mr. John Bonham-Carter.

The Pan-Anglican Synod resumed its sittings at the palace on the 4th inst.—the Archbishop of Canterbury presiding. The subject discussed at the morning sitting was "The position of Anglican Chaplains and Chaplaincies on the Continent of Europe and Elsewhere," the speakers being the Bishops of London, Gibraltar, Long Island, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Carlisle; Bishop Claughton, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Oxford, and the Bishop of Antigua. In the afternoon the subject considered was, "Modern Forms of Infidelity, and the Best Means of Dealing with Them"—the speakers being the Bishops of Ohio, Killaloe, Peterborough, Lincoln, Oxford, Gloucester and Bristol, Winchester, Montreal, Llandaff, the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of Bombay, Saskatchewan, Bloemfontein, and the president. Both subjects were referred to a committee.—On the 5th the Synod discussed the condition, progress, and needs of the various Churches of the Anglican communion, and, having appointed a committee further to consider the subject, adjourned to the 22nd inst.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

The Rev. Richard Greswell, B.D., late Fellow and Tutor of Worcester, has been elected an honorary Fellow in that society.

Mr. Markby, M.A., of Merton College, late one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, has been elected to the lately established readership of Indian Law.

Mr. E. W. Rees, of Repton School, has been elected to a mathematical scholarship at University College.

The vacant demyships at Magdalen College have been awarded as follow:—Classical: Henry Havelock, Wellington College, and John Edward Morris, Repton School. Mathematical: William Hartley Carnegie, Trinity College, Dublin. Natural Science: John Shaw Willes Chitty and George Lindsay Turnbull, Clifton College.

The following gentlemen have been elected to the vacant open scholarships, &c., at Worcester, out of forty-three candidates:—Mr. Nicholson, scholar non ascriptus, and Mr. Hadow, from Malvern College, to the Clarke Scholarships; Mr. Leask, of Merton, to the Cookes Scholarship, open pro hac vice; Mr. Murdock, of the University of Aberdeen, to an open scholarship. Messrs. Balfour, of Marlborough College; Drew, of Clifton College; Clement Price, of Worcester College; Dwyer, of Christ's Hospital; and Hamilton, scholar non ascriptus, have been elected to exhibitions.

The degree of LL.D., honoris causâ, has been conferred on Mr. Cliffe Leslie by the University of Dublin.—The Senior Science Scholarship in Trinity College, Dublin, has been awarded to Swift Johnston, of the High School, Dublin.—The Board of Trinity College, on written apologies from the two students, Fisher and Cowen, suspended from their degrees, have removed the suspensions which had been imposed as penalties for the late riot in the college.

The Earl of Morley on the 28th ult. distributed the prizes to the students of University College for the closing session in the faculties of art and law and science. A report of the progress of the institution was read by the Dean (Professor Morley), after which the noble chairman addressed the assemblage, expressing his particular satisfaction with the increased educational facilities now afforded by the college to women for making themselves fitter to fill their position as home-trainers and as members of society. The pressure upon our space prevents us from giving the long prize list. Some names figure several times among prize-winners; foremost of the pluralists being Mr. D. S. MacColl, Mr. E. P. Jacobson, and Mr. L. H. Edmunds, all of London.

Earl Granville, as Chancellor of the University of London on Tuesday laid the first stone of some new buildings which are to form an addition to University College. The cost is estimated to be between £85,000 and £100,000. Mr. Goschen, M.P., treasurer of the college, read an address, giving an historical narrative of its origin and progress, together with a description of the nature of the work which it had so long carried on. The ceremony of laying the stone was followed by a luncheon, at which Earl Granville, Earl Fortescue, Mr. Lowe, Lord Belper, Professor Henry Morley, Lord Kimberley, the Dean of Westminster, Professor Huxley, and Mr. Lyon Playfair were among the speakers.

Mr. Gladstone gave an address on "Homer" to the members of the Eton College Literary Society last Saturday evening.—The result of the examination for the Physical Science prizes at Eton is as follows:—Geology and Physical Geography—Herries, K.S., 1; Pemberton, 2; Chambers, Bayley, Beaumont, Wood, and Wheeler. Chemistry, Electricity, and Magnetism—Kingston, K.S., 1; Griffith, Thurton, Harrington. The examiners recommended that the prizes should be divided between Herries and Pemberton.

The 4th inst. being Speech-Day at Harrow, a large number of visitors assembled at the school. Dr. Butler, the Head Master, presided, and distributed the prizes to the successful candidates in the late examinations.

The 26th ult. was Speech-day at Rugby School, and was celebrated with all due honours, including the distribution of prizes to the boys and the performance of sundry passages from the classical and the modern drama. The Bishop of Worcester, chairman of the governing body, presided.

The following have been elected to entrance scholarships at Rossall School:—Seniors—H. K. Bather, R. Proude, and A. J. Jameson, Rossall School; A. L. Napier, Rev. A. S. Grenfell's, Parkgate, Cheshire; H. M. E. Price, Rossall School. Juniors—A. H. Davis and A. D. Steel, Rossall School; C. Gibson, Rev. A. G. Humfrey's, Thorpe Mandeville Rectory, Banbury; J. H. Acheson, Rev. J. C. C. Pipon's, Arnold House, Chester; F. W. H. Jones, Christ College, Brecon; R. Davies, Rev. A. G. Humfrey's, Thorpe Mandeville Rectory, Banbury; H. G. Smith and T. H. Vines, Rossall School; J. Armitage, Huddersfield College.

The following have been elected to foundation scholarships at Sherborne:—Turner, Partridge, House ma., Harper mi., Shore, Rev. W. B. Davis, The College, Torquay. To Old Shirburnian scholarships—Lovett, Ellis mi., and Holme. To an extra scholarship for one year—Lys ma. The successful candidates, with one exception, are already members of the school.

General Sir Richard Wilbraham, K.C.B., distributed the prizes and certificates of merit to the successful students in the general literature and applied sciences departments of King's College on the 26th ult.

The 25th ult. was speech-day at Forest School, Walthamstow. J. K. F. Cleave received the King's College prize. Four boys gained certificates under the Oxford and Cambridge board. Several University distinctions appear in the list of honours. There are 130 boys in the school.—On the following Friday the Prince and Princess of Wales halted for a short time on the school bounds, and, by permission of the Prince, the head master presented a short address to their Royal Highnesses. The Prince replied, and begged a day's holiday.

At Clifton College the annual Guthrie commemoration was held on the 29th ult., when the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. C. Bell, Master of Marlborough College. It was announced during the day that subscriptions amounting to nearly £6000 had been promised towards the fund being raised for the enlargement of the chapel, the completion of the quadrangle, and the addition of a racquet-court, as a memorial of Clifton College having been incorporated by Royal charter. The estimated expense of the additional buildings is £9000.

The session at the Baptist College, Regent's Park, closing on the 25th ult., a soirée was held in the evening, when the chair was taken by Sir Charles Reed. The feature of the evening was an address by the Rev. Charles Stanford, D.D., of Camberwell, on "Doddridge, Pastor and Tutor."

The 110th anniversary festival of Cheshunt College was celebrated on the 27th ult.

Blundell's School, Tiverton, held its annual festival on the 28th and 29th ult. At the service on Friday at St. Peter's Church the Archdeacon of Exeter, an old Head Master, preached the sermon. The speeches on St. Peter's Day included scenes from Sheridan's "Critic," Molière's "Avare," and Aristophane's "Equites." The prizes were distributed by the Earl of Devon. The list of distinctions gained by the school since June last year includes three open scholarships at Cambridge, and an exhibition and a first class in the final classical school at Oxford.

Viscountess Falmouth presided on the 2nd inst. at the distribution of prizes to the pupils attending the Burlington Middle-Class School for Girls, in Old Burlington-street.

The Manchester Guardian understands that the sons of the late Sir E. Armitage propose to found four scholarships to his memory in connection with the Manchester Grammar School.

The great Crosby School for the Merchant Taylors' Company, situated near Liverpool, erected at a cost of £12,000, was opened on the 27th ult. The building will supersede an old one founded in 1620, under the will of John Harrison, a citizen of London, whose father was a native of Crosby.

The Rev. Sidney Bolton Kincaid, M.A., has been elected to the Vice-Principalship of the Carmarthen Training College.

The annual distribution of prizes in connection with the North London Collegiate School took place last Saturday at St. James's Hall, the Lord Mayor presiding. The Rev. Charles Williams, head master and principal, read the annual report, which stated that the school was as full as it could conveniently be, the number of pupils being 500. The Vicar's prizes for good conduct were distributed by Canon Spence. The principal prizes were won by the following, to whom they were presented by the Lord Mayor:—Camden Silver Medal for Mathematics, D. H. Bent; Camden Essay, D. H. Bent; Dartmouth Greek Prize, G. P. Ferguson; Southampton Latin Prize, D. H. Bent; Llanover History Prize, A. E. Restarick; Members for Marylebone Medal for Modern Languages, F. A. Hunt; Churchwardens' Prize, English verse, A. E. Restarick; Old Boys' Prizes, given to two boys meriting special reward, E. A. Claremont, A. M. Humphries. Some selections from the ancient and modern classics were then given by the pupils, the recital of which elicited frequent applause.

Mr. Joseph Makinson, barrister, Manchester, has been appointed stipendiary justice of Salford.

Cambo House, the residence of Sir Thomas Erskine, Bart., was destroyed by fire early on Monday morning.

A telegram from Alexandria announces that the Nile is rising well in both Upper and Lower Egypt. The Committee of Inquiry into Egyptian Revenues has prepared a plan to extinguish all liabilities by 1888.

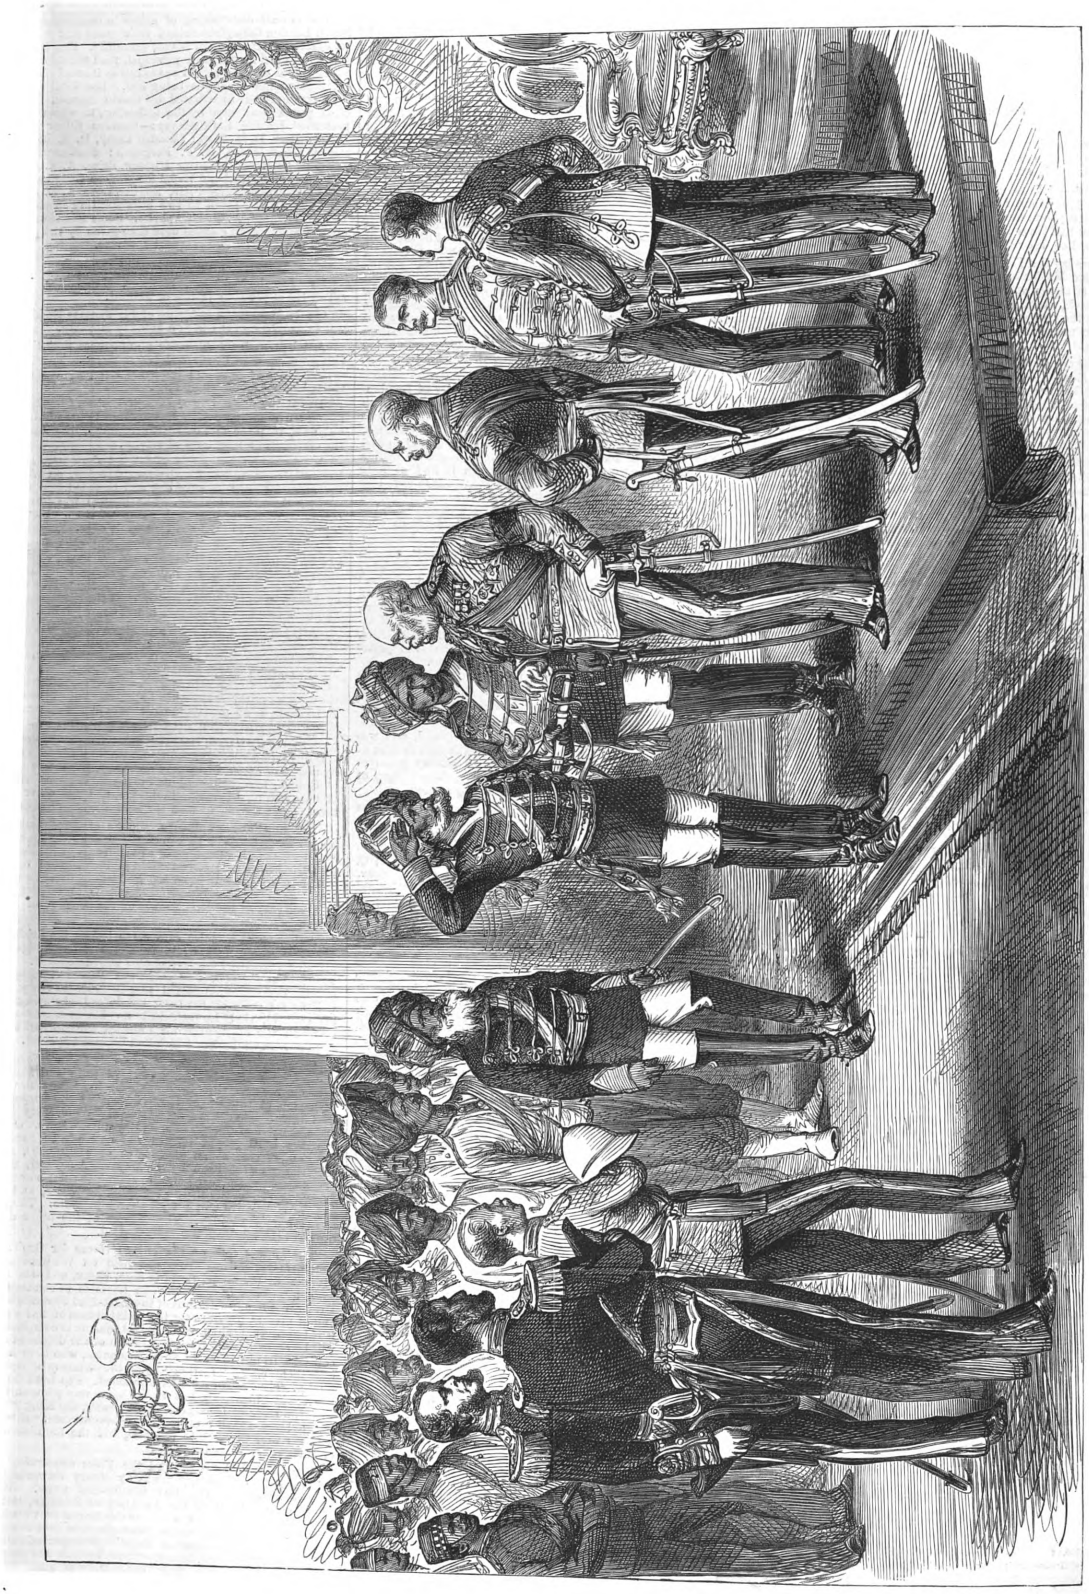
Mr. Arthur Wilson, of the South-Eastern Circuit, has been appointed a Puisne Judge of the High Court of Judicature, Calcutta, in place of Mr. Justice Markby, who has resigned the office after a long term of service.

While the servants in a wild-beast show were cleaning a leopard's cage, in Stockwell-street, Glasgow, on Wednesday, the animal forced its way out and bounded into the street, causing the greatest alarm. The leopard was forced into a corner, and its keeper, lassooing it round the neck with a stout rope, succeeded in taking it back to its cage.

A testimonial, consisting of a purse of £320, a gold watch, and an illuminated record of the circumstance, signed by 254 subscribers (including the Duke of Richmond and Gordon and the Mayor of Brighton), has been presented to Mr. J. G. Cockburn, who has lately retired from the management of the Brighton branch of the London and County Bank.

Another of the St. John ambulance classes was opened on Monday in the barracks of the Hon. Artillery Company. The attendance was large. Captain Jay introduced the lecturer, Mr. Edmund Owen, of St. Mary's Hospital, who taught the St. John class in the Albany-street Barracks. After the lecture the director of the Ambulance Department of the order, Major F. Duncan, R.A., explained the nature of the movement.

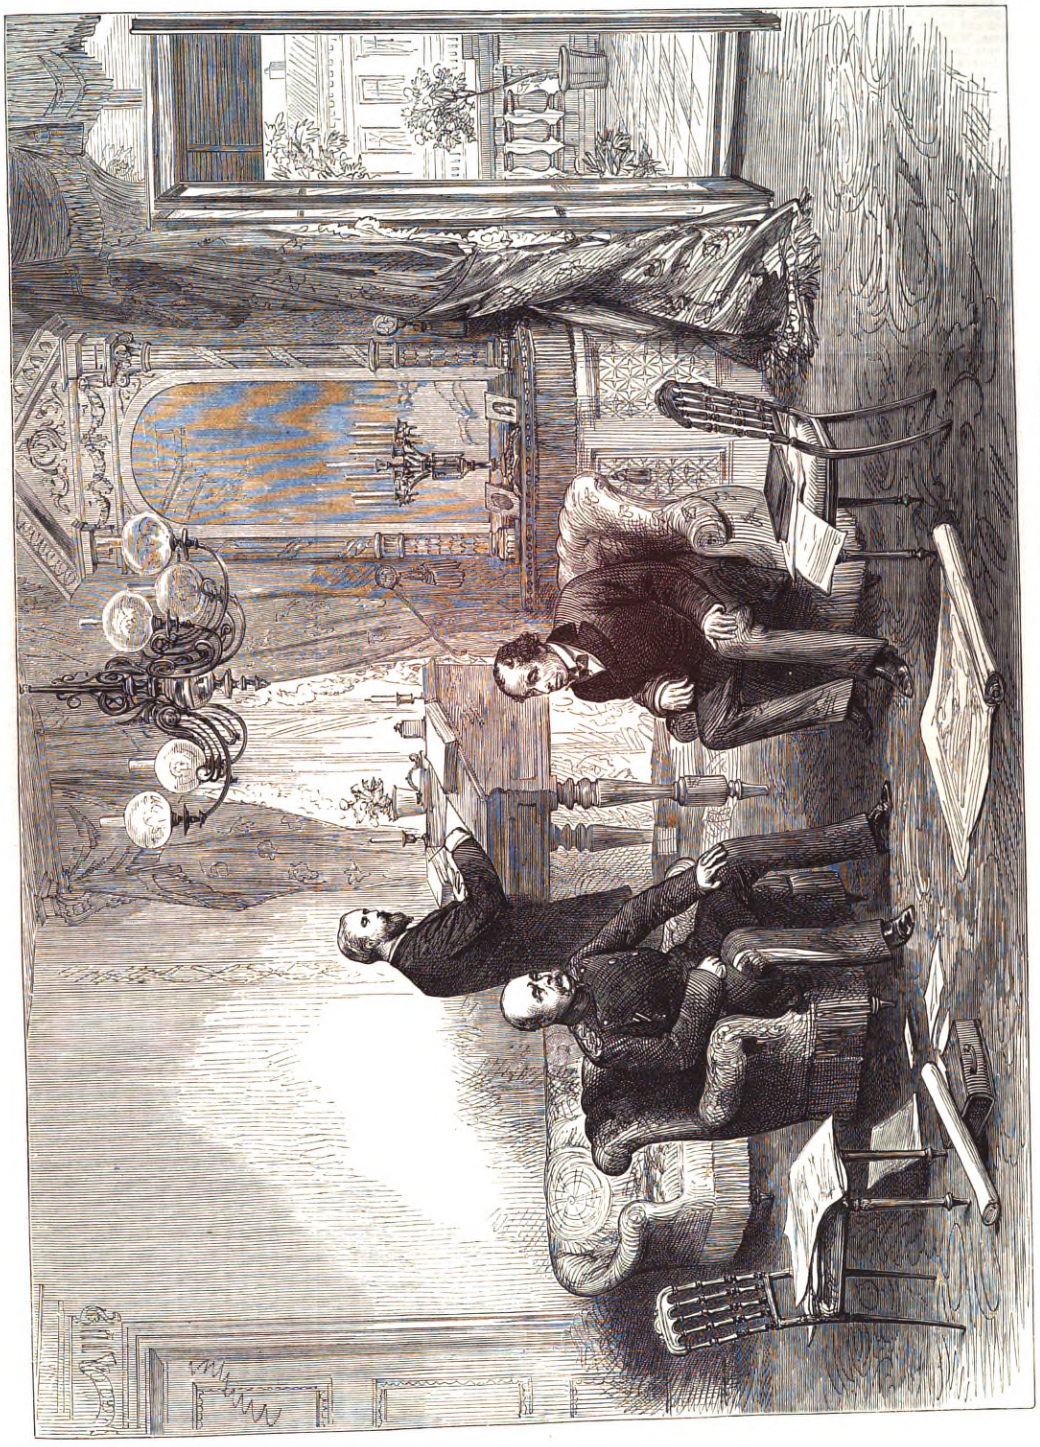
The Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund, in their report recently issued, state that it is recommended to organise and dispatch a special expedition, with the object of examining, by means of excavation where necessary, the shores of the Sea of Galilee, and the determination by this method of the sites of Capernaum, Chorazin, Bethsaida, and the other places on these shores associated with the New Testament history.



The marriage of Prince Eugene of Leuchtenberg with Mdlle. Scobeleff will be celebrated at St. Petersburg on the 14th inst. and the marriage of Prince Henry of the Netherlands with the Princess Mary of Prussia at Potsdam on the 27th of next month. A sum of 60,000 guilders has been collected in Holland in small subscriptions. It is to be presented to Prince Henry of the Netherlands on the occasion of his Royal Highness's marriage.

A breach-of-promise case came before the Irish Queen's Bench Division last week, in which Miss Fitzgerald was plaintiff and Mr. Stamer-Gubbins was defendant. Damages were laid at £25,000. Judgment was allowed to go by default, and the defendant submitted to pay £2500 to the plaintiff as well as the costs of her suit; the defendant stating, through his counsel, that he attached no blame whatever to the plaintiff, the only cause for breaking the contract being the state of his own health, which had become impaired.

On Wednesday the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex left London by special train from Euston Station on a state visit to Blackpool, in Lancashire, on the invitation of the Mayor (Dr. Cocker) and the Corporation of that town. They were accompanied by the Lady Mayoress and the wives of the Sheriffs, and by a large suite. On Thursday the Lord Mayor opened the new winter gardens and pavilion, erected at an expense of over £100,000, and was entertained at luncheon by the Mayor. A concert, fireworks, and a torchlight procession were among the day's events. On Friday and Saturday there were other festivities, and on Sunday the civic party will attend church in state. They return to London on Monday. The Mayors of the other corporate towns of the kingdom were also invited.



The annual fête of the Village Home for Orphan, Neglected, and Destitute Girls was held on Wednesday in the grounds of the home, Barking Side, Essex, and was attended by a numerous company. The home is in connection with Dr. Barnardo's institutions of the East-End Juvenile Missions, and at present provides for the maintenance of 282 girls; but it is hoped that when the original scheme is completed there will be accommodation for 600. Each of the detached cottages contains from fifteen to twenty inmates, who have a matron over them, called "mother" by all the members of her adopted family. The Earl of Aberdeen presided. The Lord Chancellor was unable to attend, but Lady Cairns was present, together with the Duchess Dowager of Manchester, the King of Bonny, and a large number of ladies and gentlemen. Eleven new cottages were declared to be open, and the foundation stones of three others were laid.

Some details have reached the Times concerning a large collection in entomology made by Henry Edwards, of San Francisco, during the last twenty-five years. Professor Davidson, president of the Academy of Sciences, states that this collection of insects is one of the largest ever made in the United States, and by far the most complete ever made on the Pacific coast. It consists of about 60,000 species, comprising more than 200,000 specimens. These include not only all the orders on the Pacific coast, but nearly or quite all in the United States, with a large representation of orders from all parts of the world. The collection is said to be really one of the most complete known in any country. It is valued at 12,000 dols., or rather that is about the sum expended in freights, cabinets, and the purchase of rare specimens. The labour of twenty-five years is not estimated.

The Extra Supplement.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND HIS BRIDE.

The approaching marriage of his Royal Highness Prince Arthur, the Duke of Connaught, to Princess Louise Margaret of Prussia is another link in the golden chain of family relationships between the reigning Houses of Great Britain and of the German Empire, which ought to correspond with sincere mutual regard and goodwill on the part of the English and German nations. We give the Portraits of this illustrious young couple, who have been receiving the congratulations of their kinsfolk and friends in this country, and whose nuptial union will probably not long be deferred. Prince Arthur William Patrick Albert, third son of her Majesty Queen Victoria and of the late Prince Consort, is twenty-eight years of age, having been born at Buckingham Palace on May 1, 1850. He entered the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, as a cadet, in February, 1866, became a Lieutenant of the Royal Engineers in 1868, and of the Royal Artillery in 1869; then entered the Rifle Brigade, and was made a Captain in 1871; was transferred in April, 1874, to the 7th Hussars, was promoted to the rank of Major in August, 1875, and in September, 1876, was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel of his old regiment, the Rifle Brigade. In May, 1871, upon coming of full age, he was made one of her Majesty's Privy Council, and he soon afterwards received from Parliament the grant of a yearly income of £15,000 for life. He is a freeman of the city of London, and a member of the Grocers' Company; he has been invested by the Emperor of Germany with the Order of the Black Eagle, and in 1867 received the Imperial Order of the Osmanli from Sultan Abdul Aziz. His Royal Highness, like his two elder brothers, has visited the British colonies, and is personally well known in Canada, and likewise in Ireland. The young lady whom he is about to wed, Princess Louise Margaret Alexandra Victoria Agnes of Prussia, is younger by ten years than her affianced husband. She is the third daughter of Prince Frederic Charles Nicholas, who is the eldest son of Prince Frederick Charles Alexander, brother to the Emperor-King William I. of Prussia and Germany. Her father, who is fifty years of age, is a distinguished Field Marshal of the Prussian army, and won a high military reputation both in the wars of 1866, against Austria, and in that of 1870 and 1871, against France. Her mother is Princess Mary, daughter of the late Duke of Anhalt; the young Princess Louise Margaret was born at Potsdam on July 25, 1860, so that she will, at her wedding, be just eighteen. Let us all hope that the bride and bridegroom will live at least half a century happily together, which is as much as the ordinary course of nature allows us to expect for the most fortunate mortals of any rank in the world. May they see their Golden Wedding, and its gold be still bright and pure!

THE CONGRESS AT BERLIN.

It is expected that, by the time this Number of our Journal finds its way to readers throughout the United Kingdom, the Congress of Plenipotentiaries of the Great Powers of Europe will have completed its task, and the representatives of Great Britain, or at least the Prime Minister, Lord Beaconsfield, will be enabled to return to England, it is hoped, early next week. The assignment of the limited territory attached to the seaport town of Batoum, upon its cession by Turkey to Russia, has been the last question of difficulty with which the Conferences of the past week has been occupied, since it became evident on Monday, from the known Convention between Great Britain and Turkey, for a British defensive protectorate of the Sultan's Asiatic dominions, with the delivery of Cyprus to the British Government, that there would be no substantial opposition made to the Russian acquisition of Batoum. These most important transactions, which throw into the shade all other political events and rumours of the week, are commented upon in our leading article.

The principal Illustration of the Congress given in this Number, from a sketch by our Special Artist at Berlin, is the interior of the private room at the Kaiserhof Hotel occupied by Lord Beaconsfield; and we have introduced into this Engraving the familiar figures of his Lordship and Prince Bismarck, the Imperial Chancellor of Germany, who has repeatedly visited our Premier and held long conversations with him in that apartment. The figure represented as standing and writing at the desk behind is that of Mr. Montagu Corry, private secretary to Lord Beaconsfield, who may or may not be instructed to take notes of the weighty utterances of the two powerful statesmen—of course with the consent of Prince Bismarck, if it be done at all, of which we are by no means aware.

We regret to learn that within the last day or two from the time of our present writing the Earl of Beaconsfield has been suffering from gout and some throat malady, which prevented his attending the Conference on Wednesday. He had seemed before in pretty good health, as he appears in our Artist's Sketch of a street scene, where his Lordship appears, with Mr. Montagu Corry, walking from the Kaiserhof Hotel to the Radziwill Palace. The following extract from a letter of the Times' Berlin Correspondent on Tuesday will serve for a commentary on the incident shown in our Artist's Sketch:—

"When Lord Beaconsfield first came to Berlin the acting chief of the police waited upon the British Premier to caution him against walking in the streets. There might be assassins abroad, the officer argued, with evident anxiety, intent upon killing the leading man of the high and mighty assembly that had met at Berlin. Lord Beaconsfield, in reply, expressed a doubt that Berlin assassins were sufficiently cosmopolitan to extend their operations to foreign Ministers sojourning in this capital. However, being ignorant of the state of the place, the repeated warning of the anxious officer eventually took effect upon the possible victim. For a week, therefore, the noble Lord used to drive out in a closed carriage, which he only left, at a distance from the town, to take his 'constitutional' in places beyond the reach of Socialists and Anarchists. But his bold spirit rebelled against these secret promenades. Having always deemed death preferable to eternal imprisonment, the Earl, after a week's abstinence, determined to slight the warnings of the police, and freely showed himself in hotel, street, and park. He had no reason to regret his independent course. Unless inconvenienced by obtrusive attention on the part of the metropolitan public, his walks were as agreeable as they were safe. Fame has its attendant penalties, and stares are punishments inflicted by admirers. Lord Beaconsfield has counted among the most interesting sights of the capital during the last month."

Two minor Illustrations, those of the garden front and the staircase of the Radziwill Palace, in which the sittings of the Congress are held, are presented this week, as contemporary history, will scarcely record any proceedings of greater moment than those of this august diplomatic assembly at Berlin.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The Daily Telegraph of Monday gave the Leaders of the Opposition abundant food for questioning the Ministry. It had announced that a conditional treaty had been entered into between England and the Porte for a British Protectorate of Turkey in Asia and of the Island of Cyprus. Many prominent members of the Lower House, not wholly satisfied with the Ministerial statement made by the Home Secretary, gathered round the throne to hear what version of the affair should be divulged in the Upper Chamber; and among those assembled at the foot of the gilded chair of State were two or three Cabinet Ministers, possibly interested to learn how the intelligence would be received by noble Lords. They had first to hear what would have been a dry deliverance had it not been for the clear and distinct articulation of the Lord Chancellor, who informed Lord Selborne in sonorous language that the Government bill for the codification of the criminal law would not be proceeded with this Session, but that during the winter Sir James Stephen's luminous measure would be fully weighed and considered by a Royal Commission composed of Lord Justice Blackburn, Mr. Justice Lush, and Sir James Stephen himself, the author and draughtsman of the bill. It was then that Earl Granville rose and preferred his question as to the authenticity of the statement in a "London daily paper." Characteristically explicit was the reply of the Duke of Richmond:—

I may say that, in view of the retention by Russia of the Asiatic territories of the Porte, a conditional convention was, on June 4 last, entered into between her Majesty and the Sultan, to the following effect:—"If Batoum, Ardahan, Kars, or any of them, shall be retained by Russia, and if attempt shall be made at any future time by Russia to take possession of any further portion of the Asiatic territories of the Sultan, as fixed by the definitive Treaty of Peace, England engages to join the Sultan in defending them by force of arms. In return, the Sultan promises to England to introduce necessary reforms (to be agreed upon between the two Powers) into the government of the Christian and other subjects of the Porte in those territories; and, in order to enable England to make necessary provisions for executing her engagement, the Sultan further consents to assign the island of Cyprus, to be occupied and administered by England. If the Government of Russia should at any time surrender to the Porte the territory it has acquired in Asia by the recent war, the stipulations in the Convention will cease to operate, and the island will be evacuated." Under this Convention (the condition under which it is founded having now arisen), a firman has been issued by the Porte authorising the transfer of Cyprus to England, and possession of the island will be at once taken and the Government administered on behalf of her Majesty. I have to add that her Majesty has been pleased to appoint Sir Garnet Wolseley to administer the government of the island. I will lay the papers on the table to-night.

An exodus of hon. members followed this declaration, which revealed nothing more than Mr. Cross had stated a quarter of an hour before to the Commons; and noble Lords themselves separated, after a fruitless conversation as to the erection of shelters for equestrians in Rotten-row, and after advancing a few measures a stage.

On Tuesday the Anglo-Turkish Convention was returned to by Lord Granville, who could not learn from the Duke of Richmond whether the treaty had been communicated, either formally or informally, to the other Powers. The bill to enable innkeepers to sell the left property of persons indebted to them was read the second time, on the motion of Lord Henniker; and various other measures were advanced a stage.

In reply to Lord Granville, on Thursday, the Duke of Richmond said he had no information as to the time the principal Plenipotentiaries would arrive in London, nor did he know when they would leave Berlin. There was, however, every reason to believe that the Congress would terminate its labours in the course of a few days. The papers in connection with them would be presented immediately after the close of the Congress. The Foreign Jurisdiction Bill was read the second time, and the Statute Law Revision Bill was read the third time and passed. In reply to a question from Lord Shaftesbury respecting the slavery now existing in the island, the Duke of Richmond stated that Sir Garnet Wolseley would leave to-morrow for Cyprus, and on his arrival it would be his duty to make a full investigation of the institutions and every thing else connected with the island. On receiving an authentic report from him, the Government would be in a position to state the course they intended to take.

COMMONS.

Mr. Ridley was virtually declared the elect of South Northumberland yesterday week, the Speaker announcing that the petition of Mr. Grey had been withdrawn. On the other hand, Mr. Wilson (who had been returned by an exceedingly large Liberal majority as member for Middlesborough) was cheered by the Opposition on his taking the oaths and his seat. The afternoon was devoted to a dry discussion in Committee of the Highways Bill, clause 20 of which was reached when progress was reported. A debate on Ritualism, initiated by Mr. E. Jenkins, monopolised the evening sitting. The hon. member for Dundee, in that complaisant and pseudo-philosophic tone to which the House has grown accustomed, advanced many arguments in support of his prayer for a Royal Commission to inquire into the "Ritualistic" practices of certain members of the Church of England. Mr. Green seconded the motion; and the speakers generally, including the Chancellor of the Exchequer, deplored the conduct of those who had brought about the state of things complained of in the Church. Sir Stafford Northcote urged, however, that the law was strong enough to suppress abuses of the kind alluded to; and the right hon. Baronet succeeded in persuading Mr. Jenkins to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Fawcett was one of the first to open fire on Monday, the hon. member for Hackney not abating one jot of the stentorian quality of his voice in giving notice of a motion for altering the Government of India Act for the due protection of the pockets of the Indian people, whom the Crown would burden with the expenses of an army liable to serve in any part of her Majesty's Empire. Several questions of more or less public interest were put and replied to; Mr. Roberts took the oaths and his seat for Flint; and it then became the duty of the Home Secretary to act temporarily as the Leader of the House in place of Sir Stafford Northcote, obliged to remain at home in consequence of an accident, which drew expressions of regret from both sides the House. Answering a question from the Marquis of Hartington as to the rumoured Protectorate of Turkey in Asia and the transfer of Cyprus, Mr. Cross replied to the same effect as the Duke of Richmond; but what may be termed the macadamised delivery of the Home Secretary seemed to grate on hon. members, and a peal of derisive laughter from the Opposition benches greeted the reference of the right hon. gentleman to the reforms which the Porte would be called upon to effect. As a counter-demonstration, there was a faint, half-hearted burst of applause from the Conservatives at the mention of the approaching occupation of Cyprus. With regard to a second inquiry as to whether the Treaty had been communicated to the Congress, Mr. Cross requested the Marquis of Hartington to repeat the question the following day; and the Home Secretary, in the most offhand and abrupt manner, referred Mr. Gladstone to the papers for a clear understanding of the Convention. Yet another evening was devoted to the cattle plague; and it was shown that the Government had at last resolved to abate the stringency of the Ministerial measure. Mr. Torrens moved in an able speech on the motion for going into Committee on the bill—

That, having regard to the greatly enhanced price of animal food, this House is not prepared to adopt any measure which may tend further to diminish the supply of cattle from abroad.

Whereupon Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson made the conciliatory announcement that while slaughter would be the rule of the measure, it might be well to give the Privy Council power to admit cattle shown to be free from disease from Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. Mr. Forster was obliged to the Government for the concessions made, and suggested that the home regulations as to the conveyance of cattle should be altered in a similarly rational manner. The bovine chorus was joined in freely; and ultimately, when Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Cross, and the Marquis of Hartington had delivered themselves of their opinions on the matter, Mr. Torrens withdrew his motion. In face of an adverse motion by Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. Cross got the Bishoprics Bill read the second time by 188 to 60 votes; and the House sat till morning, not separating until the Lords' amendments to the Poor Law Act Amendment Bill had been agreed to.

On Tuesday a little more intelligence was communicated respecting the Anglo-Turkish Treaty. Replying to Mr. Forster, Mr. Bourke said—

The English ratification was sent to Constantinople by special messenger some time ago, and Sir A. Layard reported on the 8th that everything was settled; and Mr. Baring, who was to take the firman to Cyprus, had left Constantinople. We have not yet received any official report of the convention having been formally communicated to the other Powers.

The Scottish Roads and Bridges Bill was read the third time, after Mr. Anderson had uttered a final plaint as to the injustice which the measure threatened to inflict on Glasgow. In Committee on the Highways Bill some progress was made, clause 31 being agreed to ere the House branched off into other business. The evening sitting was occupied with the consideration of Mr. Errington's motion, supported by a speech of great length, for a Commission of Inquiry into the working of the Irish Land Act of 1870, which the hon. member argued had not operated sufficiently to check capricious evictions. The Irish members generally, Mr. Butt included, coincided with the views of Mr. Errington. Drily remarking that the authors of the Irish Land Act were not present to defend it, Mr. Lowther had no veneration for that Act, but yet felt bound to object to the motion, which was negatived by 134 to 67 votes.

"Proputty, proputty, proputty," was the toothsome theme which exercised the minds and voices of hon. members on Wednesday. Mr. Potter's Real Estate Intestacy Bill came on for second reading; but the upholders of primogeniture were in force, and the measure was rejected by 193 votes to 157.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer reappeared in his place on Thursday and was greeted with loud and general cheering. In reply to Major Nolan, Colonel Stanley stated that the number of troops which would be employed in the occupation of Cyprus was about 10,000, consisting of the Indian contingent now at Malta and three English battalions. Mr. A. Egerton informed Sir A. Gordon that a large chart showing the harbours and coasts of Cyprus would be immediately placed in the library; and in reply to Sir J. Goldsmid, who naïvely inquired whether there were any harbours at all on the island, stated that there was certainly one, and three good anchorages, from which troops could be landed at all times. In answer to an inquiry from Sir G. Campbell, Colonel Stanley said that the committee to investigate the cost of the Indian troops employed in Europe would be nominated next week. He did not expect the inquiry to be a very prolonged one. Mr. Cross, replying to a question put by Mr. Forster, in the absence of the Marquis of Hartington, stated that the papers relating to the Congress were being prepared, and there would be no unnecessary delay in presenting them to Parliament. Maps, too, on a large scale, showing what the Congress had done, would be deposited in the library of each House. In answer to a question from Sir H. D. Wolff, Mr. Bourke stated that the Foreign Office had received reports of the ill-treatment of the Mohammedans in the Rhodope Mountains, and they agreed very much with the accounts published in the public journals. Replying to Mr. Baxter, Mr. Bourke stated that the Porte had expressed its readiness to enter into a convention with this country for the suppression of the slave trade. A draught one had been prepared, and was sent to Constantinople on June 9. It was the intention of her Majesty's Government to follow the same policy in respect to this subject as they had pursued in respect to Zanzibar, Egypt, and the Red Sea. The Chancellor of the Exchequer informed Sir H. James that it was proposed to refer the Criminal Code (Indictable Offences) Bill to a Commission, consisting of Lord Blackburn, Mr. Justice Lush, and Sir Fitz-James Stephen, to revise the bill and report upon it before the next Session of Parliament. The Sunday Closing (Ireland) Bill, the first order of the day, then formed the subject of discussion and contention between the two opposing parties during the remainder of the sitting, each seeming determined to fight the battle to the last, and by the strength of their physical powers to tire the other down. Although the actual question was the consideration of the bill as amended, the principle of the measure was discussed ab initio, and in speeches of wearisome length and verbosity. Relays of members were organised on both sides, to relieve each other after midnight, and there is every likelihood that the morning's sun will witness the continuance of this unseemly struggle.

The conference of the British Temperance League was held the early part of this week in York. Resolutions were passed in favour of the closing of public-houses on Sunday, and for an alteration of the present state of things attending the sale of intoxicating liquors at railway stations. The conference will next year be held at Huddersfield.

A match, between representatives of the Hon. Artillery Company and the Berkshire Rifle Volunteers, both commanded by Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., has been shot off on Crookham-common, the weapon used being the Martini rifle. For Berkshire the total was 1192 and for the Hon. Artillery Company 1135.

Monsei gneur Dupanloup's proposal to illustrate Joan of Arc's career by ten painted windows in the Orleans Cathedral, and to restore the old expiatory monument, has been already mentioned. He has now issued a stirring appeal for subscriptions, in which he says:—"To us Joan of Arc is a warrior, a victim, and likewise a saint; but, as it appertains to the Church alone to adjudge her this grand title of Saint, twelve of my venerated colleagues and I a few years ago addressed the request to the Holy See. We then opened at Orleans the preliminary investigation required by the canon laws; the Court of Rome has now that investigation in its hands, and we await with confidence its decision." A jury will choose the best plan, and the cost is estimated at 150,000f. All, moreover, who subscribe or collect 100f. will have their names inscribed in gold letters on marble tablets in the cathedral.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

"Alma, L'Incantatrice," an Italian version of Flotow's new opera, "L'Enchanteresse," was produced on Tuesday. The work was brought out at the Paris Italian Opera in April last, the book of the original French version having been written by M. de Sainte-Georges, the Italian version being by M. de Lauzières. It was in this latter form that the opera was given in Paris and was performed here on Tuesday—the character of the heroine having, in both cases, been represented by Mdlle. Albani. The plot is thus summarised in the book of the opera:—

Camoens, the Portuguese poet, being proscribed, is sharing the hospitality of José, a Portuguese innkeeper in Goa. There he meets with Alma, a charming Bayadère, one of a troupe of street performers. Her beauty and gentle nature awake in the bard a noble passion, while she in turn feels a deep admiration—which ripens into love—for the genius whose verses she has frequently sung to the enraptured people. Camoens, recognised by some officers, his old friends and admirers, is presented with the money whereby he may purchase his ransom and return to Lisbon, when he discovers that Alma is to be sold as a slave by her master, Kubli. To rescue the maid he disposes of his ransom sum in purchasing her himself. Having no longer the means to depart, he, with the help of José, who would leave Goa in order to escape from his coquettish wife, Zingaretta, succeeds in avoiding the watchful eye of the guards, and escapes with Alma and José to Lisbon. Secluded now in José's inn, his hopes lie in the grateful Alma, who by her singing could earn a sum sufficient to procure his freedom. During a night of carnival, however, a crowd of masks enter the inn, among them a stranger, who, recognising in Alma the maiden who had struck his fancy, and for whom he had sought everywhere, would now possess her, when, Camoens drawing a dagger in her defence, a struggle ensues, in which the stranger is wounded. At the moment Fernando, an officer, entering the place, reveals in the wounded stranger the King, Don Sebastian, who is indulging his love of adventure by wandering incognito. Amid the confusion, Camoens makes his escape, and conceals himself with Alma in a remote quarter of the city. He is, however, soon detected and arrested, and confined in a fortress to await his sentence. In vain José has entreated the King's forgiveness, as the wound was accidentally self-inflicted. While the jovial King is enjoying the carnival, amid a boisterous crowd, near the harbour, a batch of convicts in chains passes by, to be transported. Alma, who is present, discovering among them her loved saviour, drags him before the King, imploring mercy. Don Sebastian, astonished at such devotion, and, moved by her despair, would know who is the prisoner. On hearing from Alma the name of Camoens, he immediately repairs the wrong done, and, uncovering himself, does homage to the great poet, the glory of Portugal.

The opera has no overture, not even that poor substitute occasionally supplied under the title of "Prelude," a few detached chords for the orchestra being all that precedes the rising of the curtain on a square in Goa. Some spirited music accompanies the carousing of groups of Portuguese officers, after which Alma enters and sings an elaborate scena in which are some effective contrasts. This was rendered by Mdlle. Albani with an alternation of brilliant execution and refined expression that produced a marked effect. The duet which follows was admirably sung, both by the lady just named and M. Capoul, the representative of Camoens. The delicate mezzo-voce passages for Alma were charmingly given. A lively duet for Zingaretta and José was well rendered by Mdlle. Belocca and Signor Caracciolo, the lady being especially successful in the representation of the arch and coquettish wife of the innkeeper. A pleasing duet for Alma and Camoens and a well-written trio for the same characters and José complete the music of the first act.

Act ii. takes place in José's inn at Lisbon. Here Camoens recites his verses to the sympathetic admiration of Alma, the declamation of the former at the passage "O patria diletta," and the enthusiasm of the latter as expressed in the phrase "O suol natio sei caro al mio cor" having been very effective.

In the demonstrative song "Il vento soffia" (with chorus of sailors), Mdlle. Belocca gained a special success, having had to repeat the air. A common-place solo for Don Sebastian "Un di di follia" (probably an interpolation), was rendered effective by Signor Cotogni's forcible delivery of it. After this follows the trio of the Cigarette—one of the most successful pieces in the performance of the opera at Paris. There is much piquant character in this movement, in which Zingaretta teaches Don Sebastian and José the then novel delights of tobacco. The trio derived much effect in Saturday's performance from the vivacious acting and singing of Mdlle. Belocca. Some bacchanalian music follows, and a solo in which Don Sebastian narrates the story of his love. This was another specimen of good declamation by Signor Cotogni. The remaining important piece in the second act is an effective trio, in which are some dramatic passages expressive of the contention of the Poet and the King, and the intercession of Alma.

Act iii. begins in a square in Lisbon, and opens with one of the principal pieces in the opera, a scena for Alma, containing some very effective vocal writing, both in the brilliant and the expressive styles. Its execution by Mdlle. Albani was a splendid display of finished art, having included some admirable bravura singing and some phrases of exquisite grace and charm. The closing portion, "O canzoni dei primi anni," called forth an enthusiastic demonstration of applause, and the movement had to be repeated. The ballet music which follows is, we believe, an interpolation by Signor Vianesi. This scene included some very effective grouping and skilful dancing by Mdlle. Zucchi and Mdlles. H. and L. Reuters.

The third and fourth acts were thrown into one, much of the closing music of the opera having been omitted. The most important points remaining to be spoken of are—a solo for Cemoens, "Questa sola augusta meta,"—well declaimed by M. Capoul—and a pleasing duet for him and Alma expressive of their mutual affection.

Sufficient has already been said to imply that the performance of Mdlle. Albani was of high excellence, and that Mdlle. Belocca, M. Capoul, and Signor Cotogni were worthy representatives of the characters assigned them. As José, Signor Caracciolo acted and sang with much spirit, the part of Kubli having been efficiently filled by Signor Manfredi; other artists subordinately associated with the cast having been Signori Raguer, Scolara, Fille, and Ferrario.

Like M. de Flotow's previous work "L'Ombra" (produced here by Mr. Mapleson, in an English version, at Her Majesty's Theatre in January last), "Alma" contains some agreeable vocal writing, with occasional instances of dramatic effect and skilful combinations in the concerted music; but, also like that work, there is scarcely sufficient originality or sustained power for an opera of such length and pretensions. The performance was ably conducted by Signor Vianese. "Alma" is well placed on the stage, with rich costumes and picturesque scenery by Messrs. Dayes and Caney.

The performances of last week were all repetitions of operas cast as recently noticed. "Alma" is to be repeated this (Saturday) evening; and on Thursday Rossini's "Semiramide" was to be revived, with Madame Adelina Patti as the Assyrian Queen, for the first time in England. With the end of next week the season will close.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Balfe's posthumous opera "Il Talismano" was performed on Saturday, for the first time in this theatre. The work was composed to an English libretto written by Mr. Arthur Matthison, who, it need scarcely be said, took his incidents from Scott's well-known romance. The Italian text was supplied by Signor Zaffira, and the recitatives, in lieu of dialogue, were furnished by Sir Michael Costa. In this shape the opera was brought out by Mr. Mapleson in 1874, when his performances were given at Drury-Lane Theatre, Madame Christine Nilsson having sustained the character of Edith Plantagenet, Madame Marie Roze that of Queen Berengaria, Signor Campanini having been Sir Kenneth, and Signor Rota Richard Cœur de Lion.

"Il Talismano"—originally entitled "The Knight of the Leopard"—had long occupied Balfe's attention up to the time of his death (in 1870); and he is believed to have bestowed more deliberate care on it than had generally been his custom, his facility in composition having been exceptionally great. In the opera now referred to we find frequent evidences of considerate workmanship, especially in the concerted pieces and finales, in which some good dramatic climaxes are obtained, as among other instances—in the characteristic music for the Arab soldiers in the opening scene of the Desert; in that of the religious service in the chapel scene; in the elaborate movement in the scene of the Mount, with the entries of the several divisions of Austrian, English, and French soldiers—and in the graceful music for female chorus (in the Queen's pavilion)—all offering some strong and effective contrasts. The writing for the solo singers is distinguished by that suavity of style and special knowledge of vocal effect which Balfe (himself an accomplished vocalist) so eminently possessed.

It is, however, unnecessary to dilate further on merits which we have before pointed out, and which are now generally recognised. These became even more manifest in Saturday's performance, after the interval which had elapsed since the opera had been last heard.

The characters of Sir Kenneth of Scotland (the Knight of the Leopard) and Richard Cœur de Lion were again filled respectively by Signor Campanini and Signor Galassi, the latter gentleman having replaced Signor Rota in the part in 1875. As Edith Plantagenet, Madame Etelka Gerster appeared in a new character and achieved a fresh success. The graceful aria "Placida notte," with its brilliant coda, was finely rendered, as were the "Canzone d'Evelina," Edith's portion of the ring duet, "Teco il serba" (encored), and the exultent concluding aria, "Nella viva trepidanza." This latter afforded a special opportunity for the display of Madame Gerster's exceptionally high range of voice and florid execution, and the continuous applause bestowed on the singer necessitated a repetition of the aria. The music for the Queen was very efficiently rendered by Mdlle. Caroline Salla, who gained a well-deserved encore for the romanza, "La guerra appena." Signor Campanini's performance as the Knight of the Leopard was even more effective than in past representations of the opera. He acted well in the several important situations, and sang the music with good cantabile style. The charming "Flower Song" ("Candido fiore") was encored, and Sir Kenneth's aria, "A te coll' aure," was another successful piece of vocalisation; highly effective also having been the delivery of the Knight's share in the duet with Nectabanus and that with Edith already specified. The character of Richard Cœur de Lion was again finely represented by Signor Galassi—as in repetitions of the opera in 1875. This gentleman sang the aria, "O chi d'amor," and the succeeding prayer, "Alto Signor," with great effect; and his performance altogether was one of high merit. An important feature of the cast was the Nectabanus of Signor Del Puente, who realised excellently the dramatic aspect of the malignant slave by whom Sir Kenneth is tempted to desert his watch of the standard on St. George's Mount. The scene between the two, in that situation, was finely rendered on both sides, Signor Del Puente having also given, with great effect, the solo passages in the interview with Edith in the corridor of the chapel. Signor Franceschi was an efficient representative of the Emir, and subordinate characters were well sustained by Signori Roveri, Rinaldini, and Grazzi.

When "Il Talismano" was first produced no overture was to be found among Balfe's manuscripts, and a brief orchestral prelude was supplied by the ready hand of Sir Michael Costa. Subsequently the overture was discovered among the papers of the deceased composer, and was played with great effect at the Alexandra Palace, under the direction of Mr. Weist Hill. In Saturday's performance of the opera this brilliant and well-scored piece was given, as intended, and formed a highly effective introduction to the stage music. The choral and concerted pieces were generally well rendered, as were the orchestral accompaniments. The scenery and costumes are in excellent taste; and there is little doubt that "Il Talismano" will find many successful repetitions. Sir M. Costa conducted Saturday's performance with that care and skill for which he is so renowned.

"Carmen" was given for the fifth time on Monday, "La Traviata" was repeated on Tuesday, and "Fidelio" on Wednesday. "Le Nozze di Figaro" was announced for the first time this season on Thursday, "Il Talismano" for the following night, and this (Saturday) evening the season is to close with the sixth performance of "Carmen"—some supplemental nights, at reduced prices, being advertised to begin on Monday.

That accomplished violinist, Mdlle. Castellan, gave her concert on Monday afternoon at No. 1, Lancaster-gate, by permission of Mrs. Owen Lewis. An interesting programme included skilful performances by the concert giver.

The eighth matinée of the Musical Union took place on Tuesday, when Madame Montigny-Rémaury reappeared as pianist, as did Signor Papini as violinist and M. Lasserre as violoncellist.

A most effective performance of Verdi's "Manzoni" Requiem took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening, conducted by Mr. Barnby, as on previous occasions, at the Royal Albert Hall. We spoke in detail of the merits of this work when first given in this country in 1875, at the building just named, under the direction of the composer. On Wednesday the solo singers were the Misses Robertson, Miss De Fonblanque, Mr. C. Wade, and the Hon. S. G. Littelton. Previous to the Requiem, a miscellaneous selection was given. There was a full orchestra and a chorus including the choir of St. Anne's, Soho, the performances having been given in aid of the establishment of a working men's club in that parish.

A very interesting concert was given by Mr. Malcolm Lawson at the Royal Academy of Music (Tenderden-street) on Wednesday evening, when Purcell's "Dido and Æneas," and portions of Gluck's "Alceste," were performed, with band and chorus; the latter having consisted of members of the Gluck Society. The chief interest centred in the first-named work, the earliest stage production of England's greatest musician, it having been composed in 1675, when Purcell was only nineteen. Wednesday's performance was a very efficient one. The principal soloists were Misses A. Brookes and F. Kelly, Mrs. Hollick, Mr. B. Lane, Mr. T. Marzials, Mr. D. Ferris, and Mr. Williams. Mr. Lawson conducted.

The last Floral Hall concert of the season takes place this (Saturday) afternoon, when also the third and concluding opera concert at the Royal Albert Hall will be given.

The Prince of Wales has interested himself to ensure a worthy representation of English music at the Paris Exhibition on July 17, 18, and 20. Mr. Arthur Sullivan, the English Commissioner, has secured the cordial co-operation of Mr. Henry Leslie, and these gentlemen have made such arrangements as cannot fail to present our national music in a highly favourable light to the Parisian public. The greater part of the members of Mr. Leslie's choir have entered enthusiastically into the affair, and Madame Arabella Goddard, and several of our most accomplished and popular soloists, have volunteered to assist them. The celebrated choir formerly directed by Mr. Lambert will uphold the honour of Scotland, and in the international choral competition Wales will be represented by the famous choir from Carnarvon.

THEATRES.

On Tuesday a new drama in five acts, by Mr. Cyril Searle, an American manager, entitled "Nancy Sikes," taken from the late Charles Dickens's "Oliver Twist," was produced at the Olympic. A débutante, so far as London, or rather England, is concerned, appeared as the heroine, supported by the author as Bill Sikes. The lady's name is Rose Eytinge. She has won, we are told, a considerable reputation in the United States in certain melodramatic characters, and even succeeded in higher rôles, such as Lady Macbeth and Cleopatra. Her choice of such a part as Nancy Sikes for her first appearance in England has excited discussion; but it was probably justified by the tragic elements embodied in the part. We are now in a position to judge of her merits. That Miss Eytinge is an actress of great power and discrimination there can be no doubt; nevertheless, it is with compassion that we recognise the waste of manifest talent on so revolting a task. The death-scene, in particular, with all its elaboration of circumstance, is too painful for representation. Nor is it saved by its supposed realism; for it is furthermore intensified by a kind of inverted idealism, that attributes to the criminal a sentiment of honour, which, however recognisable by thieves, can scarcely be expected to secure the sympathy of honest people. The selection of the piece for a first appearance is a great mistake. The débutante was well supported and the characters were carefully distinguished by competent performers. Nevertheless, it cannot be affirmed that the audience were altogether pleased with the performance.

In consequence of Mr. Sothern's ill-health, the Haymarket will close this evening for awhile, during which the great actor will visit America, where it is said he will perform for three days. He will return to this country in time for arrangements in relation to his proposed provincial tour, which will commence in September.

"Mary Warner," it is said, will be shortly performed at the Lyceum; Mr. John Billington is expected to support the part of George Warner.

The lesseeship of the Adelphi is stated to have passed from Mr. Chatterton to Mr. T. G. Clark.

The season at the Gaiety has been brought to a close, and the theatre will undergo a process of decoration until August.

On Monday, at the Lyceum, Mr. Henry Irving took his benefit in the presence of a numerous audience. He sustained Mathias, in "The Bells," and also Jingle, in the comical adaptation of "Pickwick;" and in both was, as usual, eminently successful.

Next Monday evening there will be produced at the Olympic an àpropos skit, called "A Congress at Paris," by Mr. Edward Rose. The principal part will be played by Mr. Harry Proctor, of the Theatre Royal, Scarborough; and Mr. Herbert Tree, Miss Lizzie Coote, and others will appear.

Mr. F. B. Chatterton has been unanimously selected as the new lessee of Drury-Lane Theatre.

FINE ARTS.

Madame Jerichau has submitted to the Princess a picture of the "Golden Horn," painted by her late son.

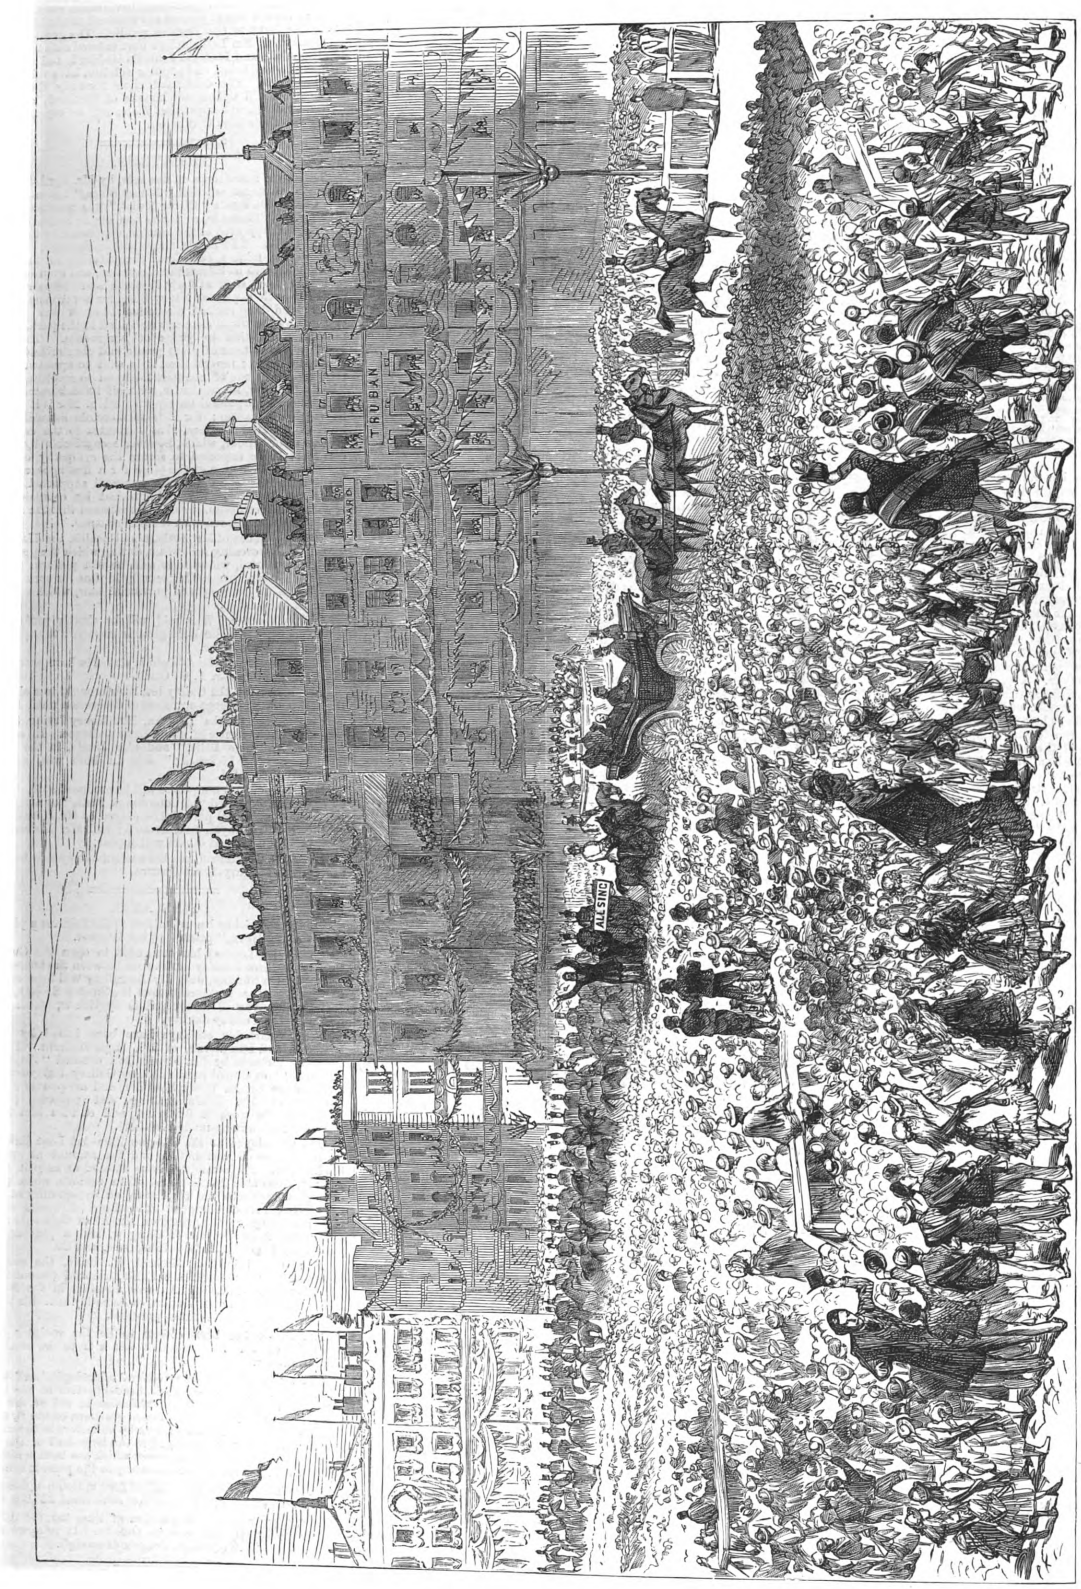
Sir Coutts-Lindsay has consented to open the Grosvenor Gallery on three Sunday afternoons between the hours of two and six. On Sunday, July 14, the gallery will be opened free to the subscribers and members of the Sunday Society, and on July 21 and Aug. 3 to the public by tickets, which will be issued by the Sunday Society.

Two remarkable etchings have been issued by Messrs. Deighton and Dunthorne, of 320, High Holborn. They are after the pictures by Mr. Frank Holl entitled "Hush" and "Hushed," exhibited in the Dudley Gallery last year. The etchings are by M. Victor Lhuillier, and are powerful reproductions of Mr. Holl's striking and pathetic pictures. M. Lhuillier's work is first rate, and entitles him to take foremost rank among modern etchers.

The attendance at the Glasgow Fine-Art Loan Exhibition up till last week was 45,000, and the amount at credit in bank £3000. The committee have decided to keep it open in August, to enable English and other tourists, when passing through Glasgow to the Highlands, an opportunity of seeing the art-treasures of Glasgow. This financial success must be very gratifying to the promoter, Mr. Allan Collins, who is a son of the Lord Provost of Glasgow, and a partner of the publishing firm of Messrs. Collins, Sons, and Co.

A memorial bust of Michael W. Balfe, the composer, executed, to the order of the Balfe Memorial Committee, by Mr. Thomas Farrell, R.H.A., was unveiled in the National Gallery, Leinster Lawn, Dublin, on Saturday last. Sir Bernard Burke, Ulster King-at-Arms, presided.

Mr. Brock has been chosen to be the sculptor of the memorial of Sir Rowland Hill which is to be erected at Kidderminster.



The council of the Somersetshire Archæological and Natural History Society, who have their head-quarters at the Castle, Taunton, have arranged an exhibition in aid of the castle purchase fund. Nearly 2000 line engravings, etchings, mezzotints and aquatints have been lent by collectors in the district, and they have been so arranged in the large hall of the castle as to afford an idea of the progress which has been made in the graver's art from the fifteenth century to the present time.

A movement has been set on foot for a museum of decorative art in Paris, and Sir R. Wallace has subscribed £10,000 to it.

The Belgian General Exhibition of Fine Arts for 1878 will begin on Aug. 20, and end on Oct. 15. It is open to the productions of living artists, Belgian or foreign.

Holiday numbers of London Society, Belgravia, and All the Year Round have been issued. The two former are illustrated, and all three contain tales and sketches by popular authors.

The arrangements for holding the forty-sixth annual meeting of the British Medical Association at Bath on Tuesday, Aug. 6, and three following days, are completed, and the meeting promises to be a great success from the large number of valuable papers entered for discussion.

LORD BEACONSFIELD WALKING TO A MEETING OF THE CONGRESS AT BERLIN.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

Save when a deluge of rain floods Wimbledon-common, there is something delightfully unconventional about the life our marksmen lead during the fortnight the annual shooting competition in camp lasts. Not only do the Volunteers owe a debt of gratitude to the National Rifle Association. Society finds in the Wimbledon Meeting relaxation from the continual round of the Row and the Drive, the Opera and Dances. Thus a visit to The Cottage (where Lord and Lady Wharncliffe took up their residence on Saturday last) has come to be popular, whilst a military band discourses brisk music during the Wimbledon Fortnight. The President and Lady Wharncliffe, it may here be remarked, will issue no invitations to garden parties this year, but will be "at home" to friends as usual at The Cottage. As for the Camp itself, that presents much the same appearance as in previous years. The Victorias and London Scottish were the first to put up their tents and make themselves at home under canvas; and Canada is once again represented by a team of crack shots, Lieutenant-Colonel Been commanding them.

Church parade was held on Sunday in the South Middlesex camp at a quarter past ten a.m., the sermon being preached by the Rev. E. Ker Gray; in the 1st Surrey camp at eleven a.m., the sermon being preached by the Rev. Dr. Maclear, Head Master of King's College; and in the Victorias' camp at ten a.m., the sermon being preached by the Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Wandsworth. The preacher in camp next Sunday morning will be the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, M.A., Honorary Chaplain to the Queen.

Shooting began on Monday under favourable circumstances. The light and wind were everything that could be desired, and the scoring was excellent, nine of the competitors making 35—the highest possible score—with seven consecutive bull's-eyes. The only competition brought to a close on Monday was that of the "Alfred," for Sniders at 200 yards, open to all comers. The aggregate value of the prizes connected with this competition is £350, divided into ninety-three prizes. Lieutenant Ward, of the 2nd Flint Rifles, made the highest possible score (35), winning £30; and £10 each fell to Corporal Howell, 9th Somerset, and Surgeon Parnell, 14th Worcestershire, who both scored 34. Among the winners of £5 prizes in the Alfred competition were Mackenzie, of the 10th Forfar; M'Auslan, of the 6th Dumbarton; and Young, of the 1st Herts, all of whom have distinguished themselves at previous Wimbledon meetings. Sergeant Weyman, of New Brunswick, stood lowest of those who had scored 32 points, and consequently took £2 only; and amongst those who won similar sums with a point less were the Queen's prizemen of 1871 and 1875, Mr. Humphrey, of Cambridge University, and Major Pearse, of the 18th Devon. Not in the Alfred only was the "highest possible" made on Monday. In the Windmill this ultimate total was attained by Lieutenant M'Intyre, 7th Dumbarton, after it had been approached within one point by Corporal Parlby, 3rd Notts, whose score of 34 in seven shots would a few years ago have established his fame as a marksman all England over. The Armourer's Company Prize also brought forward a champion, in the person of Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe, 39th Middlesex, whose score cannot be excelled. But the Glen Albyn, formerly the 200-yards' stage of the Windmill, was positively prolific in top scores. First, Private Messenger, 9th Leicester, reached the maximum figures; and after gun-fire two more such triumphs were recorded in the same competition. Sergeant-Instructor Gilder, 18th Middlesex, and Major Young, 39th Middlesex, were the second and third scores, each of 35 points. Several good scores were lost by the prevalent carelessness of firing at the wrong target. One such case was a particularly hard one. After having scored an inner and five bulls on the right target, and so having made 29, with one shot to go, the unlucky marksman put that final shot on the next target to his own, making a bull's-eye; but, instead of thereby profiting so far as to score only one short of the "highest possible," having the mortification to be fined 10s. for his blunder.

On Tuesday shooting began in the first stage of the Queen's Prize, for which unprecedentedly high scores were bound to be made, the Martini-Henry being adopted instead of the Snider at the short ranges. There has been an unprecedented increase in the number of the competitors for the Queen's Prize and for the St. George's Vase this year. The number entered for the Queen's is 2498, being 216 more than last year. The entries for the St. George's are 2283, being 413 more than last year. The amount of the money prizes connected with the latter competition has also been considerably increased, the total value last year being £541, divided into 100 prizes, whereas this year it amounts to £695, divided into 125 prizes. The result of the shooting for the second range of the Queen's Prize at 500 yards fully bore out the expectations that were formed of the Martini-Henry rifle, the aggregate scores at 200 and 500 yards far surpassing those of former years, when the competition was shot with the Snider. Last year the highest aggregate score at the two ranges was 60, there being ten of that number, three fifty-nines, and 17 fifty-eights. This year the highest aggregate score at the two ranges is sixty-eight, and that is followed by two sixty-sevens, four sixty-sixes, four sixty-fives, 11 sixty-fours, 28 sixty-threes, and 38 sixty-twos, there being considerably more than a hundred scores exceeding the highest obtained last year. The list of scores of Tuesday's shooting at 200 yards contained four thirty-fives, 14 thirty-fours, 42 thirty-threes, 71 thirty-twos, and 137 thirty-ones.

The tie between Sergeant Fletcher, of the 2nd Stirling, and Corporal Bond, of the 1st Bucks, who each made 35, the highest possible score, for the Daily Telegraph Cup on Tuesday, was shot off at gun-fire on Wednesday morning at the 200-yards Carton range. At first both competitors were very nervous, each of them scoring first an outer and then "a magpie." On the third trial, however, Sergeant Fletcher scored an inner, and thus won the cup, the first prize, Corporal Bond only making another magpie, and having to be satisfied with the second prize of £10 in money. Various competitions were begun on Wednesday. The Whiteley Prize, seven shots at 900 yards, for any rifles, a new prize during the present year, commenced, and Dr. Burnett, Ulster R.A., made 33; Lieutenant Coates, 6th Lincoln, and Mr. Doyle, of the Irish Rifle Association, 30 each. For the Secretary of State for War's Prizes, also seven shots at 900 yards with any kind of breechloader, Mr. Dunlop, London Scottish, made 32. Sir Henry Halford's Ne Plus Ultra, any rifle, seven shots at 1000 yards, was also begun; and for the Henry Prizes, seven shots with any military breechloaders at 1000 yards, Mr. King, of the Inns of Court, and Mr. Wyatt, of Ellesmere, made 30.

The chief interest of the proceedings on Thursday seemed to be centred in the shooting for the Queen's Prize at 600 yards. Up to the hour of our going to press with the early edition the following excellent scores had been made for it:—Corporal Mollineux, Manchester, Sergeant Lamont, Edinburgh, Low, Queen's (Westminster), 95 points each, 105 being the highest possible score; Private Grant, Manchester, 94; Sergeant Woolley, Chester, Private Kydd, Forfar, Sergeant Kirk, Beverley, 93 each; Sergeant Finch, 19th Middlesex, 92; Corporal Blacklock, 14th Durham, and Private Fraser, Queen's Edinburgh, 91 each.

VOLUNTEER INSPECTIONS.

Last Saturday evening half a dozen regiments were officially inspected in different parts of the metropolis; the highest muster, and also the highest of the metropolitan district this season, being attained by the 39th Middlesex, who mustered 901 of all ranks, at Regent's Park Barracks, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe, for inspection by an officer of the Coldstream Guards. The next in strength was the 36th Middlesex, numbering 878 of all ranks. The regiment, which was inspected in Hyde Park, was accompanied by a stretcher company and a company of recruits. It was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Ives, and the inspecting officer was Colonel Hall, of the Coldstreams. The regiment drilled exceedingly well, the march-past at the double being very steadily performed. The London Irish (28th Middlesex) were also inspected in Hyde Park, on the ground facing the Knightsbridge Barracks, by Colonel Lyon Fremantle. The total number on parade was 833 of all ranks, and the command was in the hands of Lieutenant-Colonel Ward, whose only field officers were Major Purcell and Captain Daubeny, the Adjutant. The Marquis of Donegall, the senior officer of the regiment, was at the saluting-base, but not in uniform. A great deal of drill was gone through; but, like the 39th, it was not possible to work the whole of the regiment at one time.—The 7th Surrey turned out 436 of all ranks out of 610 for inspection by Colonel Spott, of the Kingston sub-district, in the grounds of Lambeth Palace. The corps was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell.—The Second Middlesex Administrative Battalion, comprising, the Hampstead, Hornsey, Highgate, Barnet, Tottenham, and Enfield corps, was inspected at the Priory, Hornsey, by Colonel Logan, of the fiftieth sub-district. The regiment mustered 612 on parade, and was under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Warner.—The 9th Essex Rifles were inspected at West Ham Park by Colonel Rose, of the forty-fourth sub-district, and mustered 462 of all ranks, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Silver.—Several other regiments were out the same evening—the 3rd London keeping the ground for the London Irish, the 20th Middlesex for the 36th, and the 5th Essex for the 9th.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The West London Hospital for the Paralysed, which is situated in Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square, was opened on Tuesday.

The library committee of the Corporation dined together at the Albion Tavern yesterday week; Mr. J. Voce Moore, the chairman of the committee, presided.

Mr. Locke has intimated that he will not offer himself for re-election for Southwark, which constituency he has represented for the last twenty-one years.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach received at the Colonial Office on Wednesday a deputation bearing a memorial, signed by many of the ratepayers and voters of the Transvaal, against the annexation of that country to the British Crown. Sir Michael said that he would give the subject complete consideration.

An offer has been made by the trustees and principal of the Artisans' Institute, St. Martin's-lane, to the London Trades Council, by which the whole of the property and premises of that institution would be vested in the hands of the London Trades Council, on condition that they continued to work it as an educational institution.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer met with a slight accident on Saturday morning. In walking from one of the rooms of his official residence in Downing-street into the garden in the rear Sir Stafford Northcote struck his head against the sash of the window, which had not been completely opened, and inflicted a slight wound upon his forehead.

Professor James Stuart, of Trinity College, Cambridge, whose exertions in establishing the University extension scheme are well known, last Wednesday visited the Crystal Palace on behalf of the Cambridge Syndicate, and gave an address in the lower lecture-room of the Ladies' Division of the Crystal Palace Company's School of Art, Science, and Literature.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the first week in July was 77,177, of whom 38,094 were in workhouses, and 39,083 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1877, 1876, and 1875, these figures show a decrease of 392, 351, and 6295 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 427, of whom 234 were men, 152 women, and 41 children under sixteen.

The annual meeting of the Cobden Club was held last Saturday at the rooms of the Century Club, Pall-mall—Mr. T. B. Potter, M.P., in the chair. In moving the adoption of the report, the chairman said that at the present moment the prospects of free trade and Cobdenic principles were by no means cheerful, and some thought the members of the club ought to lie on their oars and not take any decided steps. His idea, however, was that, they should redouble their efforts, with a view to hold the position they had gained.

Last month the officers of the Fishmongers' Company destroyed ninety-three tons of fish at Billingsgate Market as unfit for human food. Nearly the whole of it had come to London by land. It included 120 bream, 34 brill, 34 cod, 1211 crabs, 1000 crayfish, 300 dabs, 1024 haddocks, 4 halibut, 46,900 herrings, 989 lobsters, 1860 mackerel, 357 plaice, 1 salmon, 162 soles, 80 thornbacks, 5 trout, 71 turbot, 1500 whiting, and, in addition, 1507 bushels of periwinkles and 158 bushels of whelks, 1304 gallons of shrimps, and 665 lb. of eels.

By the permission of the Duke of Westminster, there was a sale of art-needlework at Grosvenor House on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. The show is composed of embroideries worked within recent years by the ladies employed at the Royal School of Art-Needlework, at South Kensington, and represents the surplus stock which has been allowed to accumulate there. The articles were principally wall and bed hangings, coverlids, screens, and portières, many of them being equally meritorious in beauty of design and skilful execution.

At a meeting of the finance committee of the Agricultural Exhibition at the Mansion House, on Monday, the following additional donations were announced as having been contributed towards the fund for promoting a great agricultural exhibition in London next year:—The Corporation of London, £525; the Salters' Company, £52 10s.; Messrs. Coutts and Co., £52 10s.; the Bakers' Company, £52 10s.; Lord Portman, £30; Messrs. Glyn, Mills, and Co., £50; Mr. Charles Magniac, £25; Messrs. Fuller, Banbury, and Co., £21; Mr. Edward Baring, £20; Messrs. Piekfords, £26 5s.; and Mr. J. Unite, £25. The fund now amounts to over £5000. A considerably increased sum is needed to assure the success of the exhibition.

Mr. William Hardy has been appointed Deputy-Keeper of the Records, in the place of his brother, Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, deceased.

Lord Granville presided yesterday week at the annual meeting of the National Training School for Cookery. From the report it appears that the institution is now self-supporting. The committee consider that a fund should, if possible, be accumulated to pay for extensions as required, and at some future day to start the school in a better building free from debt. The Earl of Shaftesbury strongly insisted that fish ought to enter more largely than it did into the food of the nation. The great majority of the labouring classes, however, did not at present know how to cook it so as to make it palatable; but if the people would only see to this, and break down the monopoly of the fishmongers, the working man might have upon his table some of the finest food the seas could produce.

There were 2520 births and 1511 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 228 and the deaths by 96 the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The fatal cases of whooping-cough, which had been 108 and 97 in the two previous weeks, rose again to 108 last week, and exceeded the corrected weekly average by 65: the disease showed general fatality throughout the metropolis, especially in the east group of districts. The deaths referred to diarrhœa, which had been 23 and 72 in the two previous weeks, rose to 145 last week: they exceeded the corrected weekly average by 11, and included 109 of infants under one year of age, and 29 of children aged between one and five years. The deaths of 8 infants and of 3 adults were also referred to choleraic diarrhœa. The deaths from smallpox, which had been 19 and 38 in the two preceding weeks, declined again to 19 last week. There were 31 deaths from measles, 19 from scarlet fever, 11 from diphtheria, and 17 from different forms of fever. In Greater London 3038 births and 1756 deaths were registered, equal to annual rates of 35·6 and 20·6 per 1000 of the population. The mean temperature of the air was 60·1 deg., and 1·2 deg. below the average in the corresponding week of the sixty years 1814-73. The mean showed an excess on Sunday, Friday, and Saturday, whereas it was below the average on each of the other days of the week. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 21·6 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 115·1 hours.

FLOWER SHOWS.

The annual meeting of the Prince Consort's Association was held in Windsor Home Park on Wednesday. There was a flower show, to which the Queen and the principal residents of Windsor contributed, and an exhibition of cottage handicraft. Princess Christian presented the prizes.

The last of the summer exhibitions of the Royal Botanic Society was held on Wednesday at their gardens in Regent's Park. In spite of the heavy clouds that hung about during the morning, very fine weather favoured the show in the afternoon, and the attendance was in consequence very large. The exhibition of flowers was principally remarkable for a magnificent display of cut roses, one of the best collections of the kind that has been brought together this season. Among the most successful of the competitors in this line were Messrs. Paul and Son, of Cheshunt, who took the first prize for a magnificent basket of dark crimson (Alfred Colomb) roses, and another first for some magnificent white roses; Messrs. Cranston and Co., Hereford; Messrs. Paul and Son, Waltham-cross; Mr. W. Rumsey, of Waltham, who exhibited a basket of splendid roses of all colours; Mr. John Keynes, of Salisbury; and Messrs. Cutbush and Son, Highgate. As the production of a perfectly black rose is the hitherto unattained ambition of all florists, it may be as well to note that the nearest approach to this was shown in a very fine flower standing in one of the cases belonging to Messrs. Cranston and Co. Besides roses there were some fine specimens of carnations and picotees, in which class Mr. Turner, of Slough, took a first, and Mr. J. Douglas, gardener to Mr. F. Whitbourne, of Loxford Hall, Ilford, a second prize. The latter also took a prize for some specimens of stove and hothouse plants. In the classes for hardy herbaceous flowers, E. Morse, of Epsom, was first. A somewhat novel feature of the show were some groups of wild flowers "from a definite area of five miles radius around any parish church." There was also an exhibition of fruit, in which grapes, peaches, melons, and pineapples played the principal parts. One of the best specimens was a fine melon exhibited by Mr. T. Bailey, which took the first prize in its class for weight and shape. During the afternoon the bands of the 1st and 2nd Life Guards played selections of music, the first being under the direction of Mr. Waterson, and the second under the leadership of Mr. Winterbottom.

The second annual rose show, under the presidency of Lady Rouse-Boughton, was held on the 4th inst., in the Assembly Rooms, Ludlow, when a splendid assortment was exhibited to a numerous and fashionable company. Mr. Cranstone (Hereford) took the first prize, and Mr. Fittingham (Nottingham) the second, in the class for nurserymen, open to all England; and Mr. T. Jowett took the first prize for amateurs.

The 22nd annual show of the Highgate Horticultural Society was held on the 4th inst. in the beautiful grounds of Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Holly Lodge, Highgate. The weather being of the best, the attendance was not only fashionable, but also so numerous that before the gates closed, at nine o'clock, the spacious grounds were positively crowded, for the greater part by ladies. The show was held in the lower lawn, under two marquees, one of which was devoted to the exhibits of amateurs, and the second and smaller to those of cottagers in the neighbourhood. The chief prizes—which in money value ranged from £10 to 5s.—were awarded to Mr. Brooks, Caen Wood Towers, Hampstead-lane; Mrs. Lermette, Finchley; Alderman Sir Sydney Waterlow, Fairseat House; and Mr. Cummings, Hornsey-lane, Highgate. During the day the band of the S Division of Police, under the direction of Mr. Henton, and that of the 3rd Middlesex Rifle Volunteers, conducted by Mr. W. Harris, played.

The suburban Flower Shows round London have been held, in several instances, with good success this year. That of Christ Church parish, East Greenwich, took place on Tuesday and Wednesday, and last week there was the Lee and Blackheath Show.

Lord Aberdare on Wednesday opened the Royal Horticultural Show at Preston. His Lordship, speaking at a luncheon held on the ground, challenged any cottage population to display greater natural taste for horticulture than the English poor people. The show is pronounced to be one of the best ever seen in the provinces.

The number of persons who sailed from the Mersey for foreign ports in the half-year just ended was 32,177—an increase on the figures for the first half of 1877 of 5622.

The Japanese Minister for Home Affairs was assassinated on May 14 by six Samourai, who afterwards surrendered themselves at the Imperial Palace.

THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S SHOW.

The Royal Agricultural Show has been held this week on Durdham-down, Bristol. It compares favourably with the average of Royal shows, both in respect of stock and of implements and machinery—exceeding several recent exhibitions in the number of stock and in the area devoted to articles used in husbandry. Three hundred and fifty horses were entered for competition, 443 cattle, 397 sheep, and 164 pigs; or a total of 1354 head of live stock. Eleven thousand seven hundred and thirty-five feet space were allotted to ordinary implements, 2847 ft. to machinery in motion, and 964 ft. to seeds and models.

The entire show was opened Wednesday morning, in threatening weather, but large numbers of people, nevertheless, soon began to pour into the yard. Lord Ellesmere takes the first and third prizes for agricultural horses foaled in 1876. The Duke of Hamilton has the first prize for a thoroughbred. Mr. Tennant, of Selby, Yorkshire, gets the first prize for a shorthorn bull, aged; and the first for a young shorthorn bull goes also to Yorkshire, to Mr. Willes, of Bedale. Mr. Taylor, of Ledbury, takes the highest prize for an aged Hereford bull, and Mr. Price, of Pembridge, for a yearling bull. Mr. Walter Farthing, of Stowey Court, near Bridgwater, takes most of the first prizes for Devons, Lord Falmouth being second in several classes. In aged bulls his Lordship is first.

Most elaborate preparations have been made by the Bristol people to give the Prince of Wales a suitable reception on Friday.

We shall give next week some Illustrations of the city of Bristol.

The Freemasons of England have, since the visit of the Prince of Wales to India, presented to the National Life-Boat Institution two splendid life-boats, as a thanksgiving for the safe return of their Grand Master. The first is stationed on the Devonshire coast; and the other was launched on Wednesday in the presence of Lord Skelmersdale, Deputy Grand Master of the craft, and an immense assemblage, at Clacton-on-Sea. Lord Skelmersdale, Deputy Grand Master, took a leading part in the ceremony.

INDIGESTION.

It is conclusively ascertained that LACTOPEPTINE will bring about the Digestion of Food in a manner perfectly identical to that obtained under the influence of the natural gastric juice. "A glance at the Formula of LACTOPEPTINE would convince even the most sceptical of the valuable results that must ensue through its administration. Composed of ptyalin, pepsine, pancreatine, hydrochloric and lactic acids, it is a combination of all the digestive agents; consequently, can never be administered without giving the utmost satisfaction; for if there is a deficiency in the system of all or any of these agents, LACTOPEPTINE will supply it, and thus assist in digesting the food, enabling the organs that produce these principles of digestion to rest and recuperate, and permanent and perfect. Price 3s. 6d.; sent post-free for 54 stamps in plain cover.

—From "Practical Medicine and Surgery," July 1877. LACTOPEPTINE being presented in saccharated form, is most agreeable to the taste, and can be administered even to the youngest child. The price of the LACTOPEPTINE is 4s. 6d. per one oz. bottle. (An ounce bottle contains forty-eight ten-grain doses.) If any difficulty is experienced in obtaining LACTOPEPTINE from your Chemist, communicate direct, sending P.O.O. for 4s. 6d. Address—CARNRICK, KIDDER, and CO., Gt. Russell-st., corner of Charlotte-st., London, W.C. Pamphlet to any address.

EPPS'S COCOA.
THE "Naval and Military Gazette" says:—
"The nutritive qualities of cocoa over either those of tea or coffee are now so generally acknowledged that the steady increase shown by official statistics in its consumption during recent years ceases to be a matter of surprise. One of the first firms to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our breakfast table was Messrs. Epps and Co., whose name, since 1839, has been so continuously before the public, and whose Homœopathic Cocoa is as familiar in our homes as the proverbial 'household words.' Those whose business it has been to watch at Messrs. Epps's works the elaborate and complex processes, and to note the care and labour bestowed before the crude cocoa bean is considered ready for consumption, cannot but admit that the popularity Messrs. Epps's productions have secured is fully deserved. The vastness of these works may be imagined when it is stated that four millions of pounds of prepared cocoa alone are prepared there yearly. The reputation gained, now many years since, for Mr. James Epps's preparation, both for its purity and its value as a dietetic, has been more than maintained. A constant increasing demand fully testifies to this—which must be as gratifying to Messrs. Epps as it is certainly flattering to the good faith they have kept with the public to secure so gratifying a result."

"All the Year Round" says:—
"Having now disposed of fancy chocolate, let us stroll to the Euston-road, hard by the Regent's Park, to Epps's cocoa manufactory, where may be studied the making of cocoa on a stupendous scale, giving a just idea of the value of these articles, not as luxuries, but as actual food."

THE "Court Journal" says:—
"In a climate so varying and trying as our own, to maintain sound and uniform health, our daily diet cannot be too carefully and attentively studied. Advancing science and recent discoveries have within the last few years been instrumental in adding several most valuable additions to our comparatively short list of dietetic foods. Foremost among these should be ranged cocoa, which, although known here several centuries previously, only came into general use within the last forty years. One of the first to popularise this now indispensable article to our table was Mr. James Epps, whose 'Prepared Cocoa' has gained such just repute for its excellent and nutritious character. Prepared originally on homœopathic principles, in a soluble and convenient form, and easy of digestion, it met a public demand, speedily became popular, until now Messrs. Epps produce over four millions of pounds of their cocoa a year, and their manufactory is the largest of its kind in this country."

"Cassell's Household Guide" says:—
"We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps and Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in the Euston-road, London."

EPPS'S COCOA.
THE "Morning Advertiser" says:—
"In the middle of the seventeenth century an announcement appeared in one of the few journals of that period, to the effect that 'out of Bishopsgate-street, at a Frenchman's house, is an excellent West India drink, called chocolate, to be sold at reasonable rates.' This is the first record we have of the introduction of cocoa into England. For a time it flourished as a fashionable drink, and then, like all fashions, subsided. Nearly two centuries after, in 1832, the duties, which had been almost prohibitive, were greatly reduced, and one of the first to take advantage of re-establishing the popularity of cocoa was Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists. Under the name of 'Prepared Cocoa' they introduced a soluble and convenient preparation, which required no boiling, and was palatable and highly nutritious. It met a public want, speedily became popular, and year by year has increased in demand, till the consumption now exceeds four millions of pounds yearly."

THE "Christian World" says:—
"'If I am to take cocoa,' said I, 'I must know what it is made of; I must examine the process; I must dive into the mystery of its manufacture; I must see and judge for myself what are the ingredients of which it is composed. With this view I made my way to the manufactory of James Epps and Co., in the Euston-road.'"

"John Bull" says:—
"In no branches of industry are recent scientific and chemical discoveries more generally applied than in those upon which our food supply is so largely dependent. The luxuries of the last generation have in many cases become the daily necessaries of the present. A forcible illustration of this is to be found in the enormous increase in the consumption of cocoa year by year—in exact proportion to the increased facilities for its manufacture. An idea of the vast extent of this industry may be gained from the fact that one firm alone—that of Messrs. Epps and Co.—now sell over four millions of pounds annually. Of Homœopathic Cocoa of Messrs. Epps has, during the many years it has been before the public, gained great and just repute, which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly entitle it to. A cocoa in soluble form, and combining what are technically known as 'flesh-forming' and 'heat-giving' properties, is clearly an invaluable addition to our scanty list of dietetic foods. Such Messrs. Epps claim for their prepared cocoa, and such analysis and—most valuable of all—experience has proved it to be."

THE "Church Review" says:—
"Although we cannot yet boast of a free breakfast-table, still the active legislation in furtherance of that object during the last half century leaves us much to be thankful for. A striking instance of the general good resulting from the removal of heavy imposts upon our food supply is afforded by the marvellous increase in the consumption of cocoa since 1832, up to which period an almost prohibitive duty was levied. In 1830 the total amount consumed in this country was less than half a million pounds yearly. At the present time one firm alone, that of Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists, sell annually four million pounds."

EPPS'S COCOA.
THE "Civilian" says:—
"In the seventeenth century, before either tea or coffee had found their way into the English markets, chocolate was a favourite beverage with the luxurious classes at that period; it then fetched an almost fabulous price per pound. To-day, when modern science and enterprise have placed it within the reach of every class, cocoa is not only still regarded as a palatable and refreshing drink, but is valued for its nutritive and dietetic qualities. One of the first, we believe, who had credited with introducing cocoa in its present form is Mr. James Epps. Prepared on sound dietetic principles, Epps's Homœopathic cocoa contains all the nutritive properties of the native product in such a form that they are rendered thoroughly soluble, and, therefore, much more easy of digestion. The natural superabundance of fat present in raw cocoa is, moreover, not only counteracted, but made to serve one of the most essential functions of sound diet. Messrs. Epps's works are now, perhaps, the largest in the country, the cocoa produced there amounting to many million pounds a year."

"Land and Water" says:—
"Through the kindness of Messrs. Epps, I recently had an opportunity of seeing the many complicated and varied processes the cacao bean passes through ere it is sold for public use, and being interested and highly pleased with what I saw during the visit to the manufactory, I thought a brief account of the cacao and the way it is manufactured by Messrs. Epps to fit it for a wholesome and nutritious beverage, might be likewise of interest to the readers of 'Land and Water.'"

THE "Mining World" says:—
"The preparation of pure and nutritious articles of diet is, in point of philanthropy, a noble work. The wear and tear upon brain and muscle in this age is growing more and more intense, so that without some compensating influence the end must be hopeless collapse in individuals and national decay collectively. Fresh air and more wholesome and nutritious diet must be had at any price. Both food and drink need great improvement. A few chemists have done great public service in this respect. Mr. James Epps, in the preparation of cocoa in its various forms, has done more, perhaps, than any other person to supply the tables of even the poorest with a most agreeable and wholesome article of diet. The application of modern science at his extensive works has brought cocoa, once the dear-bought luxury of the higher classes, within the reach of all; and there may now be found on the labourer's table cocoa in better and more nutritious form than the Royal table cocoa in better and more nutritious form than the Royal breakfast-tables of early Kings could boast. Cocoa as prepared by Mr. Epps is palatable, refreshing, strengthening, and incidentally preferable to the trashy tea and coffee in general use."

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

M. Urbain Dubois may hold his hand. Some weeks ago I ventured to hint in this place that the eminent chef to the German Emperor, and author of "Cosmopolitan Cookery," might astonish Europe ere the Congress broke up with a plat de son metier: say, a "Surprise à la Beaconsfield." The Premier Earl (I mean the Earl who is Premier) has chosen to cook the dish himself, and to present it, with a complacent smile, to admiring Europe. The "Surprise à la Beaconsfield," otherwise the Treaty by which Great Britain undertakes to protect Asiatic Turkey, if necessary by force of arms, and Turkey consents on her part to the occupation of the island of Cyprus by British troops, will infinitely astonish all those who did not know at least a fortnight ago of what materials the dish was to be composed. Each daily newspaper is at present complacently asserting that it knew all about the Anglo-Turkish treaty ever so long ago, but that nobody else did.

Meanwhile, the people who have (fortunately for themselves) no politics, but to whom grammatical purity is everything, and especially the precisians who have been so desperately hard on poor dear Mr. Edmund Yates (I, too, had a fling at him) for his trifling slip about premières amours, may find some occupation in dissecting the remarkably curious diction of the text of the Treaty. It is the oddest French that I have read for a long time. Just mark that which follows "necessary reforms," "Ayant trait à la bonne administration." Note likewise, "Sa Majesté Impériale le Sultan consent, en outre, d'assigner l'Ile de Chypre, pour être occupée et administrée par elle." Far up and away in the contest England is indicated as the Power which is to occupy Cyprus; but the final "elle" might refer grammatically to his Imperial Majesty the Sultan (majesty is feminine) or the island of Cyprus itself. In the annex mark particularly the passage about the Mahometan tribunal which "connaîtra exclusivement des affaires religieuses et non pas d'autres." "Connaîtra" should surely be "prendre connaissance." "Ecoles Musulmans" should be "Ecoles Musulmanes." "Par le canal" should be "par la voie," at least so I thought until, puzzled by this strange language, I turned to a scarlet-bound volume which I brought from Constantinople, and which contains the text, in French and Turkish, of the Capitulations or Conventions concluded between the European Powers and the Sublime Porte from the reign of Francis I. of France down to the year 1838. And there I found the expressions which had puzzled me, "ayant trait," "par le canal," and so forth. The mystery was explained. The French of the new Treaty is Dragoman's French: French of Pera, not that of Paris.

Ah! but it stirs the heart to read those old Capitulations and listen, in the preambles of the treaties, to the rehearsal of the style and titles of the Padishah:—a Grand Turk then, in good sooth. What do you think of this, as a beginning? "I, the Emperor and Sultan Mahmoud, Son of the Sultan Moustafa, Always Victorious . . . . . distributer of crowns to the Chosroes who sit upon thrones . . . . the shadow of Heaven upon earth, Sovereign of the three great cities of Constantinople, Adrianople, and Broussa, also of Damascus, 'odoriferous of Paradise' . . . . Lord of Tripoli, Syria, and Egypt, 'that rarity of centuries' ('rarity of centuries' is good), master of Arabia, Africa, Barca, and Aleppo . . . . of Bagdad, of Erzeroum 'the delicious,' of Kars, Van, and Caramania . . . of the Morea, of Candia, Chios, Cyprus, and Rhodes . . . of Algiers, Tripoli, and Tunis . . . of the White Sea and the Black Sea . . . of Turcomania, Kurdistan, and Circassia . . . 'of the noble tribes of Tartars, and all the hordes belonging to them' . . . of Albania, Moldavia, Wallachia, and the fortress of Belgrade." This is but a brief abstract of a list of dignities filling a whole quarto printed page, and which, in the Arabic-Persian character, looks very imposing indeed. Take physic, pomp; and, in humility remember the nursery rhyme about one Humpty Dumpty that sate on a wall.

I have an idea that all sorts and conditions of people must derive benefit, immediate or remote, from the British occupation of Cyprus. We are bound to civilise the beautiful island, if only in compensation for the mischief done there by Richard Cœur de Lion, who (hear it not, Sir John Lubbock) is accused of having, in revenge for the misconduct of King Isaac (of the silver fetters), knocked most of the ancient Greek and Byzantine monuments "into a cocked hat." We may expect to see a Grand Trunk Railway of Cyprus advertised shortly. Think of a station at Paphos (actually Baffo), with excursions to the Temple of Venus Anadyomene. I should like to be a postal and telegraphic clerk at Paphos. What work I should have on St. Valentine's Day!

We shall all have "Cyprus on the brain" for some time to come, so that I need no authority for reminding historical students of the fact that at Limoussa, in Cyprus, Berengaria of Navarre, the learned, beautiful, and good daughter of Sancho the Wise, was married with great state and pomp to Richard the Lion-Heart. The ladies will be interested to learn that on the auspicious occasion the King of England wore a tunic of rose-coloured satin and a mantle of striped silver-tissue, brocaded with silver half-moons. "He had yellow curls and a bright complexion," says Vinisauf, the chronicler, "and looked like Mars himself." The bride wore her hair parted à la Vierge, with a transparent veil pendent on each side like a Spanish mantilla, and a double diadem of gold and jewels. Berengaria was crowned Queen Consort of Cyprus (Isaac having so misbehaved himself by wrecking Richard's ships) as well as of England; so that in occupying Cyprus in 1878 the Majesty of England has only got its own again.

Mem: It was at Cyprus, according to gentle Miss Agnes Strickland, that Richard, protesting against the proceedings of King Isaac, uttered in his wrath the only words in the English language that he was ever known to speak. "Ha! de Debil!" quoth Cœur-de-Lion, "he speke like one fole Breton." Please to remember, likewise, that the bones of Richard's Lord Chancellor and the Great Seal of England itself, lost in a storm, are lying perdus somewhere in Cypriot waters.

It is a far cry from Limoussa to Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket; yet, through an odd little coincidence, the transition of ideas from the Mediterranean to Mr. Mapleson's theatre is easy. Just as the newspaper compositors were setting up the type of the Anglo-Turkish Convention, there was being revived with great splendour and with much success at Her Majesty's the late Michael William Balfe's opera of "Il Talismano," the part of Edith Plantagenet, prima donna assoluta, being sustained by that accomplished and fascinating young cantatrice Madame Etelka Gerster, while the rôle of Queen Berengaria fell to Mdlle. Minnie Hauk.

I am glad, first, that Madame Gerster should have surpassed herself in the character of Edith, because she is one of the finest and most brightly promising artists of the day; and I am right glad that the revival of "Il Talismano" should have been a triumph, because I hold that, as a nation, we have not yet half paid the debt of gratitude which we owe to the memory of Balfe. The most natural, the most tuneful, the most sympathetic of English composers has not been by any means forgotten; but he has been neglected. I rejoice to learn that a bust of Balfe has just been placed in the National Gallery at Dublin; but I look in vain for any sculptured memorial of the compeer of Purcell and Croft and Harry Lawes in Westminster Abbey.

The "installation," as the French say, of the British Museum is to be thoroughly reorganised. The Transfer of Collections Bill has been read a second time in the Commons, and will pass the Lords and receive the Royal assent, it is to be hoped, before the Feast of St. Grouse. The stuffed birds, beasts, and fishes, the beetles and cockchafers, and the geological specimens are to go to South Kensington; and the premises in Great Russell-street are to be exclusively devoted to their legitimate purpose—that of a Library and a Museum of Sculpture and Antiquities generally.

Students of zoology, palæontology, geology, entomology, botany, and cognate sciences may regret the banishment from Bloomsbury of some thousands of glass cases full of dry-as-dust specimens; but the general holiday-making, sight-seeing public will exult, I should say, at the change. Have you ever watched the expression of intense, hopeless weariness in the countenances of a party of country cousins wandering through the Scientific Departments of the British Museum? Ever so many years ago, when I was young, there was a lady with whom I "kept company." We used to quarrel, and then we used to make it up; but the reconciliation on my part (man is a vindictive animal) was only partial. I used to bide my time, and at the first convenient opportunity take the adored one of my heart, on a public day, to the British Museum. I kept her strictly to the Scientific Departments. At the expiration of about twenty minutes she would begin to yawn. Before half an hour was over she manifested unmistakable symptoms of beginning to weep. After that, seeing that she had suffered enough, we would flee the baleful shades of Bloomsbury. I allowed her to recruit her exhausted strength at the nearest pastrycook's, and we made it up—till the next time.

Mem: The Museum of Patents at South Kensington is not a bad ground for experimentalising in the Art of Ingeniously Tormenting. Or try the Museum of Economic Geology in Jermyn-street. Or, as an infallible recipe, take your victim to a lecture (in a darkened amphitheatre) on a drop of water magnified ever so many thousand times. "Adams's Orrery" at the old Adelphi used to be a bore nearly as fearful as the foregoing.

A gentleman writes to the Times to complain that recently, travelling by rail between Tarragona and Barcelona, the train was stopped by brigands, who robbed him of his watch and chain, money, &c., worth in all £150, and personally maltreated him into the bargain—taking even his railway ticket and leaving him penniless, and with his clothes half torn off his back. An analogous mishap—but with a difference—befell me on the railway between Barcelona and Zaragoza in February, 1875. Our train was stopped by a gang of armed marauders, who called themselves Carlists, but who were in reality brigands. I was the only Englishman in the train, and my Spanish fellow-travellers were mercilessly fleeced; but the brigands left me alone. I took off my hat to the Chief Robber, made him a low bow, and addressed him in a neat speech about Queen Victoria, and the happiness enjoyed by the loyal subjects of her Majesty. He stared at me, laughed, bowed, and let me go scot free. Perhaps he took me for a Carlist or a brigand retired from business. At any rate, he forbore to pick my pocket.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

Our Illustrations for this week represent, first, the "Indian Pavilion," erected for the collection of gifts from the Princes and Chiefs of India to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, which is situated at the entrance to the British Indian Section of the Exhibition, in the grand vestibule or north-end transept of the Palace in the Champ de Mars; secondly, part of the series of five different house-fronts, exemplifying distinctive stages in the progress of English domestic architecture, which are situated in the Central Avenue or Street of Nations, extending the length of the Champ de Mars buildings. We have, upon a former occasion, described both these structures, of which Illustrations are now given; and we need not, therefore, go over the same details respecting their architectural design and character, or the place which they hold in the arrangement of the Exhibition. The architect and official agent for the British Indian section is Mr. C. Purdon Clarke. We would take this opportunity again to commend, though many of our readers have already become familiar, at South Kensington and at Westminster, with the contents of the British Indian Section, the very interesting and instructive Handbook, written by Dr. G. C. M. Birdwood, C.S.I., for the Indian Committee of the Royal Commission. It gives a compendious, concise, and minutely accurate historical account of Indian manufactures, husbandry, and commerce, from the remotest known antiquity to the present time, with much botanical, geological, and other information concerning the material resources of her Majesty's Asiatic dominions. We never met with a catalogue so well worth keeping and studying for years after the Exhibition. The successive English detached houses, each with its narrow strip of side garden along the Central Avenue, where it is entered from the Grand Vestibule next to the British Indian Section, have been enumerated in the order in which they are passed from that entrance—namely, the Queen Anne style town house, designed by Mr Norman Shaw; secondly, the Prince of Wales's Exhibition Pavilion, occupied by his Royal Highness as President of the Royal Commission, which was designed by Mr. Gilbert Redgrave, in the Jacobean style, and is distinguished by the flag; thirdly, the façade of red brick, with Mr. Doulton's terra-cotta ornamentation, and with deep pointed arches, designed by Messrs. Tarring and Wilkinson; fourthly, the old-fashioned and picturesque timber-frame house, of pitch-pine, filled in with plaster, designed by Mr. Gilbert Redgrave, and allotted to the Canadian section; fifthly and lastly, the old English country house of William III.'s time, the framework of which is likewise of timber. It will be observed that the houses stand in the reverse order in our present Illustration, being on the left hand side of the spectator, who is supposed to be going in the opposite direction to that contemplated in the former occasion; the Central Avenue, running from north to south, and the British Section, as well as the British Indian, being placed on the west side of the Avenue. The remaining Illustration is that of the portal which gives entrance to the Swiss Section, and which is located a great way farther on towards the south end of the Exhibition, on the side of the Champ de Mars next the Ecole Militaire. The Belgian Section, indeed, lies next beyond it, and the Russian is on the nearer side of it; the distances to be walked in this Great Exhibition are very considerable.

PARIS AT THE CAFÉ.—NO. II.

Let us attempt some slight description of the cafés as they appear to the outward eye. The one word "mirrors" sums up all that need be said of the impression they make when one steps across their thresholds; unless, indeed, "windows" be more often the accurate word—for very many cafés seem to be made as nearly as possible entirely of outer walls, and these walls all window. For the interiors in other respects, they do not differ greatly from their copies in London, except that they are, perhaps, cleaner and lighter and brighter in colour; one might even, perhaps, say more gaudy, for this is a fault from which the undoubted good taste of the French does not always save them. There are, indeed, many picturesque and queer little cafés to be found by the explorer of Paris,—most of which ought to be marked DANGEROUS, in large letters; but the larger and more famous ones differ, as far as their interiors are concerned, more in their clientèle than in appearance from such places as Gatti's, in London.

The exterior, however, is a thing which we have not in England, and, until we get a new climate, never can have. On a summer's evening, clear and dry—Paris seems to be quite innocent of dew—the number of little round tables in front of the cafés of every quarter sets calculation at defiance. Every age and every class would seem to spend its evenings in the open air, sipping, staring, chatting—no, talking hard—and at some places flirting in a sufficiently marked way; at others—whether in consequence of a formal rule or of a lex non scripta—one sees only men. It is a very pleasant thing, and a thing we entirely want in London, to have one's evening coffee and conversation sweetened by the fresh air, made a repast for poets by the framework of beauty in which it is placed. Sitting on a cool starlight night at a café, perhaps at the corner of two intersecting boulevards, one looks down the long lines of light twinkling away into the distance, broken now and then by intervening trees; one hears the tinkling bells and sees the red and green lamps of the tramcars slowly approaching and going away in the dark; the sky is of a sombre blue, and it is only quite near one that the brilliant cafés and the many lamps lighten the scene—but the colours just here are bright and distinct, the blue blouses of the workmen, the dresses of their wives, often in broad stripes (of rose and grey, perhaps), the light garments of girls walking with that coquettish, affected step so thoroughly Parisian, the tight black silk dresses of maidens apparently more demure, the blue coats and red trousers of the sergents-de-ville, the white linen suit and straw hat of many a good bourgeois, the white aprons of curly-haired waiters, the white horses of omnibuses glimmering near and far, and, brightest of all, the illuminated "kiosk" over the way, where you may buy all newspapers, from the respectable Temps to the latest revellings of vulgarity under some untranslatable name. One can hardly sit here without thinking of that Byron-and-absinthe poet, that most musical of French singers, Alfred de Musset: what hours upon hours he must have passed thus, watching these sights, musing, rhyming, sighing—and smoking! We know the poems born of these evening reveries—some of them bitterly merry, full of mockery and scorn; others intensely sad and tender, memories of happier times and wasted years.

O puissance du temps! O légères années!
Vous emportez nos pleurs, nos cris et nos regrets,
Mais la pitié vous prend, et sur nos fleurs fanées
Vous ne marchez jamais.

Parisian café life is not without its poetry, its melancholy, and its tragedy; but these are hardly on the surface, and this is, perhaps, hardly the place to go deeper down to look for them.

It is with the surface that we are just now concerned; and the number of Parisian cafés is so vast that the Englishman making only a short visit to Paris can hardly gain even the most superficial knowledge of them without some sort of guide to direct him to those which are most interesting, whether from the memories of their past or from their present popularity. Unfortunately, such a guide is difficult to find—such a guide in printed form, I mean; I know of no English book whatever upon the subject, and in French there are few which would interest any but those who really do not need them—Parisians well up in the minor history of their city during the last twenty years.*

Such a want cannot be really supplied in an article of a few pages, but some notes and reminiscences of half a dozen or a dozen of typical cafés—as Tortoni's, the Régence, the Soufflet, the Américain, the Variétés—may not be uninteresting to those who either have been there, or "still would go." Which to choose for mention or description one hardly knows; but perhaps the best principle of selection will be to take, as far as possible, those which are the most unlike each other.

The father of all the cafés, the famous Procope of the Rue de l'Ancienne Comédie, is almost a desert nowadays: the whole street and its neighbours have been drained of their life by the Boulevard St. Michel, which now, although perhaps less favourably situated than the older and smaller streets—being, one would have thought, a little too far to the east—yet dominates the entire quarter. But nothing can deprive the Café de Procope of its heritage of great names: Voltaire, Rousseau, Diderot, Mirabeau, De Musset, George Sand, Gambetta—these names are only the most famous among the hundreds treasured in its annals. "Voltaire's table" is one of the relics of the place, though one does not know whether he ever sat by it; and on the panelling of the room is his portrait—not a very striking likeness. The story of his going disguised to a café, after a "first night," to hear what was the general opinion of his new piece, is well enough known, and very characteristic of the man—of his pettiness, his eager vanity, and his genuine desire to know the truth. The "Procope" was in its time the favourite resort of Piron—then a wit of the first order, one of the leaders of a brilliant band, now, strangely enough, hardly remembered except by the epitaph he composed for himself—

Ci-git Piron, qui ne fut rien
Pas même académicien!

And here, in later days, were often seen the most poetical of French writers of prose and of verse, George Sand and Alfred de Musset, the former in man's dress, with her powerful, dark, handsome face, and long black hair, the latter with a face rather effeminate, with hair flowing back, weak chin, and keen but yet dreamy eyes. Still more recently there came here—as to many other cafés—a young and eager Southerner, who talked admirably and read everything, and of whom all Europe has since heard: Léon Gambetta.

But the Café Procope is very empty now. Only a few steady old gentlemen read the newspapers there, and an enthusiastic young student from the country sometimes visits the house of many memories once—but not twice. If we want to exchange the past for the future we must go along past the School of Medicine, eastward to the cafés which those who are to be the shining lights of hospitals and law courts crowd every night.

* Such books are the Cafés et Cabarets of Delvau (a little out of date now, and chiefly valuable for the etchings with which it is illustrated, and a collection of newspaper sketches published last year by Maxime Rude, from which I shall quote some anecdotes.

NEW BOOKS.

Characteristically cynical is the tone which pervades The Russians of To-Day, by the author of "The Member for Paris," &c. (Smith, Elder, and Co.); but the cynicism, as is usual with the author, is of the neat and pungent sort which reminds one of a La Rochefoucauld or of a Talleyrand, not of the coarse and revolting kind which recalls the manner of some vulgar demagogue. The book, moreover, is very seasonable, for Russia and the Russians have not yet ceased to be objects of interest and study among us; and the author, whether he really be entitled from his personal knowledge to lay down the law or not, has quite the air of a man who is perfectly familiar with the subject on which he has undertaken to enlighten his countrymen. It is worthy of notice, in any case, that he mentions, in his introductory sketch of Russian history, the will of Peter the Great as if there were no doubt whatever about the authenticity of the famous document so called, and he expressly states that it "has become, so to say, the charter of Russian Imperialism." In the same introductory sketch he makes the following somewhat curious remark touching the Czar Nicholas: "It is suspected that he committed suicide. Anyhow, he died broken-hearted." The expression has an odd sound; but it probably means that, as no man, if we are to believe round assertions, ever died of a broken heart, there are good grounds for believing that the Czar's death was self-inflicted, as it followed so scon after the events which may well have broken his proud heart. However that may be, our more immediate business is with "the Russians of to-day." First of all we have a sketch of a Russian noble, impoverished through the emancipation of the serfs; and we learn that, if in the late war between Russia and Turkey he and his lady-wife contributed freely from their scanty remnant of treasure for the service of their country, it was "because he looked to the conquest of Turkey as certain to secure him a lucrative berth, and has for some months pictured himself as installed in Bulgaria and initiating that misused province into the mysteries of the government system under which he has himself thriven." Next, we have a sketch of "an emancipated village," a sketch which emphasises the saying about the quantity of humanity that there is in human nature, for it appears that the emancipated Russian serf resembles the emancipated West Indian slave in knowing "of nothing on earth so good as idleness," and in displaying a disposition to "as often as not lie down and snore away the whole afternoon," under the belief that, when emancipation was decreed and there was nobody any longer to "thrash" him "into industry," forthwith "his working days were over." There is this, however, in favour of the emancipated Russian serf, that "he would work for a fair wage, if it were offered him;" but even he "has a shrewd sort of notion that if he bettered his lot overmuch by labour he would draw upon himself the attentive eye of the taxgatherer." After this we are treated to a picture of "a Mir, or peasant association," organised upon a cheerful system which "has simply caused the peasant to exchange the domination of his old master for the more grinding tyranny of many masters." Then we proceed to a consideration of "the temperance question," a question which is a serious, a difficult, and a complicated one even in this country, where, however, nobody would dare to affirm that "very summary measures" have ever been "taken towards forcing the people to contribute to the revenue by their intemperance," much as a Chancellor of the Exchequer might find himself at a loss to make both ends meet if teetotalism should become universal. And so we proceed from topic to topic, from sketch to sketch, biographical as well as social, political, military, or other, until we have taken a bird's-eye view of the Russians in general and a closer survey of some Russians in particular. Among the latter are included the Czar himself, Prince Gortschakoff, and Count Schouvaloff. Altogether, a pleasanter book to read, with its mixture of gossip, smart sayings, anecdotes, and serious information, it would not be easy to name, at any rate among recent publications. There is nothing said about any previous appearance of the separate articles which collectively make up the interesting volume, but some of them certainly have a familiar look and contain familiar turns of expression, so that, if the style also be taken into account, no great mistake probably would be perpetrated by anybody who should maintain that they have all of them already been a source of delight to the readers of some well-served newspaper. In reading them, however, one is disposed to take many of the sweeping statements with a mental proviso of "exceptis excipiendis." The writer, it should be mentioned, exhibits decidedly anti-Russian tendencies, and alludes to Mr. Gladstone as "a man soured at having lost his popularity and burning to revenge himself by hampering his successor in office."

A great military reputation would be sufficient to float a heavier and a less opportune volume than Field Marshal Count Moltke's Letters from Russia, translated by Robina Napier (C. Kegan Paul and Co.); a volume, moreover, which externally provokes a desire for intimate acquaintance, and, by its internal type and concomitants, sustains the reader's frame of mind whilst the acquaintance is a-making. It cannot be concealed, however, that the letters were written a long while ago—in the year 1856, in fact, when the now illustrious writer of them was a comparative nonentity, though he at that date was of sufficient importance to visit Russia in attendance upon the then Crown Prince of Prussia on the occasion of the present Czar's coronation. The letters were written to the illustrious writer's wife, who, it may be as well to remark, was an Englishwoman, since her nationality accounts for many allusions and illustrations which one might otherwise be surprised to find where they are. The letters contain nothing at all remarkable; they are scarcely more or less than what might have been expected of a well-educated man with an eye for observation and with a capacity of describing in detail, without becoming tedious, whatever the favourable position he occupied gave him an excellent opportunity of examining as a witness and a partaker. It is not improbable that, had not he been destined to afford special correspondents occupation for their industrious, graphic, and brilliant pens, he might himself have shone in the profession of a special correspondent, whether of the military or of any other stamp. Some of his "reflections on the life of the Russian people, both public and private," are very interesting, and are believed to be in many respects as applicable now as they were when they were written, "notwithstanding the great reforms introduced by the Emperor." Touching the late Emperor Nicholas, Count von Moltke says nothing about the suspicion of suicide which has been mentioned in connection with the proud Potentate's death. The Count says roundly, "Grief at the issue of the war was the disease which killed the Emperor Nicolas. This antique character could not bend his will—he must die." Many readers will consider that the most interesting part of the volume is the short "introductory notice," wherein a brief sketch is given of the great strategist's life; how that he "was baptised Helmuth Karl Bernhardt," being the third among the seven sons of a Lieutenant-General in the Danish army; how that he was born at Parchim, Oct. 26, 1800; how that he went to the Cadet School at Copenhagen; how that he entered the Danish service, and, seeing the small prospect it offered, soon left it for the Prussian; how that he was a slender, blue-eyed, fair-haired, quiet, unobtrusive, zealous, hard-working, pleasing youth; how that, in 1832, he "was appointed to the staff, and continued in that service for three years, during which time his extraordinary powers of combination and organisation were developed by the scientific and exact nature of his studies;" how that he served with the Turks in various ways; how that he gained "distinction in the war with Denmark in 1864;" how that he "came out" in the war between Prussia and Austria in 1866; and how that, after the Franco-German war, such are the modern facilities for rolling the snowball of fame, he became a thing miraculous, a prodigious military genius, whose magnitude makes dwarfs of Hannibal, Cæsar, Napoleon, Wellington. Count Moltke himself, however, is rather distressed than gratified by what he calls the "boundless laudations" of the public, whom he is cynical enough to consider capable of dealing out unmerited blame and unmerited praise with equal want of discrimination. The Count, moreover, seems to cling to the old-fashioned belief in the Lord of Hosts, though, perhaps, with a modification similar to that which led to the remark about Providence being on the side of the stronger battalions.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

The Duke of Connaught presided at the anniversary festival of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, which was held on Monday evening at the Alexandra Palace. The company numbered about 730, including many persons holding high office among the Freemasons. His Royal Highness, proposing the principal toast, "Prosperity to the Institution," made an energetic appeal on its behalf. Mr. Binckes, the secretary, announced that the subscriptions received from the various lodges amounted to £10,100, of which £4734 was contributed by the London and metropolitan district. There were yet twenty lists to come in.

Mr. Samuel Lowry presided last Saturday afternoon over the distribution of prizes at the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools, which are situated at Russell-hill, Caterham Junction. There are in the schools 108 boys and sixty-three girls, and a recent extension of the building will cost about £10,000. In addition to the examination the children sang an excellent programme of music.

The receipts of Madame Trebelli's concert recently given at St. James's Hall on behalf of the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest amounted to £550, including special contributions from Madame Adelina Patti, Mr. Santley, Mr. Henry Irving, Signor Foli, and Signor Nicolini.

The concert announced by Madame Etelka Gerster in aid of the widows and orphans of the sailors drowned in the Grosser Kurfürst given on Monday afternoon at the German Embassy, proved a great success. The programme, consisting chiefly of vocal pieces, was varied and interesting.—Mr. D. Bandmann has received a note from the German Ambassador acknowledging the receipt of a cheque for one hundred pounds as the result of the benefit which Mr. Bandmann arranged at Willis's Rooms. "Pray accept my thanks," says Count Münster, "for this, as well as for the great trouble and labour you must have bestowed upon your noble and praiseworthy undertaking. I consider the result an excellent one; £100 is, in Germany, a splendid outcome."

The Countess of Zetland opened last Saturday a new building, to be used as workshops and stores, at the Home for Little Boys, near Farningham; and the corner-stone of a new cottage home, the gift of a lady, was laid by Mrs. F. J. Horniman. Subsequently about 200 ladies and gentlemen sat down to luncheon under a large marquee erected in the grounds, Mr. W. H. Willans presiding. Later in the day a meeting was held in the chapel, under the presidency of Sir Edmund Hay Currie, and the boys were examined under the direction of the Rev. H. C. Wilson. There was a distribution of prizes; and after tea, served in the cottage homes, the boys engaged in athletic sports in the cricket field.

A paper on the "Extension of Provident Dispensaries" was read on Monday by Sir Charles Trevelyan at a meeting of the Charity Organisation Society, advocating the application of the joint-stock or mutual assurance principle, as furnishing the only means whereby the medical profession can be placed in effective relation to the body of the people, working-class families being in general unable to pay even the lowest scale of professional fees. The Duke of Northumberland and Lord F. Cavendish, M.P., who presided, spoke in support of the object of the meeting. A resolution was carried empowering the committee of the society to take an early opportunity of conferring with the leading representatives of the working classes, and especially with the sick and benefit clubs, for the purpose of arriving at some practical issue.

The half-yearly meeting of the subscribers of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Old Kent-road and Margate, was held on Monday at the Cannon-street Hotel—Mr. Charles Few, treasurer, presiding—when ten boys and fifteen girls, out of a list of fifty-nine candidates, were elected. During the past year fifty-four children were admitted into the asylum, and fifty-one were discharged upon completing their term. In 1877 there were thirty-eight children apprenticed, and the total number apprenticed during the last sixty-six years was 1590, at a cost to the charity of £15,195. The two asylums will accommodate 300 children.

The annual meeting of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, 27, Red-lion-square, was held on the 5th inst. at Hyde Park-gardens (the residence of Mrs. Scaramanga), under the presidency of Lord Ebury. The meeting, which was well attended, was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Fraser, the Rev. E. H. Hobbins, Dr. Armitage, Mr. Carter, Mr. Mead (one of the blind Scripture-readers), and Mr. W. Colmer, the secretary. From the report read and the various speeches made it appeared that the society was doing a very large and important work among the blind poor of London, of whom 713 are under home visitation, and between 200 and 300 are receiving regular instruction in day classes held in different parts of London.—Lord Shaftesbury presided last Saturday at the annual festival of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at the college in Westow-street, Upper Norwood. The proceedings began with an inspection of the college, which was followed by readings given by the pupils, and by a concert, in which the pupils also took the principal part. The meeting was addressed by Lord Shaftesbury, the Duke of Westminster, Sir Rutherford Alcock, Lord Richard Grosvenor, and others. Dr. Armitage said the cost of each pupil was £60 a year, but that 70 or 80 per cent of the inmates of the institution learned to maintain themselves, chiefly as pianoforte-tuners.

A recital of "The Merchant of Venice" was given by Mr. Brandram on Monday at 20, Arlington-street (by permission of the Marchioness of Salisbury), on behalf of the funds of the Adult Orphan Institution. Princess Christian, who is president of the ladies' committee, was present. The Adult Orphan Institution (which is in Regent's Park) receives and educates the orphan daughters of officers of the Army and Navy and of clergymen, and is much in need of increased funds, especially of annual subscriptions.

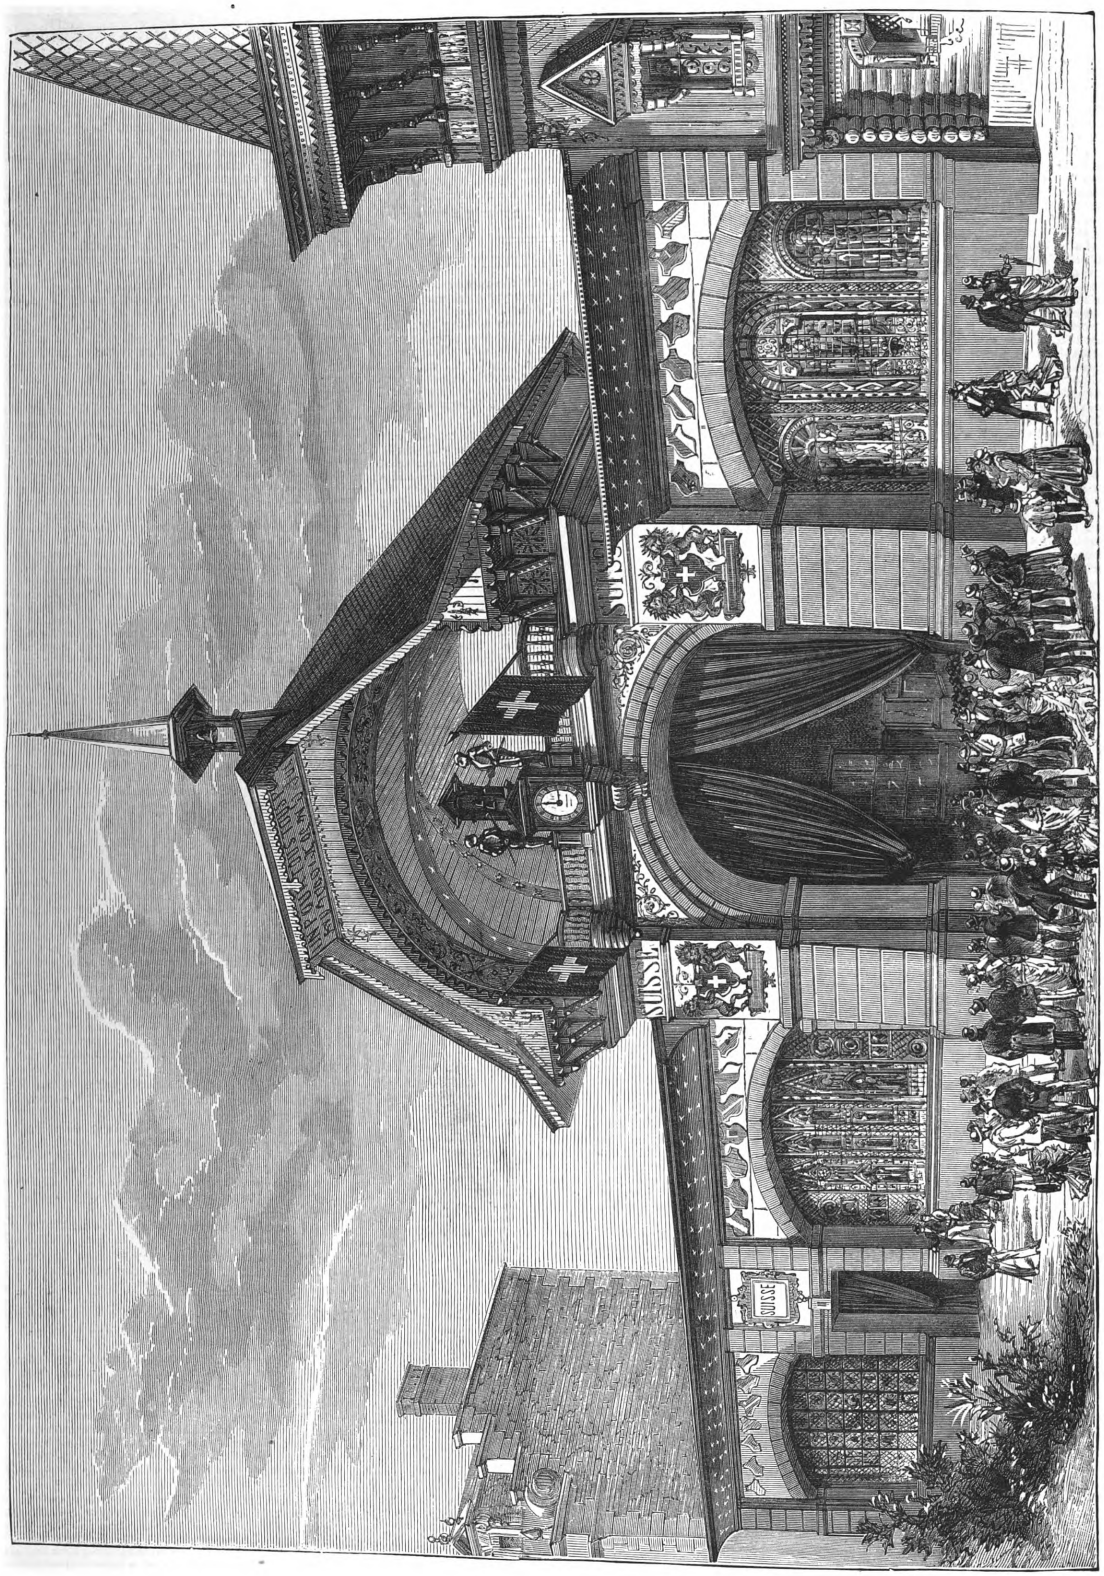
The first of several projected homes for girls employed in the factories of the metropolis was opened on Tuesday at 88, St. John's-street, West Smithfield. Based as they will be upon the principles applied to the highly successful Homes for Working Boys, the institution of these needed refuges from insufficient, and sometimes squalid, accommodation is a step upon which those whose comfort is contemplated may well congratulate themselves. The aim of the committee, which includes many well-known philanthropic ladies and gentlemen, is, in a few works, to provide homes that shall be as bright, and happy, and homelike as possible. The scale of weekly payments for board and lodging will vary according to the wages earned by the girls. The highest terms, as at present suggested, are breakfast, dinner, and tea for 4s. 6d. a week, and lodging for 3s. The establishment opened on Tuesday contains twelve rooms, and can accommodate forty girls. At a breakfast, by which the inauguration was marked, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided, there being nearly one hundred supporters of the movement present, including the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., the Hon. T. H. Pelham, Alderman Sir Robert Carden, Dr. Donald Fraser, Dr. Gladstone, Mr. G. Hanbury, Mr. Denny, Mr. John Shrimpton (hon. sec.), and the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird (treasurer), who stated that the subscriptions he had received amounted to £788. £500 had been expended on repairs. Several speeches were made advocating the extension of the plan, and explaining the great need for institutions such as that whose opening was being celebrated. Towards the conclusion of the proceedings Mr. Morley offered to subscribe £300 (half the required amount) towards the establishment of a second home. To make up the remaining sum, Mr. Denny said he would contribute £100, Sir R. Carden, Mr. Hanbury, Dr. Gladstone, and Mr. R. C. Morgan each promising £50.

The half-yearly general court of the Royal Humane Society was held on Tuesday at the offices, Trafalgar-square, Mr. W. Hawes, the treasurer, presiding. The minutes of the several committee meetings having been read and confirmed, Mr. Young, the secretary, read the report, which stated that since December last the number of cases brought under the notice of the society of persons having been in danger of drowning was sixty-three. Many were successfully treated and restored, but five were beyond recovery. During the same time five persons had been prevented from committing suicide. The number of cases which had occurred in Hyde Park during the half year had been twenty-five, and twenty-one were restored, two were beyond recovery, and two were dead when discovered. One person had been prevented from committing suicide. On the motion of the chairman the report was adopted. It was then resolved unanimously to award the silver medallion of the society to Navigating Sub-Lieutenant A. E. Saul and H. Eade, ordinary seaman, of her Majesty's ship Vestal, for the following act of gallantry:—On Feb. 3 last the pinnace of the Vestal, in charge of Mr. Saul, and with a crew of thirteen all told, foundered off Cape Tanyon, on the north-west coast of Madagascar, and sank suddenly in deep water. A heavy sea was running and the ebb-tide setting off shore, the nearest point to which was about four miles off. Most of the boat's gear, masts, &c., sank with her, but a few small spars and empty barricoes floated. Mr. Saul at first supported himself on one of these, but hearing cries and observing a man named Suter in a distressed condition, gave up his barricoe and swam for the shore without any support. Henry Eade was supporting himself on the sun-awning, but, observing a man named Richard Rowsell was sinking, gave it up to him, and he also struck out for the shore. Suter and Rowsell were, unfortunately among those who were lost; but this does not detract from the gallant and self-sacrificing acts of Mr. Saul and Eade, as at that time there seemed little hope of reaching the shore at all. Owing to the direction of the sea, they could not make for the nearest point of land, and eventually reached a point from six to seven miles from the scene of the disaster, after being in the water seven hours. Of the crew of thirteen, eight only reached the shore. The silver medallion was also awarded to George R. White for trying to save his brother, Harry C. White, who was capsized from a canoe in the Mississippi; and also to Sub-Lieutenant F. H. Boyer, of her Majesty's ship Modeste, for trying to save W. C. Gibson, who was washed overboard in Himé Sima Roads, Japan, on a dark and tempestuous night last winter. The silver clasp was awarded to Lieutenant Lewis E. Wintz (the recipient having in 1867 received the silver medal) for jumping overboard to the rescue of John J. Maker, who fell from aloft off Tenedos on Dec. 19 last.

The summer fête at the Village Home for Orphan, Neglected, and Destitute Girls, Barkingside, Ilford, Essex, was held on Wednesday.

Cardinal Manning has given directions that next Sunday the collection for the Hospital Sunday Fund shall take place in all the churches of the Roman Catholic diocese of Westminster. Dr. Danell, Bishop of Southwark, has also made arrangements under which the hospital collection shall also be taken in the churches of his extensive diocese, which includes the Isle of Wight.

A grand morning concert is to be given next Wednesday at Stafford House in aid of the funds of the Gallipoli Hospital.



An anonymous donor has presented £2316 in Midland Railway Preference Stock to the Leeds General Infirmary.

Mr. Thomas Russel Pickthorn has been promoted to the rank of Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of 3rd inst.

A good-service pension of £300 a year, vacant by the death of Admiral the Hon. Sir Frederick W. Grey, has been awarded to Admiral Sir George Elliot.

The Duke of Cambridge was examined on Tuesday before the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the Mutiny and Marine Mutiny Acts, and objected in the strongest manner to the idea of a "penal battalion," but he recommended that, in order to punish deserters, they should be put for general service in different battalions. Their punishment would then be that they could not desert.

Two elections of members of Parliament took place at the close of last week. Mr. Roberts (Liberal) was on the 5th inst. returned for the Flint Boroughs by a majority of 125 votes over Mr. Pennant (Conservative). The numbers were—Roberts, 1636; Pennant, 1511. At Middlesborough, on the 6th inst., Mr. Isaac Wilson (Liberal) polled a large majority over Mr. Sadler, his Conservative opponent, the numbers being—Wilson 5307, and Sadler 2415. A special meeting of the Middlesborough Town Council was held on the 5th inst. to elect a Mayor for the remainder of the year. Mr. Sadler, who retired, to contest the Parliamentary representation, was nominated, with Alderman Bulmer, and the latter was elected. It was agreed that the thanks of the Council be engrossed on vellum and presented to Mr. Sadler for his services.

CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS.

A decided hit appears to have been made both with the series of "Ancient Classics for English Readers" and with the more recent series, in similar little volumes, neat, portable, cheap, and prepossessing, of "Foreign Classics for English Readers," though it is a question whether in either case, and especially in the former, the successive publications do not fall chiefly into hands for which they were not originally intended, so that it will be no matter for surprise if Thucydides, by the Rev. W. Lucas Collins, M.A. (William Blackwood and Sons), should be more generally and more highly appreciated by readers to whom the Greek work is tolerably familiar than by readers who are entirely innocent of the Greek tongue. And that the editor himself was not altogether of a different opinion may be surmised from at least one significant fact: he considers it worth while to notice a particular chapter which has caused some discussion as to whether, such is its style and such are some of the expressions to be found there, it can have been written by Thucydides, a question of little or no consequence as regards the history and obviously beyond the comprehension of the mere English reader. The editor, indeed, has produced an excellent commentary, with a biographical sketch and other additions, likely to be extremely interesting to the scholar and extremely useful to the student, but not so evidently adapted for the requirements of the persons for whom the admirable series was nominally projected. No doubt his task was a prodigiously difficult one; and probably he has succeeded as well as anybody could hope to succeed. At the same time it is possible that his method of mingling Thucydidean extracts and references to the various chapters of the Greek history with his own running commentary may cause the reader more bewilderment than enlightenment as to the historian's matter and manner; and that the better course would have been to set forth briefly the salient points of each book of the history in succession, and then, in order to give a good idea of the style adopted by the Greek historian in his narrative and in his celebrated speeches, to exhibit a translation in full of certain memorable descriptions and certain famous harangues. The effect of the plan adopted is somewhat patchy, piecemeal, disjointed; here a little bit of the author, there a large slice of the editor and commentator, and anon a morsel of the critic. One is reminded rather of an elongated review in a magazine, a review divided into chapters, than of a reproduction, such as one might have expected, on a very reduced scale, of course, and in English, of a Greek author's work and style. But it may be said that, however reduced the scale, the limits of space prohibited this sort of undertaking; and the objection is unanswerable. In any case, as has been already admitted, we are the gainers of an excellent commentary; and, there being no dearth of translations of Thucydides, English readers, with the aforesaid commentary at their service, and with the histories of Thirlwall and Grote to boot, may, if they feel so disposed, learn as much about the Peloponnesian War, and about the manner and the phraseology in which it was written by the son of Olorus, as if they had Greek at their fingers' ends. The last chapter of the little volume contains some remarks concerning the reticence of Thucydides in respect of topics which did not fall within what he professed to be his province; concerning the stern fixity of purpose with which he confined himself to the Peloponnesian War and its immediate accessories. About the social and domestic life of Athens, about the art, the science, and the literature of the times he says not a word. And it is taken for granted that the omission was deliberate and intentional. But when we consider that he confessedly left his history unfinished; and when we remember that his first book is a sort of prologue to his history proper, it is not a very wild stretch of imagination to suppose that he may have contemplated a sort of epilogue also, in which he would have made ample amends for what is now regarded as a singular defect. In conclusion, it should be noted as curious that our learned editor should write of Minerva, Jupiter, Neptune, and so on, when he is breathing, as it were, the very air of Athens, and using, as it were, the very words which would have been used by Thucydides. There is such a thing as carrying purism in these matters to an absurd extent; but, on the other hand, there are occasions when carelessness in these matters is inexcusable.

Regarded as a review and commentary, nothing could very well be more satisfactory than Petrarch, by Henry Reeve (William Blackwood and Sons), a volume belonging to the series of "Foreign Classics for English Readers." Whether by such a performance, however admirable and perfect, the fundamental purpose of the series be fulfilled or not is another matter. The idea, if memory may be trusted, at the outset of these delightful little publications was something of this sort: there are thousands of really well educated, as well as of intelligent and knowledge-loving but almost uneducated persons who are familiar with the names, reputations, and works, in a vague way, of both ancient and foreign classical writers, but who, being unacquainted with the language in which those authors wrote, cannot go straight to the native wells and draw draughts of delight for themselves; and it is therefore desirable, for their sakes, to publish in a handy form little volumes in which the ancient and foreign classics shall be made to express themselves in English, preserving, however, as far as possible, their own style, and, as far as the limits of space permit, their totality and their continuity. It is evident that, if this view were to be carried out, the proportion of editor to author, as regards the letter-press, would be about the same as that of Falstaff's bread to his sack; but, as in point of fact the proportion is in many instances found to be exactly the other way, we must conclude either that the view supposed was really never held or that it was soon discovered to be impracticable. However that may be, it is certain that the little volume now under consideration is rather an essay, and a most learned, sympathetic, instructive, agreeable essay, upon Petrarch, than a presentment of the poet himself in the literary form in which he captivated his generation. If, as we are told, "the fame of Francis Petrarch, which assigns to him the second place among the classics of Italy, and ranks him amongst the greatest poets of the world, rests mainly on the composition of about four thousand lines of Italian verse, addressed to a beautiful and virtuous lady of Provence," then, as one would imagine, the "English reader" would like to have as much as possible of those four thousand lines in style and diction approaching as nearly as may be to the original, in order to ferret out the secret of their charm. In the little volume under consideration, if one were to count the pages, there would probably be found more containing selections from Petrarch's Latin prose than from his Italian poetry. The result is that, although an inquirer could scarcely go to any other equally good source for information, within a reasonable compass, about Petrarch's life, about his dream of Laura, about what he owed to the family of Colonna, about his influence upon English poetry, about his travels, about the laurel-wreath decreed to him, about his connection with Rienzi and disturbances in Italy, and about his singularly appropriate death at Arquà, the volume affords but scanty means of judging what there was in those four thousand lines of Italian verse to testify of so gifted a being as presents itself to the imagination of "English readers" at mention of the name of Petrarch. But if, as we are assured, "his merit consists so much in the exquisite grace and polish of his language that the chief beauty of his sonnets evaporates in a harsher tongue," there is a sound reason why the disagreeable necessity of exhibiting him at an inevitable disadvantage should have been avoided to the utmost.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Feb. 18, 1871) with two codicils (dated June 15, 1875, and March 6, 1876) of the Right Hon. John, Earl Russell, K.G., late of Pembroke Lodge, Richmond Park, who died on May 28 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by William Russell, the Duke of Bedford (his nephew), and the Hon. George Francis Stewart Elliot, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator leaves to his wife, the Right Hon. Frances Anna Maria, Countess Russell, all her jewels and ornaments of the person, an open carriage with a pair of carriage horses and harness, all wines and household stores, an immediate legacy of £1000, the rents of two houses in Belgrave-square and Chesham-place, the rents and arrears of rent of his Irish estates owing at the time of his decease, and the two boxes of Mr. Fox's papers; she is also to have the use for life of his furniture, plate, pictures, and household effects at Pembroke Lodge. The sum of £12,887 9s. 4d. India Four per Cent Stock is divided between his two sons, George Gilbert William and Francis Albert Rollo; to his daughter Lady William and Francis Albert Rollo; to his daughter Lady Georgiana Adelaide Peel, £1000 and all the drawings of her late mother; to his daughter Lady Victoria Villiers, £1500 and some mementoes of her mother; the portrait of his brother Lord George William Russell, by Hayter, he gives to the Duke of Bedford for life and then to his son the Marquis of Tavistock; and all his political papers to the Hon. G. F. S. Elliot, to dispose of as he may think fit. The Earl's household servants in his service at the time of his decease are left one year's wages in addition to any that may be due to them. The residue of his property, real and personal, is given upon trust for his wife for life, and then for all his children except his son Viscount Amberley (since deceased). The Irish estates, in which the deceased Peer had only a life interest, do not pass under his will, but go to his grandson, the present Earl Russell. The testator declares that all provisions made by his will are in addition to and not in substitution of any interest which the legatees may take under either of his marriage settlements.

The will (dated Aug. 16, 1875) of Mr. Jacob Yallowley Powell, late of Netherwood Manor Park, Streatham, and of Lime-street, merchant, who died on May 12 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Miss Ruth Powell, the sister, and George Holt Powell, the surviving executors; the personal estate being sworn under £160,000. The testator bequeaths to the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control, £5000; to the London Missionary Society, the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, the Home Missionary Society, the Orphan Working School, the Asylum for Fatherless Children, Reedham, the Baptist Home Missionary Society, the Alexandra Orphanage for Infants, Hornsey-rise, the London Hospital, St. George's Hospital, and to the Royal Free Hospital, £1000 each, all free of legacy duty; to Ebenezer Pritchard, deacon of the Baptist church, Upper Norwood, £500, to be distributed by him as he may see fit among the societies and poor of the said church; to the Rev. Mr. Tipple, the minister of the said church, £500; and to five of his children, £100 each; upon trust for his nieces, Mary Ruth Oseler and Charlotte Elizabeth Oseler, £20,000 between them; but if either of them shall marry a minister of the Established Church, or a person holding any office or commission in her Majesty's Army, her interest in such bequest is to lapse and to go among the aforesaid eleven charitable societies or hospitals; and there are some other legacies. The residue of his property he leaves to his said sister Ruth. The testator directs that he shall be buried in unconsecrated ground, and that his funeral shall be very plain.

The will (dated Dec. 6, 1875) with a codicil (dated May 26, 1876) of Mr. Henry Brown, J.P., formerly of Bradford, and late of Rawdon, in the parish of Guiseley, Yorkshire, who died at Brighton on March 25 last, was proved at the district registry, Wakefield, on the 14th ult. by Thomas Parkinson Muff, Henry Muff, and George Aspinall, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator bequeaths 106 shares (£10 per share originally paid) in John Crossley, Sons, and Co. (limited) to the trustees of the Crossley Orphanage Home and School; £5000 each to the Airedale Independent College, Bradford, to the Bradford Girls' Grammar School, and to the Yorkshire College of Science, Leeds; £2000 to Milton Mount College for the Education of Daughters of Congregational Ministers; £1000 each to the Bradford Tradesmen's Benevolent Institution, the Bradford Tradesmen's Home, the Bradford Mechanics' Institute, and to the Bradford Spinsters' Endowment Fund; £500 each to the Bradford Infirmary, the London Missionary Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Royal Albert Asylum for Idiots and Imbeciles, Lancaster, the British and Foreign School Society, and to the English Congregational Chapel Building Society; £250 each to the Religious Tract Society, the West Riding Congregational Union and Home Missionary Society, the Bradford Town Mission, the Bradford Eye and Ear Infirmary, and to the Bradford Fever Hospital; £100 each to the Bradford Association for Improving the Social Condition of the Blind, the Bradford Ragged Schools, Rebecca-street, Bradford, the Broomfield Ragged and Industrial School, Wakefield-road, Bradford, the Bradford Orphan Home for Industrial Training for Girls, Manningham-road, Bradford, the Bradford Nurses' Institution, and to the Ilkley Hospital, all free of legacy duty. The will directs that the sums bequeathed for the benefit of the Airedale Independent College, the Bradford Girls' Grammar School, the Yorkshire College of Science, and the Milton Mount College are for the purpose of founding and maintaining scholarships in connection with these several institutions. To each of his executors he gives £100; to his cousins, Samuel Broadbent Ingham, James Broadbent Ingham, and Mary Aspinall special legacies of £2000 each, in addition to other interests under the will; to each of his cousins, the sons and daughters of his uncles and aunts on both sides of his family, £100; and legacies to relatives of his wife and others; to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, all his household furniture and effects absolutely, and for life or widowhood the income of the entire residue of his property, real and personal; in the event of her marriage again an annuity of £200 is settled upon her, independently of her husband. On the death or second marriage of Mrs. Brown the freehold property in the occupation of Messrs. Brown, Muff, and Company is to go to Mr. T. P. Muff; and the remainder of his estate is divided in various proportions among his own and his wife's relations.

The will (dated Aug. 7, 1874) with a codicil (dated Jan. 24, 1876) of Mr. Charles Edward Hill, late of Hawley Hill House, Yateley, Southampton, who died on the 7th ult., was proved on the 24th ult. by Mrs. Anna Elizabeth Hill, the widow, and Robert Julius Mumm, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testator bequeaths to his executors £100 each; to his wife the sum of £250 to be distributed by her among the servants who have been three years in his service; to his wife all his furniture, household effects, horses and carriages absolutely, and all his real estate and the residue of his personalty for life; on her death his real estate is to go to his brother, John William Hill; certain funds under his marriage settlement are to be made up to £16,000, and after his wife's death one half is to go to his brother Francis Charles and his children, and the other half to his brother Arthur and his children. The residue of his personalty at his wife's death is to be divided between his said brothers and their children as she shall appoint.

The will (dated Sept. 2, 1875) with a codicil (dated Oct. 25, 1877) of Mr. Dale Knapping, late of South Shoebury, Essex, who died on May 26 last, at Paris, was proved on the 21st ult. by Mrs. Margaret Elizabeth Knapping, the widow and sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000.

The will (dated July 16, 1877) of the Rev. Craufurd Tait, M.A., of Lambeth Palace, who died on May 29 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by the Rev. Randall T. Davidson, M.A., the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £4000. The testator leaves to his three sisters, Lucy, Edith, and Agnes Tait, sums representing £600 Consols, to be equally divided between them; to his old friend John Hassard, £19 19s., as a slight remembrance; to Elizabeth Florence Bickersteth, only daughter of Robert, Bishop of Ripon, a policy of insurance on his life for £2000, for her own absolute use and benefit; to Mary Ann Peach, formerly long in the Archbishop's service, £19 19s.; to James Kersley, long his father's personal servant, £19 19s.; to Mrs. Pile, long his mother's personal servant, £19 19s.; the testator then devises and bequeaths all the rest and residue of his real and personal estate unto his father, Archibald Campbell, Archbishop of Canterbury, for his own absolute use and benefit; and the two executors are directed to apply a sum of £10 each in the purchase of some slight remembrance as a token of his high regard for them.

The will (dated Aug. 10, 1871) of Mr. William Birks Rhodes, late of Pomona-place, Staines-road, Hounslow, was proved on the 3rd inst. by George Symons and George Green Symons, the executors. The testator, after leaving a few small legacies, gives and bequeaths all the rest, residue, and remainder of his personal estate and effects to his executors upon trust, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to pay and divide the same between the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn-road, and the Life-Boat Institution in equal shares.

The Dundee correspondent of the Globe states that, by the will of Miss Robertson, of Elgin, the sum of £30,000 is bequeathed to religious and charitable purposes. Mr. Spurgeon's College and Orphanage each receive £4000; schemes of the Free Church of Scotland, £7000; the London Missionary Society, London City Mission, and Baptist Missionary Society, each £2000; the National Bible Society, £3000; besides other bequests. The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon is one of the trustees.

THE ISLAND OF CYPRUS.

In view of the importance attached to the new acquisition of Great Britain in the Mediterranean, we give a sketch of the Island of Cyprus from "Murray's Handbook for Travellers."

Cyprus is the most eastern island of the Mediterranean, and lies off the coast of Syria. It is 145 miles in length, extreme breadth fifty-five miles, and its minimum breadth twenty-seven miles, having an area of 4500 square miles—about the size of Jamaica, or nearly a third less than Yorkshire, and has now a population of 200,000. It has hitherto been but little visited by travellers, owing to the erroneous statements regarding it. There is, however, no reason why travellers should not visit this island with as great impunity as any other part of the Levant. The climate varies in different parts; the northern region is the most hilly and wooded, and the least fertile; and the heat in that district is tempered by the winds from the Karamanian Mountains, which preserve the frozen snow in the highest spots during the greater part of the year. The cold is very severe in winter. In the plains in the southern districts of Cyprus the heat of the sun is excessive, but is moderated by the sea breezes. The richest as well as the most agreeable parts of the island are in the vicinity of Cerinea and Paphos (Baffo). Larnaka, the chief seaport of the island, is about a quarter of a mile distant from the sea; the Consuls and most of the European inhabitants reside at a suburb on the seashore, called by the Italians the Marina, which is the chief dépôt of the commerce of the whole island. Although Larnaka is situated in what is regarded as the worst part of Cyprus, the country around being arid, this port, it is stated, has been selected solely owing to the safe anchorage of its roads. About an hour's ride from Larnaka, situated on the borders of the large Salt Lake, on the road to Citti, is a mosque in which the Turks suppose to be interred the body of the wet-nurse of their Prophet. Nikosia, the capital of Cyprus, was besieged by the Turks under Mustapha in 1570, the siege lasting forty-five days, when it was taken by storm; between the gates of Famagusta and Baffo, situate in a pretty garden, is a small mosque in which is interred the Bairactar, or standard-bearer, who first planted the Turkish flag on the walls. From the summit of the minaret of this mosque the best view, it is stated, is to be had, the mulberry and palm trees being interspersed with minarets and ancient Christian churches, now converted into mosques.

The principal products of the island are wheat, barley, cotton, silk, madder-roots, olive oil, wine, carobs, hemp, pitch, wool, tobacco, salt, fine timber, and fruit; there is an average yield of 1,246,000 gallons of wine and 198,000 cwt of salt. These are stated to form four fifths of the entire exportation, which is at present principally to Marseilles, Leghorn, Trieste, and the coast of Syria. Nearly the entire imports consist of British goods brought from Beyrout, Constantinople, Smyrna, and the Mediterranean ports. Efforts were made in 1866 to increase the growth of cotton.

From Limasol there is a considerable trade in the shipment of wines and raki, made in the vicinity, to Egypt and the islands of the Archipelago; large quantities of carobs, which grow in the neighbouring forests, are shipped to Russia and Italy. To the sportsman Cyprus offers a wide and untrodden field. Its hills and valleys are described as swarming with hares, partridges, francolins, bustards, and quails; in the winter, woodcocks, snipe, and wild duck are found in great abundance; mufflons, or wild sheep, and wild boars are to be had at Cape St. Epiphanius, the district around which, called the forest of Acama, is uninhabited.

The antiquities of the island belong to three distant epochs—Grecian, Roman, and Christian. The period of the Byzantine Dukes lasted nine centuries; and among many fine churches erected at that period is still to be seen the superb one of Machera. There is a conjecture, for which no ground is assigned, that the monuments of that period were in great part destroyed during the time that the island was held by Richard I. of England.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

SIR GEORGE CLAY, BART.

Sir George Clay, third Baronet, died on the 30th ult. in Cavendish-square. He was born Aug. 14, 1831, the second son of Sir William Clay, of Fulwell Lodge, M.P. for the Tower Hamlets, and at one time Secretary of the Board of Control, who was created a Baronet in 1841. Sir George was formerly Major in the 19th Foot, and had retired from the Army with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. With the 19th Regiment he served during the Crimean campaign, and was present at the battles of the Alma and Inkerman and at the siege of Sebastopol, for which he had a medal with three clasps, as well as the Turkish medal. In October, 1876, he succeeded to the baronetcy, at the decease of his elder brother, Sir William Dickason Clay. He married, first, March 8, 1862, Caroline Elizabeth, only daughter of Sir John Palmer Bruce Chichester, Bart., and by her (who died in 1873) had two daughters. He married, secondly, Oct. 5, 1876, Mary Caroline, daughter of Sir John and the Hon. Lady Walrond, of Bradfield.

The deaths have also been announced of—

The Rev. Edward Francis Chamberlayne, on the 23rd ult., at Aston Magna Vicarage, Moreton-in-Marsh, aged seventy-one.

James Trevenen, Esq., of Helston, J.P. for Cornwall, on the 27th ult., at Ford Park, Plymouth, aged eighty-six years.

Mr. James Aikin, associated throughout a long life with the commerce, politics, and local government of Liverpool, aged eighty-six.

Thomas Hicks, Esq., J.P., of Derreenatra Manor, in the county of Cork, and Upton Grove, Torquay, on the 19th ult., at the first-named place, aged seventy-three years.

Henry William May, of Woodville, Honor Oak, Forest-hill, and 3, Old-square, Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law, only surviving child of the late Rev. George May, and grandson of the late Sir Henry Martin, Bart., on the 30th ult., at Alum Bay, Freshwater, Isle of Wight, aged thirty-four years.

Philip Hanbury, Esq., banker, of 60, Lombard-street, J.P., on the 4th inst., at The Woodlands, Redhill, aged seventy-six years. He was sixth son of Osgood Hanbury, Esq., of Halfield Grange, Essex, by Susannah Willett, his wife, daughter of John Barclay, Esq., of London.

Prebendary Sinclair, of Chichester Cathedral, a son of the late Right Hon. Sir John Sinclair, the founder of the Board of Agriculture, on the 8th inst, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. He was formerly Rector of St. George's, Leeds, and more recently Rector of Pulborough, in Sussex.

The Rev. Samuel Martin, on the 5th inst., aged sixty-one. Mr. Martin was one of the best known Congregationalist ministers in London, and held the post of minister at Westminster chapel for over thirty years. He has been in delicate health for some time.

Colonel Henry King, Commanding 13th Regiment Bengal Native Infantry, of the Indian Expeditionary Force, fourth and last surviving son of the late Thomas King, Esq., of Baltinglass, in the county of Kildare, Captain 20th Regiment, on the 1st inst., at Malta, aged fifty-two years.

The Rev. George Wray, M.A., Canon of York and Rural Dean, Rector of Leven, near Beverley, on the 26th ult., at his Rectory, aged ninety-seven years. He was second son of the Rev. Henry Wray, and descended from Richard Wray, brother of Lord Chief Justice Sir Christopher Wray.

James Moilliet, Esq., J.P., late of Cheyney Court, Herefordshire, and Abberley Hall, in the county of Worcester, on the 1st inst., at 172, Earl's-court-road, South Kensington, aged seventy-two years; the descendant of a family of foreign extraction long settled at Geneva. Mr. Moilliet served the office of High Sheriff of Worcestershire in 1861.

Frederick Goodwin Doughty, Esq., of Woodbridge, in the county of Suffolk, on the 1st inst., at his residence, Cumberland House, aged seventy-eight, second son of the Rev. George Clarke Doughty, of Theberton Hall, Suffolk. He married, in 1833, Beatrice, daughter and coheiress of Rear-Admiral Sir Charles Cuningham, of Oak Lawn, and leaves Frederick Proby, Commander R.N., and other issue.

Francis Edmund Joseph MacDonnell, Esq., son of the late Sir Francis MacDonnell, of Dundierth, on the 14th ult., at Bath, aged fifty-five years. He was a magistrate for the counties of Meath and Kildare, and served as High Sheriff of the latter in 1866. He married, first, 1859, Helen, only child of Henry McNamara, Esq.; and, secondly, 1865, Georgina, daughter of James Gernon, Esq., of Athcarne Castle.

We announced last week the death, in his ninety-ninth year, of General Henry Thomson, late of the Bengal Cavalry. He was not only the oldest officer of the Indian Army, but the sole survivor of Lord Lake's gallant army, which on Nov. 1, 1803, won the hard-fought (though now nearly forgotten) battle of Leswaree. In this action the 8th Hussars and the 27th and 29th Dragoons, and also the 76th Foot, greatly distinguished themselves.

The annual gathering of the miners of the county of Durham was held in the city of Durham last Saturday. There were long processions of miners' lodges through the city to the racecourse, where between 30,000 and 40,000 people were assembled. There were several platforms, and among the speakers were Mr. Herschell, M.P., Mr. O'Connor Power, M.P., Mr. Alexander Macdonald, M.P., and Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P. Resolutions were passed regretting the commercial stagnation which has existed during the past twelve months and urging upon the Government the great necessity of more rigorously enforcing the present law for the government of mines.

The Inspectors of Irish Fisheries, in their report for 1877, state that the number of craft of all descriptions engaged in fishing for sale in Ireland was last year 5382, and the crews 19,615 men and 778 boys. There is a decrease, apparently, of 583 vessels and 3300 in the crews; but the inspectors think the numbers were over-estimated in previous years. The conduct of the fishermen has been satisfactory. At nine places in England the sale of herring, mackerel, and cod from Ireland in 1877 brought £538,255. At Howth, near Dublin, there were employed in the herring fishery 243 Cornish boats, 226 Scotch, 175 Manx, and 232 Irish. The Kinsale fishery realised £120,398. As much as £50 a man was earned in the season by some crews. The average value of the boats employed was £550 each. The pilchard shoals were not as numerous on the southern Irish coast as in other years. A small company has been established to carry on the fishery at Baltimore, near Skibbereen. The inspectors say that the loans have been fairly applied; the amount available for 1877 was £6507. During the three years since the passing of the Act £14,474 has been advanced for loans. The inspectors say that the salmon fisheries are progressing most favourably, and "have now assumed very large commercial proportions," though there always will be a fluctuation in the produce from year to year, notwithstanding the greatest legislative care.

2. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	32. R to R 2nd
3. Kt to K B 3rd	B to B 4th	White does not accept the challenge to draw, and the result justifies his judgment of the position.
4. Kt takes P	B takes P (ch)	32.	P to Kt 4th
5. K takes B	Kt takes Kt	33. Kt to Q 6th	R to Kt 5th
6. P to Q 4th	Kt to Kt 3rd	34. K to B 2nd	P to R 5th
This appears to be better than 6. Q to B 3rd (ch), the usual move in this variation. For all that, we think the defence, turning on 4. B takes P (ch), is unsound, and that 4. B takes Kt is the best continuation.		35. P takes P	P takes P

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

Paris Tournament.—The sixth round of this contest was played on Thursday and Friday, the 4th and 5th inst., and resulted as follows:—Andersen v. Gifford each won a game; Bird v. Blackburne each won a game; Clerc v. Mason each won a game; Zukertort beat Pitschell two games; Mackenzie won one and drew one with Winawer; and Englisch drew both his games with Rosenthal. The play on these two days is chiefly notable for the extraordinary length of the first game between Herr Englisch and M. Rosenthal, which extended over 140 moves. In the seventh round Winawer won one and drew one with Andersen; Bird beat Pitschell both games; Blackburne v. Zukertort each won a game; Mackenzie beat Gifford two games; Rosenthal v. Clerc each won a game; and Mason drew both his games with Englisch.

It is announced that the committee of the congress have increased the number of prizes from four to six, and added to their relative value the sum of 300*l.*

The following table shows the score on the completion of the seventh round, when each competitor had played fourteen games, the draws being reckoned at half a point to each side:—

	Won.	Drawn.	Lost.	Score.
Winawer	10	2	2	11
Blackburne	9	2	3	10
Zukertort	8	4	2	10
Rosenthal	8	3	3	9½
Clerc	8	0	6	8
Andersen	7	1	6	7½
Mackenzie	6	3	5	7½
Bird	7	0	7	7
Englisch	3	7	4	6½
Mason	3	4	7	5
Pitschell	0	0	14	0

The Counties Chess Association.—The annual meeting of this society will be held at King's College, London, during the week commencing the 29th inst. Competitors in the several tourneys will be divided into three classes, according to their known or reputed skill, and substantial prizes will be provided for the competition in each class. All bonâ fide British amateurs may become members of this society and compete in its tourneys on payment of a subscription of half a guinea per annum; but members of the first class are required to subscribe at least one guinea per annum. Subscriptions should be sent to the Rev. C. E. Ranken, St. Ronan's, Malvern; or to Mr. Minchin, 9, Clydesdale-road, Kensington Park, W.

THE ANGLO-TURKISH TREATY.

The text of the "conditional treaty" between England and Turkey, and of the correspondence relating to it, has been laid before Parliament. The principal paper is a despatch from Lord Salisbury to Sir A. H. Layard, dated May 30, 1878, in which his Lordship proposes a defensive alliance with Turkey against any further encroachment by Russia upon Turkish territory in Asia, and proposes an assignment of the island of Cyprus to England, the territory to continue a part of the Ottoman Empire, and the excess of revenue over expenditure to be repaid to the treasury of the Sultan. On June 5 Sir A. Layard sent to the Marquis of Salisbury the Convention described in both Houses of Parliament on Monday night. It is dated June 4, and is comprised in two short articles. To this Convention there is an Annex, dated July 1, containing some details of the arrangement respecting the occupation of Cyprus and stipulating that if Russia restores to Turkey Kars and her other Armenian conquests, Cyprus will be evacuated by England and the Convention of June 4 will be at an end.

The Articles and Annex run thus:—

Article I.

If Batoum, Ardahan, Kars, or any of them, shall be retained by Russia, and if any attempt shall be made at any future time by Russia to take possession of any further territories of his Imperial Majesty the Sultan in Asia, as fixed by the definitive Treaty of Peace, England engages to join his Imperial Majesty the Sultan in defending them by force of arms.

In return, his Imperial Majesty the Sultan promises to England to introduce necessary reforms, to be agreed upon later between the two Powers, into the Government and for the protection of the Christian and other subjects of the Porte in these territories; and in order to enable England to make necessary provision for executing her engagement, his Imperial Majesty the Sultan further consents to assign the Island of Cyprus to be occupied and administered by England.

Article II.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged, within the space of one month, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at Constantinople the 4th day of June, 1878. A. H. Layard. Safvet.

Annex to the Convention.

The Right Hon. Sir A. H. Layard, G.C.B., and his Highness Safvet Pasha, now the Grand Vizier of his Majesty the Sultan, have agreed to the following Annex to the Convention signed by them as Plenipotentiaries of their respective Governments on June 4, 1878:

It is understood between the two high contracting parties that England agrees to the following conditions relating to her occupation and administration of the Island of Cyprus:

I. That a Mussulman religious tribunal (Mehkémêi Shéri) shall continue to exist in the island, which shall take exclusive cognisance of religious matters, and of no others, concerning the Mussulman population of the island.

II. That a Mussulman resident in the island shall be named by the Board of Pious Foundations in Turkey (Evkraf) to superintend, in conjunction with a delegate to be appointed by the British authorities, the administration of the property, funds, and lands belonging to mosques, cemeteries, Mussulman schools, and other religious establishments existing in Cyprus.

III. That England will pay to the Porte whatever is the present excess of revenue over expenditure in the island; this excess to be calculated upon and determined by the average of the last five years, stated to be 22,936 purses, to be duly verified hereafter, and to the exclusion of the produce of State and Crown lands let or sold during that period.

IV. That the Sublime Porte may freely sell and lease lands and other property in Cyprus belonging to the Ottoman Crown and State (Arazii Miriyé vé Emlaki Houmayoun), the produce of which does not form part of the revenue of the island referred to in Article III.

V. That the English Government, through their competent authorities, may purchase compulsorily, at a fair price, land required for public improvements, or for other public purposes, and land which is not cultivated.

VI. That if Russia restores to Turkey Kars and the other conquests made by her in Armenia during the last war, the Island of Cyprus will be evacuated by England, and the Convention of June 4, 1878, will be at an end.

Done at Constantinople, the 1st day of July, 1878. A. H. Layard. Safvet.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1878.

The return of Earl Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury, her Britannic Majesty's Plenipotentiaries to the Congress at Berlin, on Tuesday last, was welcomed with some approach to regal pomp. From the moment of their landing at Dover to that of their being safely lodged in Downing-street, the marks of attention and approbation displayed towards them by people of all classes might well have satisfied the most ambitious expectations of statesmen. No doubt, to a considerable extent, the triumph was rather of a Party than of a National character, but it was certainly one of which Lord Beaconsfield may be proud, eclipsing in its splendour the homage paid to any subject of her Majesty for many years past. What it foreshadows—if, indeed, it may be regarded as foreshadowing any serious result—this is not the proper time to examine. We see no sufficient reason for anticipating the evils which are invariably mixed with the good secured for us by political success. It was in the good, real or imaginary, that the crowds of Englishmen who congratulated Lord Beaconsfield on Tuesday last found their chief impulse and justification. The British Plenipotentiaries brought back with them from the Congress a Treaty signed by the Representatives of each of the European Powers therein assembled. That Treaty records the changes sanctioned by the Congress in the territorial distribution and administrative Government of that part of the Ottoman Empire more or less affected by the late Russian war. It may be looked upon as a very significant modification of the preliminary Treaty of San Stefano forced upon Turkey by the conquests of the Czar. We shall not compare the European with the preliminary Turco-Russian Treaty with a view to determine the amount of benefit the world may be expected to derive from the substitution of the one for the other, although the latest despatch of the Marquis of Salisbury, explanatory of British policy in relation to the two, might seem to invite dispassionate comment. The subject will presently receive ample Parliamentary discussion, and for this we are content to wait.

There are few amongst us, however, who will not appreciate the fact that such changes have been effected by peaceful negotiation, not by War. For the present, the main causes of offence between nation and nation in relation to the Eastern Question have been taken away. The uncertainties of the future which precluded, or, at any rate, greatly limited, industrial and commercial enterprise, not here only, but over the entire Continent, have been happily removed. The threatening clouds which hovered upon the horizon have disappeared. Apprehensions of bloodshed have subsided. Excited passions always tending to actual hostilities have cooled down. Patriotism, or what is generally esteemed as such, is no longer in antagonism with the dictates of humanity. Looking back to the state of international relations a month or six weeks ago, it is difficult to overestimate the immense advance which has been achieved, or the terribleness of the calamity which the age has escaped. We are grateful to those (whoever they may be) by whom the clouds which darkened our national prospects have been rolled away. The advantage thus secured is such that every individual of whatever rank or party or class may enjoy his share.

"Peace with honour" is what Lord Beaconsfield tells us has been achieved in our behalf at Berlin. We hope so. We have no inclination, we trust, to look with indifference upon the character, political or moral, of England's dealings with other nations. The dignity of the position held by this country in the comity of civilised States is an object about which no intelligent Englishman will confess to being careless. The mere dignity of success, however, is extremely evanescent, and is ultimately worthless. Our aspiration—in common, we believe, with that of a majority of our fellow-countrymen—is that England may be foremost in every really good word and work; that she may steadily keep in the van of human progress, holding aloft to other nations the torch of political and social justice, wisdom, and generosity, and so teaching them by example how to live. We have no objection to cleverness so long as it is confined within the boundaries of honesty and national integrity. We do not shun responsibility, so long as the task imposed upon us is one which aims, and reasonably aims, at the elevation of our Race. We need not care—much less supremely—to remain evermore within merely technical bounds. Precedents have their value, nor are they to be rudely or causelessly set aside. But it has to be borne in mind that the world is a living world, necessarily full of movement, and needing to be guided by those who can make some sacrifice in its behalf. It is by considerations of this kind that England will have to judge what has been accomplished by its present Government in the settlement of the Eastern Question. Her interests, such as they are, we agree, ought to be subordinate to her honour; and her honour ought to be identified with motives which embrace within their range the true progress of the human family.

It is not to be concealed that the Treaty of Berlin, viewed in connection with the Anglo-Turkish Convention of June 4, exhibits a tendency on the part of the Great Powers to increase their political influence and even their territorial possessions, if not at the expense of Minor States, yet with something which wears the appearance of a cynical disregard of their not unreasonable expectations. Russia, Austria, and England have profited by the weakness of Turkey. They have given, it is true, independence to Servia, Montenegro, and Roumania, and, perhaps, in the case of the two former, a coveted accession of land and subjects. After thus helping themselves, they have set the Turk once more upon his legs and have exacted from him guarantees of better behaviour for the future. Possibly, it was all that they could do, as things now stand; and in doing thus much they have displayed some regard to the modern principle of nationalities. The tree they have planted, however, can only be judged of by its fruits. Parchment securities are but little worth against natural forces. No one, we suppose, really expects Ottoman rule, whether in Europe or Asia, to differ essentially from what it has long been. No amount of external pressure can get rid of habits which have become inveterate, nor revive faculties which have been suffered to run into decay. The administration of the Sultan's remaining dominions may perhaps be successfully carried on by strangers in his name—for some time to come at least. But the wise purpose of the States represented at Berlin will be to lie in wait, not for obtaining each its proportionate share of the forces which are falling asunder, but to foster a living and indigenous organism which shall eventually and by inherent growth push them aside. We should be expressing premature judgment of the case were we to say that the signatary Powers had no such design in view, and it may be that, because rudimental only, such design has not been vividly expressed. But of this we may be well assured, that whatever is merely formal, especially if unjust, which is embodied in the Berlin settlement of the Eastern Question will inevitably have hereafter to give place to that which is equitable and real. There is hope, however, that what is done henceforth will be done peacefully; that the danger of a European War is not likely to recur; and that the question which has for fifty years past been the dread of statesmen is at length taken out of the category of things which can hardly be touched, even for the better, without provoking international appeals to the sword.

Mr. Bouch, C.E., Edinburgh, has received instructions to prepare working drawings for the proposed bridge across the Forth at Queensferry. The span height will be 135 ft. (instead of 150 ft., as at first suggested) provided the Government consent. The bridge will be on the suspension principle, having two lattice girder spans, each about 1100 ft. in length, which will be supported midway on the island of Inchgarvie. The promoters have obtained power from Parliament to guarantee to the undertaking a revenue of £75,000.

THE COURT.

On Thursday the 11th inst. the Royal dinner circle included Princess Christian, Princess Beatrice, the Duke of Connaught, the Duchess of Roxburghe, the Hon. Harriet Phipps, Lord Elphinstone, Colonel the Hon. H. Byng, and Captain Maurice Fitzgerald (Equerry to the Duke of Connaught). The band of the Coldstream Guards played in the Quadrangle during and after dinner.

The Duke of Connaught left the castle yesterday week for London. The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse (Princess Alice of Great Britain and Ireland) arrived. Colonel the Hon. H. Byng, Equerry in Waiting, met their Royal Highnesses at the railway station in Windsor, and attended them to the castle. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, received the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess at the entrance of the castle. The Maharajah of Johore and Tunkoo Othmun arrived at the castle. They were introduced to her Majesty's presence at an audience by the Right Hon. Sir M. Hicks-Beach. The Grand Duke of Hesse went to London, and was present at the state ball at Buckingham Palace.

The Grand Duke of Hesse returned to the castle on Saturday last, and in the afternoon his Royal Highness, with the Grand Duchess, left for Buckingham Palace. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, went to a garden-party given by the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. Her Majesty travelled by a special train on the Great Western Railway to and from London, and returned to Windsor in the evening.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Alfred Barry, D.D., Principal of King's College, London, and Canon of Worcester, officiated. Princess Christian visited her Majesty and remained to luncheon. Colonel the Right Hon. F. Stanley dined with the Queen.

Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne arrived at the castle on Monday. Her Majesty's dinner party included Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, the Marquis of Lorne, the Duchess of Roxburghe, Colonel the Hon. C. Lindsay, and Colonel G. A. Maude. The Hungarian-Bohemian Band played after dinner before the Queen and the Royal family.

Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne left on Tuesday for London. The Grand Duchess of Hesse, with the Hereditary Grand Duke of Hesse and Princesses Victoria, Ella, Irene, Alix, and Marie of Hesse, visited the Queen and remained to luncheon. Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice visited Mr. Charles Turner's Nursery Gardens at Slough. The Lord President of the Council and the Duchess of Richmond and Gordon, Sir Charles L. Wyke, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Copenhagen, and the Dean of Windsor and the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley dined with the Queen.

The Marquis of Salisbury had an audience of her Majesty on Wednesday.

The Queen, with the members of the Royal family, has walked and driven out daily.

Her Majesty has contributed £100 to the fund in aid of the sufferers by the Haydock Colliery explosion.

Lord Norton has been to Madrid as her Majesty's Special Envoy Extraordinary to attend the funeral services for the late Queen of Spain, and to convey her Majesty's condolences to the King of Spain.

Messrs. Howell and James have submitted for her Majesty's inspection a selection of prize works from their third annual exhibition of paintings on china by lady amateurs.

Lady Waterpark and the Hon. Amy Lambart have succeeded the Duchess of Roxburghe and the Hon. Harriett Phipps as Lady and Maid of Honour in Waiting. Major C. E. Phipps has succeeded Colonel the Hon. C. Lindsay as Groom in Waiting; and the Hon. Horatia Stopford has arrived at the castle.

STATE BALL.

By command of the Queen a State Ball was given yesterday week at Buckingham Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales arrived at the palace from Marlborough House, attended by their suite and escorted by a detachment of the 1st Life Guards. The Grand Duke of Hesse, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Teck were present at the ball. A large number of foreign persons of distinction were also present. Dancing commenced upon the entrance of the Prince and Princess of Wales, with the other Royal personages, into the saloon.

The Princess of Wales wore a dress of rich black silk, draped in Brussels net, studded with jet and single diamonds; corsage to correspond. Head-dress—a tiara of diamonds. Ornaments—diamonds. Orders—Victoria and Albert, the Crown of India, and the Danish family order.

Princess Christian wore a dress of white satin and black brocké, with white Brussels lace and white tiger lilies. Head-dress—a tiara of diamonds and butterfly. Ornaments—a necklace, brooch, and earrings of opals and diamonds. Orders—the Victoria and Albert, the Crown of India, the Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, the Prussian for Care of the Wounded, and the Portuguese.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales went to Bristol yesterday week for the purpose of visiting the Royal Agricultural Society's Show. His Royal Highness lunched with the president (Colonel Kingscote) and the members of the council, and returned to London in the evening. The Duke of Connaught visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House on Saturday last, and remained to luncheon. Their Royal Highnesses gave a garden party at Marlborough House in the afternoon to the Queen, at which all the Royal personages in town and a very large assemblage of persons of distinction were present. The band of the 1st battalion of the Rifle Brigade (Prince Consort's Own), under Mr. Muller, and the Hungarian-Bohemian band, from the Austro-Hungarian Section of the International Paris Exhibition, performed. The Prince and Princess, accompanied by Prince Louis of Battenburg, went to Aldershott on Monday to witness the review which was held under the command of General Sir Thomas Steele, and afterwards returned to London. Princes Louise of Lorne visited their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House, and remained to luncheon. The Prince and Princess were present in the afternoon at a garden party given by Lady Holland at Holland House; and in the evening they went to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-Garden. Their Royal Highnesses were present at the marriage on Tuesday, at Whitehall Chapel, of Lord Carington with the Hon. Cecilia Harbord, eldest daughter of Lord and Lady Suffield. The Prince left London in the evening for Paris.

Major F. de Winton represented the Prince at the funeral of the late Queen of Spain.

The Rev. Canon Wilberforce has received an intimation from the Princess of her Royal Highness's intention to accompany the Prince on the occasion of his laying the memorial-stone of the new Church of St. Mary, Southampton, in August next.

THE GRAND DUKE AND GRAND DUCHESS OF HESSE.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse arrived at Buckingham Palace on Saturday last from Windsor Castle. Prince Ernest and Princesses Victoria, Ella, Irene, Alix, and Mary of Hesse arrived from Eastbourne. Their Royal Highnesses, with their son and daughters, were present in the afternoon at a garden party at Marlborough House, and dined with the Duke and Duchess of Manchester. The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess went to Aldershott on Monday, and were present at a review of the troops. Their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by Prince Ernest and the Princesses of Hesse, were present at a garden party at Holland House in the afternoon; they dined with the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House, and accompanied them to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden. The Grand Duchess, accompanied by Prince Ernest and the Princesses of Hesse, visited the Queen on Tuesday, and the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace, and dined with the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse visited the Princess of Wales on Wednesday. The Hereditary Grand Duke and the Princesses of Hesse also went to Marlborough House. The Grand Duchess visited the Dean of Westminster at the Deanery, and dined with Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne at Kensington Palace.

Prince and Princess Christian honoured Lord Carlingford and Frances Countess Waldegrave with their presence at dinner at Strawberry Hill.

The Duke of Connaught went to the Court Theatre on Wednesday evening.

The Duke of Cambridge, as Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, held a Levée on Wednesday at the Horse Guards.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz dined with Lord and Lady Henniker on Saturday last at their residence in Connaught-place. The Duchess was present and distributed the prizes at the summer festival in commemoration of the inauguration of the Princess Mary Village Homes on the 11th inst. at the institution at Addlestone, Surrey.

His Excellency M. Delyanni, Greek Minister for Foreign Affairs, has arrived from Berlin.

The Duchess of Westminster and the Earl and Countess Grosvenor have left town for Scotland.

Lady Holland had a garden party at Holland House on Tuesday, at which many members of the Royal family and 1200 other guests assembled. The full band of the Grenadier Guards, conducted by Mr. Dan Godfrey, played, and the Royal Tyrolese singers, under the direction of Herr Holaus, sang.

Sir Richard and Lady Wallace had their second afternoon party on Tuesday, at which the Duke of Cambridge and a large company assembled.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Lord Carington and the Hon. Cecilia Margaret Harbord, eldest daughter of Lord and Lady Suffield, was solemnised on Tuesday afternoon, at three o'clock, by special license, at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Leopold, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and Prince Louis of Battenburg. The bridegroom's brother, the Hon. Rupert Carington, officiated as best man. The bride was accompanied and given away by her father. Her dress was of white silk, trimmed with crêpe and old Mechlin lace, and a small lace veil, just reaching to the shoulders, was fastened to the hair by a diamond bird. Her jewels were a necklace of pearls, a diamond and pearl bracelet, the present of the Princess of Wales, and diamond bracelets and pendant, the bridegroom's gifts. Her six sisters were the bridesmaids — namely, the Hon. Alice Marian, Elizabeth, Judith, Winifred, Eleanor, and Bridget Harbord. Their dresses were of white spotted muslin, and muslin hats to match, trimmed with sprigs of lilies of the valley. Twelve non-commissioned officers and men of Lord Carington's regiment, the Royal Horse Guards, in full uniform, were stationed between the pews on each side of the chapel. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Francis J. Holland, assisted by the Rev. Canon Luckock and the Rev. W. Erskine Knollys. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cambridge attested the register. The wedding party left the chapel for Lord Suffield's residence in Upper Grosvenor-street, where a party of relatives and friends assembled. At five o'clock Lord and Lady Carington left by the Great Northern Railway for Peterborough, on their way to Barleythorpe, to pass the honeymoon. The Queen presented the bride with an Indian shawl, and she also received gifts from most of the members of the Royal family.

The marriage between Mr. George Newton and Lady Alice Cochrane will take place on the 27th inst., at St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square. The marriage between Viscount Anson and Lady Mildred Coke is arranged to take place in November.

Marriages are arranged between the Hon. Richard Strutt, second son of the late Lord Rayleigh, and the Hon. Augusta Neville, only child of Lord and Lady Braybrooke; between Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart., Captain Royal Navy, and Miss Frederica Broke; between Mr. Fowke, eldest son of Sir Frederick Fowke, Bart., of Lowesby Hall, Leicester, and Miss Eva Conant, daughter of Mr. Conant, of Lyndon Hall, Rutland; and between Major Dugdale, of the Rifle Brigade, and Edith, second daughter of Mr. and Lady Charlotte Montgomery.

A handsome cup, valued at two hundred guineas (executed by Messrs. Pegler Brothers, of Norwich) has been presented by the Mayor, the Sheriff, and the citizens of Norwich, and the residents of Norfolk, to Colonel Massy and the officers of the 5th (Royal Irish) Lancers, "In appreciation of the exemplary conduct of the regiment during its stay among them, and in grateful remembrance of the many benefits conferred by it upon the city and its institutions."

The acoustic properties of the Royal Albert Hall were put to an important test on Wednesday evening, when Mr. S. Brandram, the well-known reader, gave a dramatic recital, accompanied by music, to a large audience. The programme afforded him opportunities for the display of his skill in the interpretation of all varieties of sentiment and passion, comprising selections from "As You Like It," "Henry V.," "Julius Cæsar," together with Mr. Tennyson's ballad of the fleet, "The Revenge," and Lord Macaulay's "Lay of Horatius." The recital had the additional advantage of musical illustration, the members of the London Vocal Union singing several part-songs with taste and spirit, and Miss Anna Williams winning much applause for her excellent rendering of "Who is Silvia?" "Hark! hark! the Lark," and "Where the bee sucks." Mr. Sydney Naylor was organist and conductor. The acoustic properties of the hall sustained satisfactorily the severe test to which they were put, every word, whether sung or spoken, being heard distinctly.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Dr. Samuel Kinns, Principal of the College, Highbury New Park, on Tuesday afternoon gave a lecture on Nineveh and Babylon to a distinguished audience, in the Assyrian Galleries of the British Museum.

There was a numerous gathering at the house of Mr. M'Laren, M.P., in Onslow-gardens, on Tuesday, when an address on Women's Suffrage was delivered by Mrs. Livermore, of Boston. Miss Helen Taylor, Mr. Courtney, M.P., and Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., were also amongst the speakers.

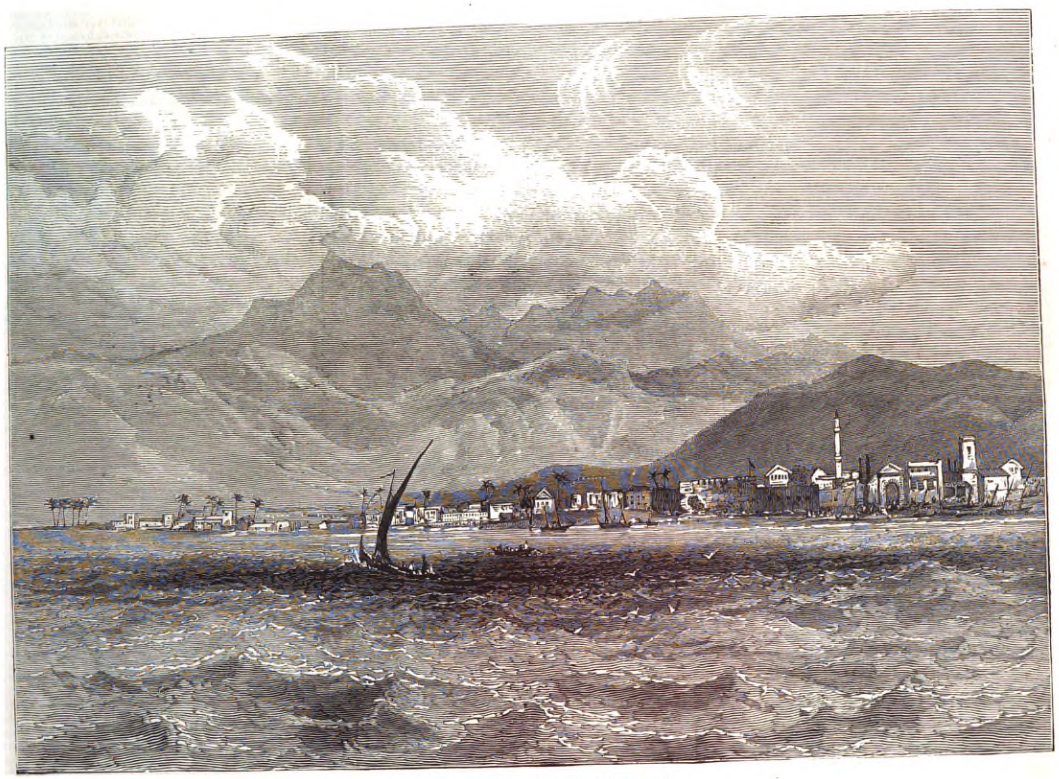
An open-air gathering of the friends of the movement for holding religious services in theatres took place on Tuesday, in the grounds of Chiswick House, with the object of making a special appeal for funds to carry it on. Lord Shaftesbury presided; and amongst the speakers was Mr. S. Morley, M.P.

The London School Board, at their weekly meeting on Wednesday, resolved to borrow £200,000, making £3,258,580 to be borrowed from the Public Works Loan Commissioners. The quarterly summary of industrial school cases dealt with was presented. In consequence of a communication from the Education Department the idea of providing additional school accommodation for the City was abandoned for the present.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the second week in July was 76,501, of whom 38,073 were in workhouses and 38,428 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1877, 1876, and 1875, these figures show a decrease of 445, 732, and 7793 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 509, of whom 308 were men, 160 women, and 41 children under sixteen.

Wednesday was Apposition Day at St. Paul's School—Mr. Aston, chairman of the governors, presiding. The business of the day was begun with the recitation of the essays and verses for which prizes had been awarded. The Master of the Mercers' Company announced that the Classical Scholarship of £100 a year had been adjudged to Mr. H. R. Brown; the second Classical Scholarship of £80 a year to Mr. Glover; and the Mathematical Scholarship of the like value, together with the Kerr Scholarship, to Mr. H. W. Brown. Each of these distinctions is to be held for four years.

A festival in connection with the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union took place at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday, when there were more than 60,500 visitors. The gathering was organised by the committee of the Band of Hope Union, and the proceedings included a cricket match, a balloon race, concerts by two choirs of 5000 each, and two or three temperance meetings, in which Admiral Sir William King Hall, Canon Wilberforce, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and Mr. A. M. Sullivan, M.P., took part.



Cleopatra's Needle has reached what will most likely be its final resting-place, and now lies stretched across the base on which it is to be erected. The process of raising it is steadily proceeding by means of powerful hydraulic presses placed under each end of the great monolith, and as these are worked every increase in the elevation is secured by wedges of timber driven in, and afterwards by building up blocks of timber, so as to maintain the height gained. It is now several inches above the pedestal, and when elevated to about thirty feet above it the machinery for suspending the obelisk by the centre will be brought into requisition.

At a meeting of the Court of Common Council on Thursday it was resolved unanimously, "That the freedom of the City, in a suitable gold box, be presented to the Earl of Beaconsfield, as a token of the high respect which the citizens of London have for one who for so many years has with patience, perseverance, and zeal exercised his great abilities and talents for the welfare of his country, and in testimony of this Court's appreciation of the genius and power with which he has represented the British nation at the recent Berlin Congress, the peaceful results of which this Court earnestly trusts will continue for many years to come." At the same time it was resolved that the freedom of the City should be also conferred on Lord Salisbury in testimony of the Court's appreciation of his eminent services and important work undertaken and brought to a successful issue at the recent Congress.

There was a large gathering of London Board School children at the Crystal Palace last Saturday, when 4000 bibles and testaments—presented by Mr. Francis Peek and the Religious Tract Society—were distributed to children for proficiency in scriptural subjects. About 3000 children took part in a concert on the Handel Orchestra, and nearly 30,000 persons were in the Palace. Sir Charles Reed, in the course of a brief address, said that 188,000 children daily heard a portion of the Word of God read to them. Not one child in 4000 had been withdrawn from the board schools on account of the religious instruction given, with the exception of the children of Jews; and not one complaint had reached the board from any parent who had objected to the instruction.—A public meeting was held yesterday week in connection with the opening of schools in the Caledonian-road, Islington—Sir Charles Reed in the chair. The building is in the main road, close to the Cattle Market, and will accommodate 1150 children. The total cost of the site amounts to £3534, and that of the building to £11,010.—On Monday schools were opened in Henrietta-street, Oxford-street—the chair being taken by Sir Charles Reed. The area of the site comprises 13,340 square feet, at a total cost of £16,702; while that of the building amounts to £8491, making a total of £25,193. The building will accommodate 181 boys, 188 girls, and 204 infants.

There were 2394 births and 1589 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 65, and the deaths by 93, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. There were 85 deaths from whooping-cough, which, although showing a marked decline from the numbers in recent weeks, exceeded the corrected average by 38. The deaths referred to diarrhœa, which had been 23,72, and 145 in the three preceding weeks, further rose to 249, and exceeded the corrected weekly average by 53; they included 195 of infants under one year of age, and 39 of children aged between one and five years. The deaths of 2 infants and of 3 adults were referred to choleraic diarrhœa or simple cholera. The deaths from smallpox, which had been 38 and 19 in the two previous weeks, further declined to 11 last week, which were 13 below the corrected average in the corresponding week of the last ten years. There were 16 deaths from measles, 20 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, and 19 from different forms of fever. In Greater London 2927 births and 1871 deaths were registered. In the Outer Ring smallpox caused 4 deaths in West Ham, Stratford, and Leyton; and in the same sub-districts 6 deaths resulted from whooping-cough, 6 from diarrhœa, 3 from measles, 1 from diphtheria, and 1 from fever. The mean temperature of the air was 61·9 deg., being 0·3 deg. below the average of the corresponding week of the sixty years 1814-73. The mean showed a small excess on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, but was below the average on the three following days. The duration of registered sunshine was 33·3 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 113·8 hours.

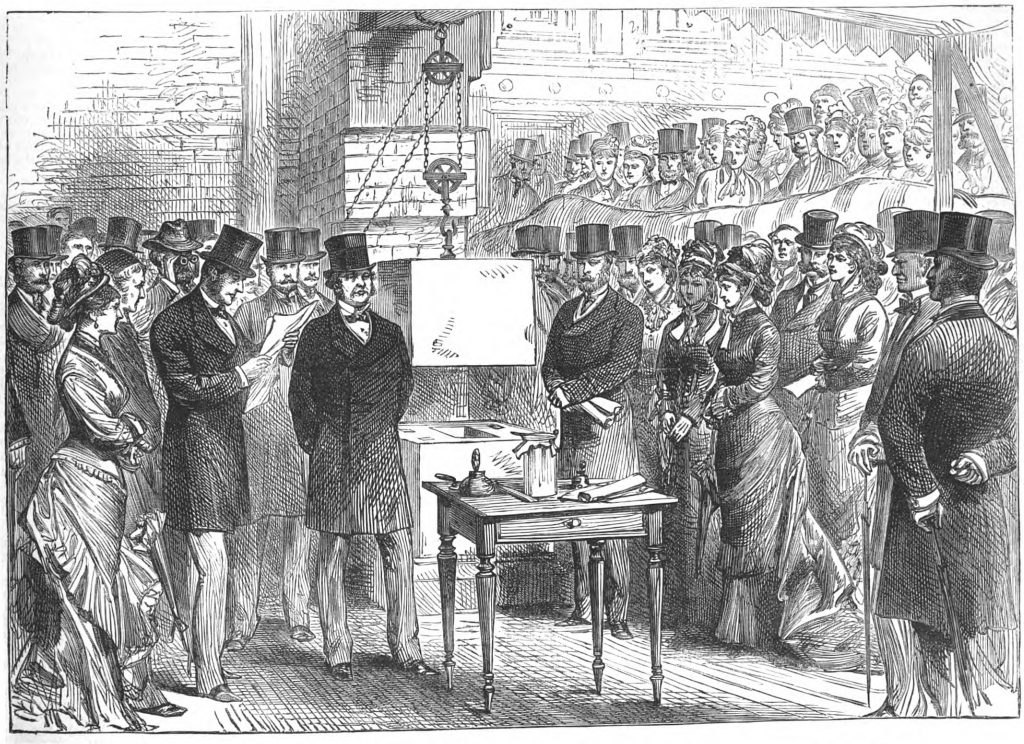
MR. ERNEST CROFTS, A.R.A.



MR. FRANK HOLL, A.R.A.

NEW ASSOCIATES OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Mr. Frank Holl, a son of the eminent engraver, was born in July, 1845. He was educated at University College, London. In 1861 he entered the schools of the Royal Academy, and gained, next year, the medal for drawing from the Antique; in 1863, the gold medal for Historical Painting, and that for Life Drawing. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1864; and next, "The Ordeal," in 1866; but in 1868 gained the Travelling Studentship with a picture entitled "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away," which was exhibited in 1869. His other works exhibited in subsequent years were "The Village Funeral," 1872; "A Seat in a Railway Station," 1873; "Deserted," 1874; "Her First-born," 1876; "Going Home," 1877; and "Newgate Gaol," in the present year's exhibition. He has also exhibited, at the rooms of Mr. Wallis and of Mr. Tooth, the pictures entitled "Want—her poverty but not her will consents;" "Doubtful Hope;" and "Gone—The Emigrants' Departure."

Mr. Ernest Crofts was born at Leeds on Sept. 15, 1847. He is son of Mr. John Crofts, J.P., of Adel, near Leeds, and grandson of the late Rev. W. Crofts, B.D., Vicar of North Grimston, near Malton; he is also nephew to the late Rev. William Carr, B.D., of Bolton Abbey, in the county of York. He was educated at Rugby School, and, after remaining there several years, went to Berlin, where he had more leisure to develop his artistic tastes. He then removed to London, and studied here some years as a pupil under the late Mr. A. B. Clay. He afterwards went to Düsseldorf, and there became a pupil of Herr Hünten, the well-known military painter to the Emperor of Germany. Mr. Ernest Crofts now resides at Düsseldorf.

EARL GRANVILLE LAYING THE FOUNDATION-STONE OF THE NEW WING, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, GOWER-STREET.

Among Mr. Croft's pictures, from time to time exhibited in London, are the following:—"A Retreat: an Episode in the German-French War," the first picture to attract the attention of the few. The following year, 1875, confirmed the opinion of connoisseurs that in Mr. Crofts the country had acquired a battle-painter of the very highest order, and they pointed to his stirring picture of "Ligny." In 1876 he exhibited Napoleon seated outside a cottage consulting a map "On the Morning of the Battle of Waterloo." The following year saw "Oliver Cromwell at Marston Moor" and "Ironsides Returning from Sacking a Cavalier's House;" and we need scarcely remind our readers that this year's picture introduces us to "Wellington on his March from Quatre-Bras to Waterloo."

The portrait of Mr. Crofts is from a photograph by Haarstick, of Düsseldorf; and that of Mr. Holl from one by Fradelle, of Regent-street.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

This institution for the higher education of young men, situated in Gower-street, near Euston-square, is one of the two Colleges in London (King's College, adjoining Somerset House, Strand, being the other), which were the immediate offspring of the London University. On Tuesday week, a numerous company assembled in the grounds of University College to witness the laying of the first stone of a new extension of the college buildings by Earl Granville, Chancellor of the University of London. The occasion chosen for this ceremony was the fiftieth anniversary of the College. The College was originally built from designs by Mr. Wilkins, R.A., in the Greco-Roman style of architecture. Its Corinthian portico, leading to the Flaxman Gallery, has justly been regarded as one of the finest works of the kind. Additions have been made to the original structure from time to time, one of the most recent being the south wing, which sprang out of the Slade bequest for the encouragement of the teaching of art. But the necessity for further enlargement has long been evident to those acquainted with the practical working of the College. The new extension will architecturally be in unison with the original idea, with such modifications and deviations as may be necessary to meet modern requirements. It is intended first to continue the north wing to the boundary of the street, and ultimately to prolong the southern or Slade wing to the same limit. About £100,000 will be needed to complete these important additions. The architect is Professor Hayter Lewis.

The ceremony of laying the first stone was performed in a small inclosed space covered with crimson cloth, and protected from the sun by an awning at the north-east corner of the building. Earl Granville having taken up his place in front of the stone, Mr. Goschen, M.P., read, on behalf of the council, a statement detailing the history of the college from its foundation, and the additions made from time to time up to the present day. The result had, it was said, been highly satisfactory in every respect; but, to meet the requirements of the age, it became necessary to increase the building accommodation. To complete the buildings on the original design and provide for extension the council had no building fund and no endowment to fall back upon. They had never received any subsidy or gift, whether in land or money, from the State, while numerous splendid gifts had been made by private persons. Funds amounting in the whole to about £200,000 had been given to the college for special purposes, about one half being held in trust for the hospital, and by far the greater part of the remainder for the endowment of scholarships and prizes, and of a very few of the professorships. The prospect of an increase, with larger buildings, in the cost of management, and other claims, must prevent the council from charging their limited income with the interest and sinking-fund of a heavy building debt. The council were, therefore, determined to appeal to the munificence of those interested in the promotion of the cause of education. A copy of this report was deposited in a bottle, together with a plan of the extension, a London University Calendar, and a copy of two London daily papers; after which Earl Granville laid the stone in the usual manner. His Lordship made some pleasant remarks, and proposed three cheers for the past and present prosperity of the college, in hopes that it might be maintained and increased in the future. The cheers were given with great cordiality, and this terminated the ceremony. A luncheon was afterwards served in a large tent erected for the occasion in front of the college, Earl Granville presiding; about 400 persons were present. The chief speakers at the table were Lord Belper, President of University College Council; Mr. R. Lowe, M.P.; Lord Kimberley, Dean Stanley, and Professor Huxley. The Council has lately decided to admit female students to classes in all the subjects of the Faculties of Arts, Law, and Science, as the degrees of London University are now thrown open to women.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The first grand English concert was given on Wednesday in the Trocadéro at Paris. The Prince of Wales, Marshal Macmahon, and the Duchess of Magenta were present. The concert, which was under the direction of Mr. Arthur Sullivan and Mr. Henry Leslie, terminated with the "Salvum fac Reginam," followed by the English National Anthem. All the company present remained standing during the performance of this last piece, and turned towards the Prince of Wales.

An action brought by Prince Louis Napoleon against the Siècle newspaper for defamation of his father was tried in Paris on Wednesday. The libel consisted in the assertion that the late Emperor had fraudulently increased his revenues by selling State lands and woods. A verdict was given against the Siècle, with 2000f. fine.

The mixed jury of the fine-art section of the International Exhibition have made their selection of twelve painters who are to receive medals of honour. The list comprises five Frenchmen—MM. Bouguereau, Cabanal, Français, Gérôme, and Meissonnier; two Englishmen—Messrs. Herkomer and Millais; two Austrians—Herr Makart and Metejko; one Hungarian—Herr Munkaczy; one Spaniard—Senor Pradilla; and one Russian—M. Siemiradski.

M. Pernette, the Republican senator for Macon, is dead.

Two elections were held in France last Sunday—at Guinchamp, in the Côtes du Nord, and at Rochelle. In the former the Prince de Lucinge, the unseated Bonapartist, allowed his Republican opponent to walk over the course. In the latter M. Fournier, also an unseated Bonapartist, was defeated by M. Barbedette, Republican. This brings up the strength of the Left in the Chamber to 380.

The centenary of Rousseau and the anniversary of the fall of the Bastille were celebrated in Paris on Sunday by a meeting at Myers's Circus. M. Louis Blanc was the principal speaker.

There was an immense crowd assembled last Sunday afternoon in the gardens of the Tuileries to hear a monster concert by singing associations. About 700 of the latter were inscribed, the performers numbering 22,000, and comprising Belgian, Dutch, and Swiss performers. The music was directed by M. Cressonnois, and the president on the occasion was M. Spuller, one of the deputies for Paris.

The ethnographic congress was opened on Monday. The president, M. Leon de Kosny, gave an address in which he defined ethnography as the study of conscious humanity, the discovery of the law of the evolution of humanity in its relations with the general laws of the universe.

M. Teisserenc de Bort, the Minister of Commerce, went on Sunday to Tours for the purpose of opening, as ad interim Minister of Public Works during the absence of M. de Freycinet, a branch railway between Tours and Loches. The Archbishop of Tours blessed the engine and complimented M. Teisserenc de Bort, who said the Republic was inaugurating an era of public works which would ensure France real prosperity.

A young lady, the daughter of Mr. C. K. Hall, an Englishman practising in Paris as a French advocate, has just successfully passed her second examination at the Sorbonne. This entitles Miss Hall to the University diploma of Bachelor of Arts (Bachelier ès Lettres).

A farewell banquet was given at the Continental Hotel on Sunday (M. De Lesseps in the chair) to Lieutenant Biard, who is about to start for a scientific trip round the world with a party of young men, French, Russian, German, Belgian, and Swiss. Mr. Stanley was among the company. The Junon leaves Marseilles bound for Gibraltar, Buenos Ayres, Cape Horn, San Francisco, Japan, China, and India, returning by Suez.

A serious strike has broken out in the coal-mining district of Anzin, and it is feared that 5000 men will soon be on strike. There have been some conflicts between the men on strike and the soldiers, and several arrests have been made.

Official advices have been received in Paris confirming the report of a native rising and the massacre of eighty-nine persons in New Caledonia. The Governor telegraphs, however, that he is now master of the situation.

SPAIN.

King Alfonso gave audience on Tuesday to the special Envoys from foreign Courts who went to Madrid to represent their respective Sovereigns at the funeral obsequies of the late Queen Mercedes. The funeral of the Queen took place on Wednesday in the Church of San Francisco. The nave, which was occupied by a vast crowd, numbering about 4000 persons, was lighted by 400 lustres and 1000 candles. Among those present were the Presidents of the two Chambers of the Cortes, the grand dignitaries of State, and the Ambassadors of foreign countries. The Archbishop of Toledo, assisted by nine Bishops, celebrated the Requiem Mass, which was chanted by a choir of fifty professional singers. The funeral oration was delivered by the Bishop of Salamanca. The service lasted three hours.

Favourable news has been received by the Government from Acheen, to the effect that the bands of marauding Acheenese had evacuated the country they had invaded previously to the arrival of the Dutch reinforcements.

GERMANY.

The physicians of the Emperor William have announced that no further bulletins will be issued, as his Majesty is gradually, though slowly, recovering.

Prince Bismarck having left Berlin for Kissingen, Count Stolberg, the Vice-President of the Prussian Cabinet, has been appointed to take charge of the various functions of the Chancellor during his absence from the capital.

In recognition of his Minister's successful efforts to secure a pacific issue to the Congress, the German Emperor has presented his lifesize portrait to Prince Bismarck. The portrait is a famous work of art by Herr Winterhalter.

The Crown Prince had a conference with Prince Bismarck on Monday afternoon.

The Berlin Congress held its twentieth and final sitting last Saturday, when the new treaty was signed by all the Plenipotentiaries. It consists of sixty-four clauses. After the formal business of the Congress was finished, Prince Bismarck gave a closing address, in which he said that the Congress had deserved well of Europe, and history would do justice to their intentions and their work. The result, he added, could not be diminished by any criticism of which party spirit might inspire the publication. Count Andrassy then thanked Prince Bismarck in the name of the Congress for the services he had rendered in bringing its great work to a satisfactory issue, and also expressed the gratitude of the Plenipotentiaries for the kindness and hospitality shown by the German Emperor and the Imperial family. To this Prince Bismarck made a brief reply, and the Congress was at an end. In the evening a banquet was given in the White Hall of the Royal Palace, at which all the Plenipotentiaries were present except Lord Beaconsfield and Prince Gortschakoff. The company numbered 170. There was only one toast, which was proposed by the Crown Prince, who drank in his father's name to the health of the Sovereigns and Governments who had that day signed the Treaty of Berlin. "The understanding," he said, "which has just been established will be a new pledge of peace and public weal. The assistance of Germany is secured beforehand in all tending to assure and preserve these great blessings." Before the banquet the Plenipotentiaries were received by the Empress, and took leave of the Crown Prince and Princess.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Herr Tisza, the President of the Hungarian Ministry, gave an address on Monday to his constituents at Debreczin, in which he defended the foreign policy of the Government, and said its object had been to ensure that the whole of Europe should determine the destinies of the East. No one, he said, could dispute the great moral triumph achieved, by means of which Russia had been compelled at the bidding of Europe to renounce a considerable portion of the conditions of peace she had exacted from Turkey by the Treaty of San Stefano. The occupation of Bosnia and the Herzegovina, M. Tisza said, had become necessary in order to counteract the continuous growth of Panslavism, by which Hungary, before all, was menaced.

ROUMANIA.

The Parliament was closed on Wednesday with a message from the Prince, who says that his country has been called upon to make sacrifices in order that the Berlin Congress might preserve the peace of Europe. As soon as the effect of those portions of the treaty which concern Roumania are known another session will be convoked.

M. Bratiano, the Premier, has met with an accident. While driving, his carriage was upset, and he was seriously injured.

General Miles has, according to a Washington telegram of Tuesday's date, driven the hostile Indians into the mountains. Seven hundred troops are now concentrated at Wallula, a sufficient force, it is believed, to subdue the Indians.

Extraordinary heat prevails in the Western States: 150 cases of sunstroke occurred on Monday at St. Louis, fifty of which proved fatal. A telegram from New York on Thursday states that the extraordinary heat continues, the thermometer ranging from 95 to 103 deg. Fahrenheit. Numerous deaths from sunstroke are reported from the principal cities. There were nine fatal cases at Chicago on Wednesday, and 135 have occurred at St. Louis within the week.

CANADA.

Lord Dufferin has accepted an extension of his appointment as Governor-General of Canada, the privilege being granted in deference to the wishes of the people of the Dominion.

An Orange demonstration was threatened at Montreal for "the glorious 12th of July," and there was much preliminary alarm and some squabbling as to jurisdiction between municipal and military officials. The Mayor, by proclamation, forbade an intended procession of Orangemen, and, to carry out his order, police, special constables, and troops were posted. A steamer coming from Quebec with a number of armed roughs was searched. In the end the Mayor made himself master of the situation, without bloodshed or any serious outbreak. He arrested several Orangemen for the purpose of testing the legality of the Orange organisation, while he protected their hall. The police partially cleared the streets. The Orangemen gave in. On Friday the crowd attacked some men of the Sherbrooke and Richmond militia as they were leaving Montreal for home. The soldiers fired fifty shots without orders, and the mob took to flight after two persons had been wounded. General Smyth, the commander of the troops, has ordered the men who fired to be arrested The Orangemen on Tuesday took no steps to carry out ther alleged intention of dedicating the monument to Hackett

The Don brings advices from Panama to June 21.

The Panama Star and Herald says that a new Peruvian Ministry has been formed, as follows:—Minister of the Interior, Dr. Loayza; Minister of Justice, Dr. Pazos; Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Trigozen; Minister of War and Marine, General Lacotera; Minister of Finance, Señor Carmaga. No reason is given for the resignation of the former Ministry.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

Tuesday night's Gazette contains a despatch from Lieutenant-General Thesiger, commanding the troops in South Africa, respecting the war with the Kaffirs. The despatch says that the war may now be considered at an end. "Elements of disturbance will no doubt exist for some time to come," it adds, "but these can be more efficiently met by police patrols than by the action of military bodies."

The troubles in the Transvaal, however, show no signs of decreasing. Lieutenant-General Thesiger proposes to proceed to Cape Town for a short time previous to proceeding to Natal and the Transvaal, where he believes his presence to be necessary. Captain Carrington has been appointed to the command of the volunteers in the Transvaal. Severe fighting occurred on June 22 at Largebeck, on the northern border, in which the rebels were defeated, with a loss of thirty-four killed. The Kamas tribe was disarmed, and the two sons of the late chief Seyolo were wounded. The tribe has been dispersed.

The bill for laying a telegraph cable to the Cape by way of Aden, Zanzibar, and Natal has passed its second reading in the Cape Parliament.

Mr. Miller made his financial statement on June 18, announcing a deficit of £175,000 during the past year. The deficit for the coming year is estimated at £205,000, and will be met by new taxes. The expenditure on account of the war up to June 30 is estimated at £750,000, to meet which the Government has introduced a bill authorising the issue of a new loan to the amount of £1,000,000.

It was stated in our last issue that Princess Salm Salm, the well-known authoress, had died at Wurzburg. The Cologne Gazette, in which the statement originated, now announces that the death has befallen, not the lady mentioned, but Princess Salm, aged seventy-three.

A Bluebook of 424 pages has been issued containing the official correspondence respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission. The despatches range in date from Aug. 27, 1875, to May 30, 1878. They are followed by the protocols of the Commission. An appendix, which occupies the greater part of the volume, gives the case of the British Government, the answer on the part of the United States Government, the brief of that Government, the replies to it, and the speeches of counsel, including the final arguments.

The Pope held a Consistory on Monday, at which his Holiness nominated a number of Bishops. Mgr. Daniel M'Carthy was appointed Bishop of Kerry, and Mgr. Racine Bishop of Chicontima, in Canada. His Holiness read a secret allocution to the Cardinals respecting the relations of the Holy See with various Powers, and, indicating the line of conduct he intended to pursue, asked them whether it met with their approval. Several priests are, it is stated, shortly to be sent by the Vatican to Bosnia and the Herzegovina, in order to establish Catholic parishes and dioceses in the provinces.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

Fine weather, good shooting, and freehanded hospitality delightfully dispensed have made this year's Wimbledon Meeting remarkably successful and enjoyable to marksmen and visitors alike. Begun under favourable auspices on Monday, the 8th inst., the Wimbledon Fortnight will, it is to be hoped, be brought to as pleasant a close this (Saturday) afternoon by the distribution of the prizes, a ceremony the interest of which will be enhanced by reason of the Duke of Connaught presiding on the occasion.

It will be as well at the outset to complete the record of the competition for the Queen's Prize, shot for this July with the Martini-Henry at every stage. The tie between Sergeant Lamont, 1st Edinburgh, Private Lowe, Queen's (Westminster), and Corporal Mullineaux, 40th Lancashire, who had each made an aggregate score of 95 out of a possible 105 at the three ranges of 200, 500, and 600 yards in the first stage of the Queen's Prize, was shot off yesterday week at the 600 yards' carton targets, each competitor being allowed three shots, and each adopting the back position in firing. Lamont fired first, but failed to hit the target. Mullineaux shot next, and made an outer, scoring two. Lowe let off his rifle almost on the instant he had settled himself in position, and a loud cheer was given as the dummy target slowly rose bearing the red disc marking an inner, counting four. When the real target came up again the patch on it marking the exact position of the shot showed that the bullet had almost indented the edge of the bull's-eye. Lamont made another miss, his bullet striking the ground directly in line with the bull's-eye; Mullineaux followed with a second outer, making his score four; and another cheer followed when the dummy target showed that Lowe's second shot was a bull's-eye, making his score nine. Lamont and Mullineaux then made an outer each, giving the victory to Lowe, who had a shot to spare. Instead of accepting his score as it stood, however, Lowe fired his third shot, and made another inner, thus winning the tie by seven points. On rising he was again loudly cheered. Mr. Lowe could not maintain his pre-eminence, however, on Tuesday, when the second and final stage of the Queen's came to be shot for. The first Sixty in the early stage shot now with the Government Martini-Henry at 800, 900, and 1000 yards, seven shots at each range, the prize being £250 in money, the gift of her Majesty the Queen, the winner taking also the gold medal and gold badge of the National Rifle Association. The firing at the 800 yards was finished at a quarter to eleven, when five of the competitors—Sergeant Lamont, Queen's Edinburgh, who had tied for the Silver Medal, Sergeant Elkington, 3rd Essex, Sergeant Burroughs, 1st Warwick, Private M'Vittie, 7th Dumfries, and Private Rae, 11th Stirling—had each made 30. The shooting at 900 yards was finished by half-past twelve, when Sergeant Elkington led with 58, being closely followed by Sergeant Simpson, who, making 30 at this range, scored a total at the two ranges of 57; Lieutenant-Colonel Walrond, 1st Devon, who made 55; Sergeant Walker, who made 53; and Private Rae, who made the same score. The third, and last, range of 1000 was shot at half-past five o'clock in the afternoon, when the light and wind were most unfavourable for shooting at long ranges, the targets being almost invisible in the glare of the sun and the haze. As time went on the excitement increased, especially when it became known that Private Rae had made 78, and that Sergeant Walker had made 76, with a shot to spare. The last shot of Sergeant Walker was watched with almost breathless anxiety; and when no notice was taken of it at the firing-point, and it became evident that he had made a miss, a rush was at once made at Rae, who tried in vain to escape from the rough but kindly-meant intentions of his brother Scotchmen, and he was hoisted on to the shoulders of several of the London Scottish and borne off in triumph to the space fenced off in front of the society's offices. His rifle having been tested and found correct, and his score verified, Private Rae was formally declared the winner of her Majesty the Queen's Prize for the year 1878, and the gold badge of the Association was pinned upon his arm by Lady Wharncliffe, who congratulated him in a few graceful words. In response to the call of Lord Wharncliffe, three loud cheers were given for the winner of the prize. Lord Wharncliffe, addressing the assembled volunteers, said that a very general desire had been expressed on their part that the Martini-Henry rifles which had been lent to them, and with which they had contested the Queen's Prize, should not be taken back by the War Office; and he was happy to say that the Head of the War Department had yielded to their desire on condition that the guns should be returned when called in by the Government. Three cheers were then given for Colonel Stanley. Private Rae, having again been mounted on the shoulders of his comrades, was carried round the camp, preceded by the band of the Victorias playing, "See, the Conquering Hero Comes." Rae's score of 78 is four points above any made in previous years; and his success was hailed with all the more delight as he was once before within a point of winning the Gold Medal, having tied with Atkinson, of Durham, four years ago. The following are the best scores made at the 800, 900, and 1000 yards in the last stage of the Queen's:—

To hark back to the shooting of yesterday week, an important competition—that of the St. George's Challenge Vase and Jewels—was fixed for decision that day, but could not be finished till Saturday. For the St. George's Challenge Vase, jewels, and money, Corporal Williams, H.A.C.; Corporal Turnham, 1st Bucks; Sergeant Peat, third A. B. Surrey; Sergeant Foulks, 1st Warwick; and Private Gratwicke, 1st Devon, had each made 34 points, and had to face the target again to decide who should take the principal prize. They met on Saturday at the Carton firing-points after luncheon gun-fire, a great crowd gathering to witness their struggle. Williams, as having made the best 34, was the first to fire, but he did not succeed in getting on the target. Turnham followed with an outer, Peat with a "magpie," Gratwicke with the same, and Foulkes with an inner. In the next round Williams scored a bull's-eye; Turnham, Peat, and Foulkes all inners; and Gratwicke a bull. Then Williams and Turnham made magpies, Peat a carton, and Gratwick an inner, while Foulkes missed his last shot. Peat and Gratwicke thus tied for the hundred-pound prize, with twelve points each, and had to shoot off again. Peat was, in any case, sure of his £20 as third man, if he did not win; but with Gratwicke it was either the value of a hundred pounds or ten only, for failure would throw him down to fifth place according to the order of merit. Peat fired first, and made an outer; the Devonshire man followed with a bull's-eye, which proclaimed him winner of the St. George's Vase, Dragon Cup, gold jewel, and £30. The Prince of Wales's Prize of £100 was won by Corporal Larway, Bristol Engineers, after a tie with Corporal Hyslop, 1st Lanark, both having scored 85 points in the competition. The English team won the National Trophy, beating Ireland by 70 points; and the Devonshire team carried off the China Cup with a total of 264, against Edinburgh's 256 and Berkshire's 256. The 1st Berks won the Belgian Cup with a score of 168; the second, third, and fourth prizes being taken by Derbyshire, the 26th Middlesex, and 3rd Lanark.

The Albert was an interesting competition on Monday. The first stage was divided into three ranges—200, 600, and 900 yards, seven shots at each range, giving a highest possible aggregate of 105. It was thought that Mr. John Rigby, of Dublin, who finished one of the first with the very creditable score of 100, would prove the winner of the first prize; but two competitors who finished soon after, Major Scriven and Mr. S. Young, headed him by one, making 101 points. This, of course, disposed of the Irish champion, and placed Scriven first, his range scores having been 32, 35, and 34, against Mr. Young's 35, 33, and 33. But there was yet another surprise in store. Almost the last competitor to finish was the Gold Medallist, Mr. Humphry (Cambridge University), who, finishing up at 900 with another of his frequent highest possibles, made yet another 101, and as it was an ascending series, being made up of of 32 at 200, 34 at 600, and 35 at 900, his was the best score of the three. The order of the winners, therefore, was Humphry first prize, Scriven second, and Young third. For the Curtis and Harvey's 1000-yards series, any rifle, Private Humphry (who has been shooting wonderfully well with the Remington at the present meeting, took the first prize with only one short of the highest possible, two thirty-threes and three thirty-twos, all made with the Metford, carrying off the other prizes. A number of minor competitions ended on Monday. Among them were the Whiteley, a 900-yards prize, with any rifle. In this competition four men made the highest possible of 35, and English and American rifles divided the honours between them, Fenton and Sir Henry Halford using a Rigby and a Metford, while Gilder and Humphry pinned their faith, with good reason, as the result showed, on the Sharp and the Remington, the two former being muzzle-loaders, and the two latter, of course, breechloaders. In the "Henry" 1000-yards competition 30 points was the highest number attained by Private Wyatt, of Ellesmere, and Major Burt, of Warwick, the Metford rifle carrying off the honours of the competition; Gilder, with his Sharp, only appearing tolerably low down in the list as the representative of American rifles. The Secretary of State for War's Prize for any military breechloader, seven shots at 900, resulted in Lieutenant Piggott, of the London Rifle Brigade, taking the first prize with 33, made with a Farquharson-Metford. For the Armourers' Any-Rifle Prize, £21, at 800 yards, Mr. Evans, Inns of Court, Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe, 39th Middlesex, and Private Humphry, Cambridge University, tied with 35 points each. The tie was shot off in the afternoon, Evans making bull, inner, bull; Radcliffe the same score in the same order; and Humphrey 4, 5, 5, thus tying. In the second attempt to solve the difficulty Evans made three bulls, Radcliffe two bulls and an inner, and Humphrey a magpie. The latter then retired, and the prize, of course, fell to Mr. Evans.

The first stage of the Army and Navy Prizes, seven shots at 200 and 500 yards with the Martini-Henry, was won on Tuesday by Private Falconer, 1st Scots Guards, with a score of 65, £5 each being won by Sergeant Hoey (with 65), 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade; Sergeant Blinco (64), Royal Marine Light Infantry; Hood, R.N. (61); and Private Gregson (60), 41st Foot. Another interesting competition was decided the same day:—

PUBLIC SCHOOLS VETERANS' MATCH.

Five competitors. Ten shots each, at 500 yards.

Challenge Shield and Five Tankards ... Cheltenham ... Points. 187

Eton	180	Harrow	148
Clifton	173	Derby	136

The Lords' and Commons' match took place on Wednesday in melting weather, and drew a large and fashionable company. Our legislators shot at 200 and 500 yards, the competitors being allowed ten shots at each range, "any" rifle being used. The prize consists of two magnificent challenge vases, which were given in 1875 by the Maharajah of Vizianagram on the condition that they should be held for the year by the Lord Chancellor when the Lords won and by the Speaker when the Commons were victorious. Last year the prize was won by the Lords by 29 points; and it will be seen that the Lords were victorious by 8 points:—

Lords.	200 Yards.	500 Yards.	Total.
Earl Ferrers	39	44	83
Earl Spencer	47	44	91
Lord Cloncurry	46	49	95
Earl Waldegrave	43	45	88
	220	223	443

Commons.	200 Yards.	500 Yards.	Total.
Major Peploe	44	40	84
Hon. R. Plunkett	48	50	98
Colonel Loyd-Lindsay ...	42	42	84
Hon. F. Monckton	43	40	83

The next competition in point of interest on Wednesday was that between representative teams of the Army and the Volunteers for the Donegall Cup—a silver group, valued at £1000, formerly called the "Irish Trophy," given by the Marquis of Donegall, to be held for the year by the winning team. Attached to the competition are prizes to the value of £36, given by the association. The contest resulted in a victory for the Volunteers by 15 points, the Army scoring 987, the Volunteers 1002. At the top of the Volunteer list were Sergeant Pullman, the Queen's Prize winner of 1876, and Private Rae, who had only the day before won the right to place G. M. after his name. The Oxford and Cambridge match for the Chancellor's Plate, a large tankard, value £100, the joint gift of the Chancellors of the two Universities, was shot for by representative teams of eight from the University Corps of Oxford and Cambridge with the Snider rifle, at 200, 500, and 600 yards. On Wednesday Cambridge added another victory to her list, and signalised the year by introducing a gentleman, Mr. Daldy, who achieved the feat of putting on a score of 93, out of a possible 105, with the Snider, beating by one point the highest score made in the Donegall Cup, at the same ranges, with the Martini-Henry. The totals were:—Oxford, 572; Cambridge, 621. The second stage of the Albert was shot the first thing in the morning. It was confined to the winners of prizes in the first stage. Fifteen shots were fired, and, after a good fight among the leading competitors, Major S. Young, of the 39th Middlesex, carried off the prize (£100) with 68 points out of a possible 75. For the Snider Wimbledon Cup, ten rounds at 600 yards, three competitors tied with 42 out of the possible 50. They were Major Pearse, 8th Devon; Private Wade, 1st Lancashire; and Private Pearson, 1st Inverness. The tie was shot off after luncheon at the 500 yards carton targets, the result being that Wade won on the tie, his three shots being a carton bull, a bull, and a magpie, or 13; Major Pearse, an outer, bull, and outer, or 9; and Private Pearson, magpie, bull, and outer, or 10 points. For the Any Rifle Wimbledon Cup (1000 yards), Mr. Turner, of the South London Rifle Club, made 34 out of 35 for Miss Gregory.

The Army and Navy Challenge National Rifle Association Cup, second stage, was won on Thursday morning by J. Hood, A.B., of her Majesty's ship Excellent. He made 30 points at 800 yards. The winner gets a prize of £10 with the cup. The winner of last year was from the same ship. The competition for the Kolapore Cup was also finished, the mother country winning with a score of 622 points. The Canadians made 611. The first range of the Elcho Shield Match was got through, and the scores up to that point were as follow:—Ireland, 540; England, 534; and Scotland, 532. Humphry, Cambridge University, made in this match at the first range the splendid score of 73 out of a possible 75. Some other competitions in the teams closed up with scores of 70, 71, and 72. In the 900 yards range of the Elcho Shield match Ireland had the lead by 20 points, England and Scotland being equal. Ireland made at the two first ranges 1075, and England and Scotland 1055 points each. In the Public Schools Match, Eton won with a score of 403 points; Charterhouse being second, with 394; Winchester third, with 390. The Duke of Cambridge visited the camp and inspected the colonial team. These were the latest events at the time of going to press with our early edition.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

The main building, or Palace of the Exhibition, in the Champ de Mars, is represented in our two-page Engraving. This grand façade, raised above a prolonged terrace, with several approaches by steps, protected by curving balustrades, presents a central arched nave, of superior dimensions, with transepts extending far to the right and left, each terminated by a domed tower of four arched sides, which is supported by angle-buttresses. This is the general form of the edifice, while its aspect is further relieved by the series of perpendicular external beams, surmounted with decorative coronets and flags, rising at certain intervals along the front elevation. The lines of the central structure are boldly defined, its great arch being deeply recessed and crossed by a transverse balcony above the numerous small doorways, with side openings which give a view of the staircases inside, and with huge scroll-shaped buttresses upholding the balcony; while the upper part of the arch is ornamented with escutcheons, and with the initials of the "République Française," supported by winged seraphs, at the summit of all. In the grounds on this side of the Exhibition Palace, along the broad gravelled paths which cannot easily be overcrowded, there is ample space for a promenade in the fresh air; or a brief repose of body and mind can be enjoyed in the comfortable seats, covered with basket-work to form a portable alcove or summer-house, which are placed for the accommodation of weary visitors to the Exhibition. Seats of this kind might well be introduced on the esplanade, or the sands, or beach of any English seaside place of much resort, like Brighton or Hastings, instead of the open benches generally provided; and we have no doubt that a small fee would gladly be paid for the use of such accommodation.

Mr. Goschen, M.P., has issued an address to the electors of the city of London, in which he states that, in consequence of the difference between himself and other members of the Liberal party on the question of the county franchise, it is not his intention to offer himself to the City for re-election to the next Parliament.

A fire broke out on Tuesday night at the Prince's Theatre, Bradford, and in a short time the building was totally destroyed. The theatre was built about two years ago by a limited company, at a cost of £26,000, and has since been in the lesseeship of Mr. W. Morgan, The Star Music Hall, built underneath the theatre, is not much damaged.

It has been determined to form a high-grade school in Barrow-in-Furness; and, with the view of assisting the scheme, the Duke of Devonshire has given £1000. It is proposed, pending the erection of a permanent building, to begin the school in temporary premises forthwith, and the Duke of Devonshire has offered £50 a year towards its maintenance. The school will be under the South Kensington Department.

The foundation-stone of the new buildings which are in course of erection in St. Swithin's-lane for the City Carlton Club was laid on Wednesday by Mr. Alderman Fowler. At a dinner which subsequently took place in honour of the event the Duke of Richmond and Gordon responded to the toast of "Her Majesty's Ministers," and in the course of his speech referred to various measures of importance which the present Government had passed since coming into office, and to the eminent services rendered by the Prime Minister in the recent settlement of the Eastern difficulties.

The Hunts Agricultural Show took place on Wednesday at St. Neots. The number of entries for various classes of horned stock, horses, sheep, pigs, and poultry, was good; and the prizes, which included several cups and valuable pieces of plate, amounted to £700. The Twenty-Guinea Cup, for cart-horses, was awarded to Mr. R. H. Griffin, Peterborough; the £25 prize, for hunters, was given to Mr. G. S. Hall, of Ely, Cambs. Mr. Goodliff, of Huntingdon, secured seven cups for horses of all classes. The Twenty-Guinea Cup, for cows, was taken by Mr. W. H. Armstrong, of Brampton, Hunts. The Twenty-Guinea Cup, for the best bull, was awarded to the Marquis of Exeter for Telemachus VI. Mr. Street, Somersham, Hunts, was a large prize-taker for sheep. The Prize Cup for pigs and several minor prizes for swine were taken by Mr. Sanders Spencer, of Holywell, Hunts. Captain C. S. Newton presided at the luncheon.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

Comparable to the scant interest taken in an opening farce on the first night of a new drama of mark was the diffidence shown with regard to Parliamentary business in the Upper House prior to the sitting set apart for the Earl of Beaconsfield's formal speech on the Berlin Treaty of Peace. There were desultory, yea-nay discussions yesterday week on Vivisection, Muzzle-Loading v. Breech-Loading Guns, and on the dangerous state of Railway Platforms; and Lord Cranbrook, rousing himself from that state of rapt, ecstatic bliss into which he had silently sank on his elevation to the peerage, has found voice in the last few sittings. On Monday the Duke of Richmond informed Lord Granville that Lord Beaconsfield would make a Ministerial statement on Thursday; and in answer to another noble Lord's quotation of the Pall Mall Gazette's reference to the unhealthiness of Cyprus, the Lord President of the Council quoted the Spectator as an authority in favour of the salubrity of the climate. Various measures were then advanced a stage; but their Lordships, by a majority of fourteen, disagreed with the Commons' amendment to the Poor Law Act Amendment Bill, and maintained their previous opinion against the pauperising clause of Lord Shaftesbury's measure. Lord Henniker was not successful in an endeavour to persuade the House to go into Committee on the Tramways Bills. At the instigation of Lord Waveney, there was a discussion as to the position of British officers in the Indian Army, in the course of which Lord Cranbrook, the Duke of Cambridge, and Lord Napier of Magdala eulogised the present condition of the native forces, Lord Northbrook concluding with an explanation of the state of the Indian Army when he was Governor-General. On Tuesday Lord Cranbrook gave a definition of Batoum and Armenia for the benefit of Lord Dunsany, and informed the House generally that the Eurydice had been raised.

Sunshine streaming through the stained-glass windows shed a soft and mellow light on the brilliant assemblage drawn together on Thursday afternoon to greet the well-graced actor on his first appearance in England as the successful Plenipotentiary. There have been large and notable gatherings in the Upper Chamber during the present Session; but it was admitted that the illustrious congregation of Thursday was the most remarkable that has been seen in the House of Lords for many years. The occasion was historical; and the audience was worthy the occasion. Whilst the floor was exceptionally full of peers, members of the Lower House absolutely thronged the space in front of the Throne, and more than filled the small galleries devoted to them. The sombre effect of so many black garments was admirably relieved by the light, neutral tints of the summer dresses worn by the ladies, who regarded the scene below them from 'vantage coigns near the canopy of the Throne, and from the Peeresses' Galleries. In the balcony usually occupied by the Princess of Wales were her Royal Highness and the Grand Duke and Duchess of Hesse (Princess Alice), who were joined later by Princess Mary of Cambridge and the Duke of Teck. It was some few minutes after five ere the Earl of Beaconsfield entered. Lord Truro had made a diversion by raising his rugged voice anent vivisection, and Lord Rosebery had elicited some mirth by carrying up to the table a roll of petitions of huge dimensions. The laughter created by this incident had scarcely subsided when the Prime Minister quietly glided to his seat, unobserved at first, but greeted by a crescendo of "Hear, hears!" when his familiar figure was recognised. The noble Earl (who looks in far better health than he did on his arrival in London) had no sooner taken his seat than the Marquis of Salisbury joined his colleagues on the Ministerial bench, and was likewise cordially welcomed. The Prime Minister sat between the Duke of Richmond and Lord Cranbrook, with Lord Granville opposite him, as usual. Lord Derby sat, with his head bent down, below the gangway, on the Ministerial side; the Earl of Carnarvon occupying his accustomed seat behind the ex-Foreign Secretary. As for the address of Lord Beaconsfield, the delicate state of his health detracted of necessity somewhat from the effectiveness of its delivery. The historical part of it, the virtual paraphrase of Lord Salisbury's despatch on the Berlin Treaty, was dry and tame to a degree—so much so that when, quitting Europe for Asia, the noble Earl began to speculate on the possible result of a war with Russia to prevent her acquisition of Kars, ladies calmly fanned themselves, and were not to be roused from their inanimateness by the glib mention of the word "war" even. More attention was paid to the wan orator (driven now and again to wipe the moisture from his brow, so intolerably hot was the temperature) when he came to refer to the Anglo-Turkish Convention. The noble Earl was gravely emphatic when he said the Government had thought it time to say to Russia with regard to her advance in Asiatic Turkey, "Thus far, and no farther." There was an evident desire to calm any fears the French Government may have expressed when the Prime Minister dwelt upon the fact that the active interest England was about to take in Turkey in Asia would be for the ultimate benefit of England and France and all Europe, for, when tranquillity and order should be assured in those Eastern provinces, European enterprise would find abundant scope in those fair parts of the earth. On this part of his theme the noble Earl indulged in less flowery imagery than had been anticipated. His peroration was a boldly delivered justification of the transfer of Cyprus to England for the safe-guarding of the waterway to India, and for the protection of our interests in the East. The Premier's speech lasted an hour and thirty-five minutes.

SPEECH OF LORD BEACONSFIELD.

Lord Beaconsfield said,—In laying upon the table the protocols of the Congress of Berlin, I hope to lay before Parliament and the country generally some remarks upon the policy which has been supported by her Majesty's representatives at Berlin. Your Lordships are aware that the Treaty of San Stefano was looked upon with much distrust and alarm by the Government, that they believed that it was calculated to bring about a state of affairs dangerous to European independence, and dangerous to the interests of the British Empire. The embodiment of the Treaty is before your Lordships and the country as detailed in the circular of my noble friend Lord Salisbury; and our present condition is that we should show that in the changes and modifications that have been made in the Treaty of San Stefano by the Congress at Berlin that menace to the independence of Europe has been removed, and the threatened injuries to British interests averted (Ministerial cheers). The Congress have made great changes in the Treaty of San Stefano, and have restored a great portion of the territory that would have formed this great Bulgarian State. They have restored to the Sultan upwards of 30,000 geographical square miles and 2,000,000 of population, the territory and the population being the richest and wealthiest, the most ingenious, and the most loyal of any in the country. It was said that it was a bold step for the Congress to decide upon the new line for Turkey to be the Balkans, and that that line was by no means adequate. But it is not for anyone to say that, so far as nature is concerned, any position is impregnable. It is the courage, and patriotism, and devotion of a people which render a position really impregnable (Hear, hear). Eastern Roumelia—which, if properly defended, would prevent any host, however powerful, from attacking Constantinople by turning the Balkans—had been allotted to Turkey by the Congress (Hear, hear). But in consequence of that arrangement it became the duty of the Congress to inquire what would be the best arrangement with regard to Sofia and its surrounding district. The population of Sofia and the district was Bulgarian. It was exchanged for another district, where the population was eminently Mohammedan, and which, so far as the fertility of the land was concerned, was highly to the advantage of the Porte. This was a short but accurate account of an arrangement which for upwards of a month had very much excited Europe and this country, on the belief that it was on the threat of Russia that Sofia had been given up. They had also been reproached with not having at the same time obtained Varna for the Porte. What was Varna, he would ask? No doubt it was a portion of the system of defence of some importance; but, so far as Varna itself was concerned, it had not even a harbour, and those who dilated on the importance of Varna and the great error of the Congress in not securing that for Turkey, quite forgot that between the Bosphorus and Varna, on the coasts of the Black Sea, the Congress had allotted to Turkey by far the most important harbour—the harbour of Bourgas (Hear, hear). The Congress then resolved that, south of the Balkans, to a certain extent, the country should be formed into a new province, to which the name of Eastern Roumelia was given. It was thought at one time desirable to call it South Bulgaria, but it was feared that there might be a collision between a North and South Bulgaria, that there would be two parties intriguing to bring about a union between the two States. Accordingly the Congress resolved that this province should be called Eastern Roumelia, and that there should be established in it a Government somewhat different from the contiguous provinces, where the authority of the Sultan might be admitted. He was not of the general opinion that it was wise to interfere with the military Government of the Porte; but there were historical facts as well as political principles; and, though it might not be advisable to limit the authority of the Sultan in a military point of view, yet those would not be prudent statesmen who did not take into consideration both the factors of which he had spoken. The province of Eastern Roumelia had been the scene of many events upon which human nature looked with deep regret; and it was therefore advisable, in making this arrangement in Eastern Europe, to take steps to prevent any such excesses in future. To do this, and not to give the Sultan a direct political and military rule in the province, would have been, in the opinion of the Congress, a very grievous error. They had therefore decided that the Sultan should have the power of defending this barrier of the Balkans with all his forces. The Sultan had the power of defending his frontier by land and sea. With respect to the internal government of the province, the Congress had thought that the time had arrived when they should endeavour to carry into effect some of those important propositions intended for the better administration of the States of the Sultan which were discussed at the Conference at Constantinople. Generally speaking, there were three great points to be observed in any attempt to improve the administration of the Turkish dominions. First of all, it was important that the office of governor should be for a specific period, as it was, for instance, in India; that it should not be for a less period, say, than five years, and the beneficial effects of that system in the dominions of the Sultan would, he thought, be of incalculable benefit. That had been done in Eastern Roumelia. Secondly, they had thought it desirable that there should be instituted public assemblies in which the popular element should be adequately represented, and the business of which should be to levy the local finance of the province; and, thirdly, they had thought it equally important that order should be maintained in this province either by a gendarmerie of adequate force or by a local militia, in both cases the officers holding their commissions from the Sultan. But the whole administration of Eastern Roumelia had been referred to an inferior Commission, who would make their recommendations to the Sultan, who would issue firmans to carry them into effect. In all arrangements that had been made to meet the subject races, these Commissioners were to report the result to the Chief Commission, and then, after a firman from the Sultan, those changes would take effect. In the course of three months from the ratification of the Treaty of Berlin these arrangements would probably be made. It would be a hard matter to re-establish the Sultan as a ruler and substantial authority in some of his distant provinces, and this would especially be the case with Bosnia. No language could adequately convey the state of those provinces—the political intrigue, the constant revolutions, the total absence of public spirit, the hatreds, the emmities of the rival religions, the absence, above all, of any superior controlling power of acknowledged supremacy. All this formed one of those sad truths which none who had investigated the subject could refrain from acknowledging. Turkey had no, or very little, authority over this state of things, and at this moment she was in no state to accept the responsible situation of overseer. His own opinion was that nothing short of an army of 50,000 men and the best troops of Turkey could for a moment produce anything like order in that part. Austria was deeply interested in the arrangements, for she had upwards of 150,000 refugees from Bosnia, therefore it was natural that Austria should occupy and retain until she had laid the foundation of tranquillity. This propostion was made by my noble friend Lord Salisbury, and I earnestly supported it. There have been loud cries against the position we took in reference to the partition of Turkey. We endeavoured to prevent that partition, and the Government have at all times resisted such a course on the ground that any such attempt would lead to a long struggle, and that Europe and Asia would be so involved in trouble that great danger would follow. The professors of the theory had taken us up to a high mountain and showed us all the countries of the earth, and said, All this shall be yours if you will agree to such a proposition. But we have declined to follow such a course. And what is the result? Russia and the other Powers have come to the unanimous conclusion that the best arrangement for securing the tranquillity and order of the world is to retain the Sultan as a part of the political system of Europe. Undoubtedly there had been division of territory; but that was not partition. Other countries, after great struggles, had lost territory, but they had never considered it to be a question of partition. With regard to Greece, the Congress had men of considerable ability with regard to this question. But the Greek representatives evidently did not recognise what was the object of the labour of the Congress. They set forth what may be called their "great idea." That idea, it may probably be known, was very extensive, and reached from Constantinople to Greece. He hoped their Lordships would see that the charges made against the Congress, that they had neglected Greece, were without foundation. The interests of that country, however, had not been neglected either by the Congress or by her Majesty's Government; and there was a proposition made to give Greece a large addition to her resources. To that proposition there was very little response on the part of Greece, and although the Congress could not submit to and grant the enormous demands which Greece made, yet their Lordships will see by the papers that the Congress has done much for that country. Greece had a future before it, and that cannot be said of every country. He would therefore say to Greece, as he would to an individual who had a future before him, "Be patient." (Laughter.) What then is the position of Turkey? No longer considering Servia and Roumania as part of Turkey, and even Bosnia, as being part of Turkey, there is still a dominion of 60,000 geographical square miles, with a population of 6,000,000 for Turkey, concentrated around Constantinople. So that Turkey in Europe once more exists. In these arrangements her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries have taken a great part; and if any expedition had taken place it had shown what were the resources and the determination of this country; and had you entered into a war for which you were prepared, and are now prepared, probably in a month's time you would have exhausted the whole expenditure you have now made. It was useless to go to war for the purpose of restoring Kars or Batoum to Turkey, and therefore the Government took a course which they believed would get rid of all those struggles which took place from time to time between Turkey and Russia. Then, looking at the position of Turkey in Asia and our interests in the East, her Majesty's Government made a Convention with Turkey to produce tranquillity and order. We have enormous interests which we must care for; and, seeing that the progress of Russia was producing anarchy in Turkey, it behoved us to take positive steps. We shrink from the responsibility of handing over to our successors an impoverished country, and we therefore have made the best arrangements possible. In my opinion there is room enough for both Russia and England in Asia, but what territory we have there we must secure (Hear, hear). We hope by prudence we shall, in the steps we have taken, bring about a state of affairs as advantageous for Europe as ourselves; and in the policy we have pursued we cannot believe that the act we have recommended is one that will lead to trouble and warfare. We have taken the step of occupying Cyprus in the interests of our Empire in India, and in all our actions we have endeavoured to show a patriotic front, and adhered to the strict principles of truth, liberty, and justice. The right hon. gentleman then resumed his seat amid loud applause.

COMMONS.

The appearance of the Cattle Plague Bill in the Lower House has been rather a godsend, discussion of the measure having greatly relieved the tedium of the dull régime which ensued on the departure of the Prime Minister and Lord Salisbury for Berlin. The House was not visited by this epidemic yesterday week, debate being confined then to the Highways Bill, which was read the third time; to the measure providing for the retirement of Admiralty and War-Office Clerks, on which much eloquence was wasted; and to a revival of the Irish Home Rulers' grievance against the Government at the sudden death of the Fenian Sergeant M'Carthy shortly after his release from prison last spring, respecting which event Mr. O'Connor Power dropped into poetry:—

> Far dearer the grave or the prison
> Illumined by patriot's name,
> Than the trophies of all who have risen
> On Liberty's ruins to fame.

On Monday the "Massacre of the Innocents" was foreshadowed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who claimed Tuesdays and Wednesdays for Government business; and the Irish Intermediate Education Bill was read the second time on the motion of Mr. Lowther, after a series of eloquent speeches from Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Butt, and other hon. members. On Tuesday the Chancellor of the Exchequer referred Lord Robert Montagu to the Anglo-Turkish Treaty itself for the elucidation of the points he wished to be informed upon. Then was begun a straggling debate on the vexed Contagious Diseases Bill, which was only brought to an issue, after much vexation of spirit, on Wednesday. Sir Henry James moved a resolution to the effect that no Order in Council should be valid if it contravened any treaty contracted with a foreign Government. This was opposed by the Government, and discussion waxed long and loud. The cattle plague, in effect, seemed to have possessed hon. members, and with such effect that, on Wednesday, even the mild Sir Stafford Northcote showed his teeth and spoke with some temper of the tactics of the Opposition. Thereupon Sir Charles Dilke moved the adjournment of the House, and such a storm was raised about the head of the Ministry that the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Mr. Cross had to bow their heads, and were fain to accept the compromise suggested by Mr. Pell, Sir Stafford Northcote announcing that the Government would "omit from the schedule any distinction between one country and another." Thus was the concession Mr. Forster stoutly insisted upon virtually granted.

There was little of interest in the House on Thursday, the Upper Chamber having for the time absorbed nearly all the public attention. In reply to a question from Mr. Otway in reference to the £40,000,000 indemnity demanded from Turkey under the treaty of San Stefano, the Chancellor of the Exchequer referred the hon. member to the Protocols when they were distributed, where he would find a despatch from Lord Salisbury on the subject. That despatch set forth the declaration of the English and Russian Plenipotentiaries, the result of which was that Turkey was not internationally bound and could not be compelled to pay any portion of the indemnity until the claims of all the creditors of Turkey previous to the war were paid in full. Lord R. Montague inquired whether there was any truth in the telegram of the Times with respect to the seizure of a British boat's crew off Gallipoli by the Russians, and the firing upon another. Mr. W. H. Smith said it appeared that there was some foundation for the rumour, but the details were wholly inaccurate. A telegram had just been received from Admiral Commerell to the effect that a steam-boat had been sent in search of two officers of the Swiftsure who were missing, and its crew had been detained by the Russians; but they had since returned on board. Admiral Hornby was inquiring into the matter, and would report upon it. The report of the resolution authorising the payment of salaries, allowances, and compensations under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act out of moneys to be provided by Parliament was agreed to. The bill itself was the subject of consideration by the House in Committee during the rest of the sitting.

The opening of the Ripponden branch of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway for goods and mineral traffic took place on Monday.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

"Carle, now the King's come." Thus sang Sir Walter Scott exultingly, in Blackwood, when his Majesty King George the Fourth arrived in Edinburgh. "Carle!" now the Earl of Beaconsfield is come—not precisely a King, but still a very mighty personage, for he brings Peace in his train. For the nonce we are spared those Horrors of War of which the Lorrainer, Jacques Callot, and the Spaniard, Francisco Goya, have left us such appallingly graphic pictures. These said Horrors I find rhapsodically described in a poem written by Dr. Young, author of the "Night Thoughts," in 1753, and communicated to Mr. Samuel Richardson, author of "Clarissa Harlowe." I positively must quote a couple of stanzas of this sublime production, which is entitled "The Sailor's Song to the South: Occasioned by the Rumours of a War":—

Britannia nods, the labouring earth
Discloses a tremendous birth;
In smoking rivers runs her molten ore;
Thence, monsters of enormous size
And hideous aspect threat'ning rise,
Flame from the deck; from trembling bastions roar.

But Britannia is to be appeased by timely submission:—

She gladly sheathes her courage keen,
And spares her nit'rous magazine;
Her cannon slumber till the proud aspire
To lawless plunder; then they blaze,
They thunder from tremendous seas,
Touch'd by their injured master's soul of fire.

I never was, to the slightest extent, a judge of poetry; and I have never even been able to make out whether "Form, Form, Riftemen form" be a thing of beauty or so much "buncombe." Will anybody tell me whether Dr. Young's verses quoted above should be considered majestic or bombastic? But I like "Nit'rous Magazine." It would be an admirable title for a "Jingo" journal.

With the sanction of the Lord Mayor a splendid bas-relief in marble, by the late John Bell, representing the return to England after the Waterloo campaign of the Duke of Wellington and his heroic companions in arms, has been placed in one of the corridors of Guildhall. This is not the first time that a display of statuary has taken place in the grand old Gothic chamber. Lord Mayors nowadays are usually Conservative; but in the year 1814, when the allied Sovereigns visited England, London possessed a Chief Magistrate who was a strong Radical, and whose name was Matthew Wood. His Lordship caused to be placed in niches in Guildhall marble busts of Napoleon, Fox, Sheridan, Franklin, Washington, and Oliver Cromwell.

Mem: It is not pleasant to read that John Bell's bas-relief has been placed in a wooden frame painted in "imitation" of Sienna marble. While they were about it, the City Mæcenases might have gone to the expense of a real marble frame.

"Still harping on my daughter." My daughter, for the nonce, is Cyprus, and I have been hunting her up with much assiduity all the week. I find traces of the fair insulary in Chambers's "Domestic Annals of Scotland," wherein it is mentioned (vol. iii., p. 581) that in the year 1736, an Eastern hierarch, designated as Archbishop of Nicosia, in Cyprus, came to Edinburgh, bearing letters of recommendation from high personages in London, and seeking to raise subscriptions "for the relief of his countrymen suffering under the Turks." I hope that the Lord Provost and Bailies behaved liberally to the Cypriot archiepiscopos.

As for the beloved Burton of the "Anatomy of Melancholy," he includes Cyprus in his general lament over the Eastern Question as it existed in his day: "Tell me, politicians," writes Robert the Wise, "why is the fruitful Palestina, noble Greece, Egypt, Asia Minor, so much decayed and (mere carcases now) fallen from what they were? The ground is the same; but the government is altered. The people are grown slothful; their good husbandry, policy, and industry are decayed . . . where are now those 4000 cities of Egypt, those 100 cities of Crete? . . . Alexander built seventy cities in a short space of time. Our Sultans and Turks demolish twice as many and leave all desolate. A sapient Robert; yet it is hard that we should have had to wait two hundred and fifty years before it occurred to a sagacious English Prime Minister to protect the Turks against themselves. There is no need to banish the Osmanlis "bag and baggage." We have only to go to them with our bags and our baggage, and we shall eventually discover that "Somebody's Luggage" in Asia Minor is ours, and nobody else's.

One more Cyprist mem: An erudite and obliging correspondent directs my attention to the Decameron of Boccaccio (eighth day, tenth novel), in which mention is made of a textile fabric of great softness and fineness, woven in the island of Cyprus, and thence exported to Italy for fashionable ladies' wear. This stuff was called "Bucherame Cipriano." Is our English word "buckram" indirectly derived from the Italian "Bucherame"? Directly it comes from the French "bougran." In Luigi and Fortunato's Italian Dictionary, Padua, 1827, "Bucherame" is defined as a kind of canvas, and the Greek and Latin equivalents for it are, respectively, byssus and bussos. In Planche's Greek-French Lexicon, Paris, 1824, "bussos" is described as "a veil of very fine linen;" while in the Oxford Scapula of 1820 the word is qualified as meaning a kind of muslin from the Indies. But the learned Littré takes no account of byssus or bussos. The latest of great French lexicographers defines "bougran" as a "toile forte et gommée;" in Provençal patois, bocaran; in Catalan, "bocaram," and in Italian "bucherame;" but he gives etymological alternatives in "bouc," "boc," "boc-a-ran," from the supposition that the fabric was originally woven from goat's hair; or in the Italian "bucherare," to transpierce (which Luigi and Fortunato derive from perforare, thus qualifying bougran or buckram as a fabric of which the warp and woof formed very widely "decussated reticulations." Thus it became necessary to gum or glue it (as Bailey says) in order to stiffen it. But was buckram originally of cotton or linen, and when was the manufacture introduced into Cyprus? Those are the moot points

I never (nowadays) read a notice of a sale at Christie's of pictures by the Old Masters, without amazement. The other day, at the famous auction-room in King-street, St. James's, a "Marriage of the Virgin," by Rubens, went for ninety guineas. A few years ago Mr. Walrond paid 1450 guineas for this same picture. As for the fact that no more than four pounds four shillings were realised by a "Portrait of the Artist's Daughter by Titian," that fact speaks for itself, and needs no comment. But the Rubens is, presumably, a genuine and splendid example of Sir Peter Paul. What has the great Antwerper done that he should sink so low in the market? If I had five thousand pounds I would lay out every penny of the sum (after I had settled with the milkman) in the purchase of Old Masters, not only first rate but second rate ones, convinced as I am that twenty years hence my heirs, executors, or assigns would realise fifty thousand pounds by the transaction. The reaction must come. The claims of learned draughtmanship, noble composition, dexterous distribution of light and shade, and harmonious colour must eventually be recognised once more. I would sooner pick up a Raphael Mengs or a Carl Vanloo for twenty pounds than half ruin myself by becoming the possessor of a "Splodge, R.A.," from this year's Academy, a masterpiece which in 1898 may not fetch so much as a five-pound note at Christie's.

Touching the late T. Vecellio, of Venice, painter and decorator, I read in the Daily News, in an article on the illustrious French painter Gérome:—

It is said, whether truly or not, that a picture which he sent in 1845 was refused by the jury; whereupon, to mark his contempt of this august body, he borrowed a Titian from a private gallery, sent it in as his own work to the Salon of 1846, and had the satisfaction of seeing it rejected too. Those who know how extremely solemn a person M. Gérome now is may be amused by this anecdote of his early years, which possibly has only a grain of fact in it; but it is certainly true that M. Gérome headed a deputation of young artists, who in 1848 went to petition the Constituent Assembly to abolish marriage.

Should an artist be married? I say that he should. We all know that, when Flaxman told Sir Joshua Reynolds that he had espoused the amiable and accomplished Ann Dolman, the cold and unimpressionable painter of Leicester Fields remarked, "Oh, then you are ruined for an artist." Sir Joshua and Sir Thomas Lawrence were the only Presidents of the Royal Academy who were incorrigible bachelors. Raffaele died unmarried at thirty-seven; but, had he lived, he would have wedded the beauteous niece of Cardinal Bibbiena. Somehow, nevertheless, I think that sculptors (I grant Flaxman as an exception to the rule) should, in the interests of art, be celibate. And I am just now writing to a sculptor who is "the happy father of six." If I try to compromise matters by opining that lady artists had best remain single, I am met by the reminder that many renowned female artists have not taken seriously to painting until after they have been led to the altar. In any case, dogmatism on the subject is dangerous; and Sir Joshua's ill-conditioned remark was possibly due to his having been jilted by Angelica Kauffmann.

As for the expediency of matrimony in the case of authors, I hold that novelists and journalists should always be married men, but that poets should invariably be single. The True Poet should be more or less unhappy; the more miserable he is the more sweetly he will sing; but there is no reason why he should make others wretched.

The centenary of the death of Jean Jacques Rousseau was celebrated last Sunday by a monster meeting at the Château d'Eau, Paris. The fourteenth of July was not by any means the hundredth anniversary of the decease of the philanthropist of whom it was written—I quote from memory—

'Tis a pity a man of such exquisite feeling
Should send all his brats to the Foundling, my dear.

But the fourteenth happening to be the anniversary of the capture of the Bastille in 1789, and of the Festival of the Federation in the Champs de Mars in 1790, the Parisian Radicals thought that they might as well bring in Jean Jacques as a bonne bouche. Selections from Rousseau's opera of "Le Devin du Village" were performed; and M. Louis Blanc made a most eloquent speech. The gifted orator could not say much personally in favour of the Citizen of Geneva, so he adroitly turned the subject in order to prefer a terrible indictment against the institutions and morals of the eighteenth century. It was the old story over again of the solicitor who, in the middle of a trial, sent a slip of paper to the barrister whom he had retained with this inscription, "No case. Abuse the plaintiff's attorney." The eighteenth century was to M. Louis Blanc the plaintiff's attorney.

Mem: What has become of the keys of the Bastille? They were sent by the French Republic as a present to George Washington; and they used to lie on the hall table of the illustrious American patriot's house at Mount Vernon. In what American Museum are those keys at present?

I hope that some means will be devised for paying the stipends of the luckless pensioners of the disestablished Royal Dramatic College. It can scarcely be said to be disendowed, since it never had any endowment worth speaking of; and that fact from the very first militated against its chances of permanent prosperity. The Royal Dramatic College was substantially an assemblage of almshouses; and almshouses cannot live without an inalienable sustentation fund. A lame attempt was lately made at the Auction Mart to sell the building and grounds, "by direction of the Trustees, under an order of the Chancery Commissioners." The tentative sale seems to have been after the nature of a Dutch auction: the gentleman in the rostrum pleasantly asking whether anybody would bid £15,000, and so by gentle degrees sliding down to £5000, or, in fact, anything. But nobody would bid anything, and the property was withdrawn. Perhaps the Woking Necropolis Company may be induced to take that which was their own land back again, and convert the defunct College into a series of catacombs.

P.S.—John Howard visited Cyprus on his way to Constantinople, on that last and glorious pilgrimage of humanity which ended at Kherson. The last King de jure of Cyprus was a M. de Lusignan, a member of Napoleon I.'s Legislative Body, who died in Paris in 1814. He was a lineal descendant of Guy de Lusignan. The Piedmontese Sovereigns assumed for centuries the titles of "Kings of Cyprus and Jerusalem," until Victor Emmanuel II. exchanged the phantom dignity for the more substantial style of King of Italy. NATIONAL SPORTS.

There can be no question but that for some weeks past a remarkable apathy has characterised all matters connected with racing. No doubt the stirring events that have taken place in Europe, and the probability that this country would shortly be involved in a gigantic war, have had a great deal to do with it; and then the noble army of backers have, with one or two notable exceptions, been defeated at all points by the ring, and will scarcely recruit their shattered forces, and be in a condition for a fresh campaign, before Goodwood. It is not, therefore, surprising that the pleasant July meeting at Newmarket was a little tame, though the weather was fairly fine and the attendance large. Lord Falmouth, generally so strong with his two-year-olds, has done little or nothing this season; but in the Chesterfield Stakes he introduced us to one of the old sort in a beautiful filly named Leap Year. She is by Kingcraft—Wheatear, and is, therefore, almost a full sister to Skylark, who is by King Tom, the sire of Kingcraft, from Wheatear. After the capital performance of Gunnersbury in the July Stakes, he naturally started a hot favourite: but it is probable that his exertions on the Tuesday took all the steel out of him, for he never seemed fairly able to go the pace, and Leap Year won as she liked from Ishmael. On the Friday, Chevron, who was purchased by Captain Machell for £1500 after he had beaten Trappist, got back some of his purchase money in the Newcastle Stakes; and Lord Falmouth, having once broken the ice, took the Stetchworth Stakes with Whirlwind, who, however, only won after a very close finish with Breadfinder, a very useful filly in Lord Lonsdale's stable.

The Liverpool July Meeting has turned out scarcely so successful as might have been anticipated, when the liberality of the promoters in the way of added money is taken into consideration; but the "going" was so desperately hard that many owners were afraid to risk their horses upon it. On Tuesday Childe Harold won the rich St. George's Stakes, beating Matador and Lady Lumley. The former was by no means fit, and ran very wide at the last turn; and a mile and three quarters proved far beyond Lady Lumley's compass. Caxtonian, a Stockbridge winner, placed the Mersey Stakes to Lord Anglesey's credit; and Hesper (9 st. 4 lb.), who must be made of cast iron to stand such incessant work, had little difficulty in beating Lyceum (8 st. 2 lb.) for the Windermere Plate. In spite of the munificent addition of £1000, the Liverpool Cup on Wednesday only tempted seven to the post, and, with the exception of Advance (9 st.), none of these were very brilliant performers. Snail (8 st.), who just beat Petrarch for this prize last season, was not much fancied, but he took them along at such a pace that the top weight was done with a long way from home, and the issue was fought out between Strathmore (7 st. 2 lb.) and Constantine (6 st. 10 lb.), the former winning by a head; while Advance, who came again from the distance, was a fair third. The pleasant little Winchester fixture calls for no remark; and at the time of writing the opening of the Kempton Park course is not ripe for comment.

The sales of blood stock at Newmarket last week were terribly dull, and many lots were almost given away. Mr. Chaplin, as usual, did pretty well with his seven, an own brother to Charon, by Hermit—Barchettina, making 1250 gs., and a colt by Doncaster—Chanionesse, 1100 gs., Mr. Naylor being the purchaser in each instance. The colt by Rosicrucian—The Duchess (1500 gs.), who is a half brother to Maximilian, helped Mr. Waring's average; and the young Sterlings from the Yardley Stud also sold very well, a colt by that sire from Seagull making 1600 gs. Messrs. Tattersall announce that they are instructed to dispose of the whole of the Middle Park Stud, without reserve, in September next.

Cricketers have had a very busy time of it during the last few days; and, as the ground has been very hard, the bat has proved far too much for the ball, and large scores have been the order of the day. The opening of the Eton and Harrow match proved rather slow; but last Saturday the assemblage at Lord's was as large and fashionable as ever, and the victory of Harrow by 20 runs was received with great enthusiasm. Several on each side batted extremely well; but the fielding, especially that of the Eton boys, was very far from what it should have been. We append the full score:—

Umpires: West and Wheeler.

Lancashire has beaten Yorkshire in a single innings with 26 runs to spare, an unexpected result, which was mainly brought about by the deadly bowling of Mr. A. G. Steel, who took no less than fourteen wickets, and the fine batting of Mr. Hornby (78) and Barlow (60). Notts has defeated Surrey by ten wickets, the scoring on each side being most insignificant, and Morley taking twelve Surrey wickets for only 70 runs. In the match between Kent and Sussex, Mr. A. Penn achieved the extraordinary feat of taking six wickets for only three runs; and the latter county, for which Lord Harris (76) batted in his old style, won in one innings with 36 runs to spare. Yorkshire made short work of Surrey, thanks to the heavy scoring of Ulyett (67), Greenwood (61), and Armitage (71); and there was some very fast run-getting in the contest between Middlesex and Notts, which was drawn, Mr. W. H. Hadow (140 and 44), Oscroft (37 and 77), and Selby (62) being the largest contributors for their respective sides. The splendid batting of C. Bannermann (133) enabled the Australians to beat Leicestershire by eight wickets, in spite of the stubborn resistance of Wheeler (60 and 65) and Sankey (70).

The result of last week's archery meeting at the Crystal Palace is that among the ladies Mrs. Piers Legh was placed first with 598, Mrs. Horniblow second with 560 (her real score being 659, from which 15 per cent was deducted as a penalty for previous successes), while Mrs. Marshall was third with 559 (her real score reaching the high number of 699, but suffering a diminution of 20 per cent, according to the laws of the game). Among the gentlemen, Mr. Palairet was able to sustain a loss of 25 per cent and yet to remain first. Mr. Walrond came next with 693, and Mr. Chapman next with 684. In the handicaps expressly so called Mrs. Ainsworth and Mr. Porter were first. Mr Butt, the honorary secretary, who this year succeeded to the duties from which Mr. George Chenery retired in 1877, announced that a similar meeting will be held next year at the Crystal Palace.

The Royal North Yacht Club Regatta was concluded last Saturday at Greenock. The two principal prizes, £100 each, were won by Jullanar and Cythna, 22 tons. The Nore Yacht Club also sailed a match on Saturday, Florence and Mildred winning respectively the first and second prizes.

Miss Beckwith on Wednesday afternoon swam from Westminster Bridge to Richmond and back to Mortlake—a distance of twenty miles.

A letter was read on Wednesday at the Paisley Presbytery of the Established Church of Scotland, from the Rev. Dr. Gillan, suggesting that the Reverend Court should appoint a day of thanksgiving for the peace secured at Berlin by Lord Beaconsfield, and for the escape this country had had from the horrors of war. The Presbytery decided that the thanksgiving should take place in all its churches on Sunday, July 28.

BRISTOL AND CLIFTON.

The meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society of England last week at Bristol, with the exhibition of cattle and implements, and the award of the chief prizes, was noticed in our last publication. The visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to the city and the Agricultural Show, which took place yesterday week, has further increased the public interest of this occasion. The Prince was at Bristol during three or four hours of the afternoon; he received an address from the Mayor and Corporation, to which he replied; then went to the show-yard, where he received another address, from the President and Council of the Royal Agricultural Society; and, having inspected the cattle and other departments of the exhibition, partook of luncheon in a pavilion specially prepared for his Royal Highness and other distinguished guests; after which he returned to London.

Our Illustrations of some picturesque remains of antique domestic architecture, which we have called "Bits of Old Bristol," and the views also of that romantic scenery on the heights of Clifton and St. Vincent's Rocks, overlooking the River Avon, which adorns the suburban neighbourhood, will be acceptable to many readers. No task undertaken by this Journal is more agreeable than that of doing justice, with pen and pencil, to the attractive and interesting features, and to the local associations of history, that belong to some provincial cities and towns of England and Scotland. The ancient city of Bristol was made the subject of a series of Illustrations in our Number for Oct. 25, 1873, upon the occasion of a Musical Festival held at Colston Hall to raise funds in aid of the medical charities. We then gave views of the inner port, with its shipping alongside the quays, the Cathedral (which was lately restored), the remains of St. Augustine's Abbey, and the Black Friars' Priory in Rosemary-street, the Abbey Gateway on College-green, St. John's Gateway in Broad-street, and Colston Hall. The additional "Bits of Old Bristol," which Mr. S. Read has drawn for us this week, in the characteristic style of his "Leaves from a Sketch-Book," will be appreciated by all true lovers of antiquity and by all who have an eye for the unstudied but often charming effects of quaint old-fashioned buildings, much weathered and worn by the lapse of many years. In the gable-fronted, half-timbered houses of Kingstreet, Maryleport-street, and Pithay, with their over-hanging upper floors, their oriel windows filled with square mullions, and surmounted by pent-house lids, thoroughly breaking up the lines of horizontal extension, we see the ordinary character of Elizabethan town or street architecture, retaining some trace of Tudor Gothic or Perpendicular traditions, which thus seem to have proved as congenial to the modest uses of common popular and domestic life as to those of stately ecclesiastical and palatial magnificence. We gave a view in Wine-street, with the house in which Southey was born, and one of Steep-street, among the illustrations of Bristol before published. The old city was formerly called Bristow, or Brigstow, which means "the Place of the Bridge," as we find a "Bristow-street" in Edinburgh, and in other towns. It stands at the confluence of the Frome with the Avon, eight miles from the sea; and the new port of Avonmouth, with its capacious docks recently described in this Journal, bids fair to take its full share of maritime commerce. The trade with the West Indies, and the manufacture of sugar as well as its importation, have long contributed to the prosperity of Bristol, which has nevertheless lagged far behind Liverpool and Glasgow in the race of mercantile enterprise during the past half century. In the more troublous and adventurous periods of our national history, this sturdy and active old city of the West has borne a conspicuous part; in the wars between Stephen and Matilda, the Barons' war against Henry III., the dethronement of Edward II. and that of Richard II., and the Civil Wars of Charles I. with the Parliament, when Bristol was stormed by Prince Rupert, and was recaptured by Fairfax two years afterwards. The Cathedral, with the Bishop's see, was founded by Henry VIII. upon the dissolution of St. Augustine's Abbey.

The pleasant, salubrious, and rather fashionable suburb of Clifton, with the adjacent Clifton Downs, Durdham Downs, and St. Vincent's Rocks, and with the once famous medicinal spa called "The Hot Wells," situated beneath those heights on the banks of the Avon, has long been a favourite place of residence for quiet and leisurely people. The river here separates Gloucestershire from Somersetshire, flowing through a grand gorge, 250 feet deep and 600 feet wide, between precipitous limestone cliffs, on the one side, and the lovely hanging woods of Leigh Court and Nightingale Valley on the other. It is spanned by the noble chain suspension-bridge, which was completed, some fifteen years ago, with the materials of the Hungerford Suspension Bridge removed from London. This work is chiefly remarkable for the immense amount of masonry in the supporting piers, especially that on the Somersetshire side. A distant view of the Bristol Channel or "Severn Sea," with the opposite coast of Wales, is obtained from the heights near Clifton.

We shall give another page of "Bits of Old Bristol" next week.

From Valparaiso we have particulars of a hurricane there, by which some lives were lost, and great damage done to the shipping in port and to property on shore.

FINE ARTS.

MR. ALFRED SCHOECK'S LANDSCAPES.

There are now on view at the gallery of Mr. Emil Dünki, Buckingham Palace-road, several landscapes by the Swiss painter Alfred Schoeck, which deserve notice alike for their art-merit and the nature of the subjects represented. The largest picture, which is about three feet by two, represents "The Midnight Sun" a few degrees above the horizon, gleaming redly in a sea streaked with lines of low-lying rocks. These are dominated in the foreground by two desolate peaks, on the lesser of which sits an eagle, emphasising by its presence the utter loneliness of the scene. "Cape Mabon," in Nova Scotia, is less barren and remote. The bold, dark brown chalk cliff is crowned with spruce and fir; and although the sky still lowers under the influence of the departing storm, they and the seagulls that sweep round the lower rocks on which the sea frets itself into white spray give a familiar and almost friendly aspect to a picture which would otherwise be as impressively barren as the first. A third picture, full of local character, represents what the painter calls "The Wilderness in Canada." In this we have in the foreground a group of tumbled rocks richly lichened, from which spring several tree-trunks which the prairie fire has charred and blackened. Two brown bears watch a couple of moose as they drink in the adjoining lake, which is lit up by a glowing sunset. The next landscape shows sunrise on the mountains of Norway immediately after the first fall of snow. The lake towards which the reindeer wander is still unfrozen, and reflects brightly the rosy peaks of the sun-kissed mountains. There are several pictures in the gallery besides those we have named, but we have said enough to indicate the wide extent of Mr. Schoeck's travels and the ready character of his pencil. His manner of painting is solid and manly and by no means unworthy of his master, the late M. Diday, of Geneva, who also had the honour of instructing Calame, the most esteemed of all the Swiss landscape-painters.

There is in the same gallery a very interesting collection of water-colour drawings by W. Van de Velde, representing various scenes in the Holy Land.

Sir Coutts Lindsay opened the Grosvenor Gallery from two to three o'clock on Sunday afternoon, and again in the evening from six till eight. Five hundred and sixty-three persons passed the turnstiles To-morrow and on Aug. 4 the gallery will be opened between six and eight p.m. Sir Coutts Lindsay asks us to state that it is his intention to open the Grosvenor Gallery free after three o'clock on the afternoons of the three Saturdays—July 20, 27, and Aug. 3. Tickets can be obtained on Fridays by application, either personally or by letter, containing addressed envelope, to the Secretary, 132, New Bond-street.

The sub-committee for the completion of St. Paul's have presented a report which has been adopted by the executive committee on the decoration of the dome. They recommend that a contract should be entered into with Mr. Leighton, R.A., for the preparation of a cartoon for one of the large circles, at an expense of £600, with the understanding that if the work is proceeded with he is to be employed, if he wishes it, for the other seven great circles on similar terms; that a contract should be made with Mr. Poynter for all the figure-subjects on two of the ribs, and all the others in the intermediate space, at a price not to exceed £1550, with a like understanding as to the remainder; that Mr. Stannus should be employed to prepare a full-sized cartoon of two of the ribs of the dome and all the architectural features between them. It is calculated it will require at least one year to complete these works, for which £3500 to £4000 will be required.

A marble relievo called "Peace, and the Soldiers' Return," executed by Mr. J. Bell, has been bought by the London Corporation, and placed in the Guildhall. The relievo represents the return of Wellington and his army after the peace following the Battle of Waterloo. The figure of the Duke on horseback is in the centre of the composition; on his right is represented Victory breaking the sword of the enemy, and on the other side Peace is sheathing hers. Above are figures of Plenty and Fame, and on both sides the returning Guards are breaking from the ranks to clasp wife and child, while groups in front show the people welcoming the Duke and his victorious soldiers. The new relievo has been hung in the lobby through which the various city offices are approached. It is framed in wood painted to resemble Sienna marble.

The following contributions have been made by some of the City guilds to the fund now being collected by the Society of Arts for the purpose of sending artisan reporters to the Paris Exhibition:—The Clothworkers' Company, £100; the Drapers' Company, 50 guineas; the Mercers' Company, 50 guineas; the Fishmongers' Company, 25 guineas; the Cordwainers' Company, 25 guineas; the Salters' Company, 10 guineas; the Carpenters' Company, 10 guineas.

Mr. J. P. Knight, the general manager of the London and Brighton Railway, has introduced an admirable innovation on that line, by way of experiment, which, it is to be hoped, will be quickly followed by other railway companies. With a view of affording increased comfort to passengers travelling during the hot weather, he has ordered a supply of fresh cold drinking-water, at a penny per glass, to be supplied to passengers at Lewes, Horsham, and Three Bridges stations. The platform attendants will walk alongside the train, and, as may be required, hand the drinking-water to the passengers in the carriages.

HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE (118th). This popular and standard book has been thoroughly modernised, and will now be found much more progressive. It begins at the lowest step of the ladder. Every little lesson has been carefully fingered and the whole arranged, with a view to the position of the hand, and in the order of difficulty with reference to the keys. Solo duets have been added, and the part for the pupil placed over that for the teacher, in order further to explain the time table. The improvements of the book will be found both practical and useful, and calculated to strengthen its position and increase its world-wide popularity. Post-free for 26 stamps.

EPPS'S COCOA.

THE "Naval and Military Gazette" says:—
"The nutritive qualities of cocoa over either those of tea or coffee are now so generally acknowledged that the steady increase shown by official statistics in its consumption during recent years ceases to be a matter of surprise. One of the first firms to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our breakfast-table was Messrs. Epps and Co., whose name, since 1839, has been so continuously before the public, and whose Homœopathic Cocoa is as familiar in our homes as the proverbial 'household words.' Those whose business it has been to watch at Messrs. Epps's works the elaborate and complex processes, and to note the care and labour bestowed before the crude cocoa bean is considered ready for consumption, cannot but admit that the popularity Messrs. Epps's productions have secured is fully deserved. The vastness of these works may be imagined when it is stated that four millions of pounds of prepared cocoa alone are prepared there yearly. The reputation gained, now many years since, for Mr. James Epps's preparation, both for its purity and its value as a dietetic, has been more than maintained. A constant increasing demand fully testifies to this—which must be as gratifying to Messrs. Epps as it is certainly flattering to the good faith they have kept with the public to secure so gratifying a result."

"All the Year Round" says:—
"Having now disposed of fancy chocolate, let us stroll to the Euston-road, hard by the Regent's Park, to Epps's cocoa manufactory, where may be studied the making of cocoa on a stupendous scale, giving a just idea of the value of these articles, not as luxuries, but as actual food."

THE "Court Journal" says:—
"In a climate so varying and trying as our own, to maintain sound and uniform health, our daily diet cannot be too carefully and attentively studied. Advancing science and recent discoveries have within the last few years been instrumental in adding several most valuable additions to our comparatively short list of dietetic foods. Foremost among these should be ranged cocoa, which, although known here several centuries previously, only came into general use within the last forty years. One of the first to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our table was Mr. James Epps, whose 'Prepared Cocoa' has gained such just repute for its excellent and nutritious character. Prepared originally on homœopathic principles, in a peculiarly delicate form, and easy of digestion, it met a public and convenient want, and speedily became popular, until now Messrs. Epps produce over four millions of pounds of their cocoa a year, and their manufactory is the largest of its kind in this country."

"Cassell's Household Guide" says:—
"We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps and Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in the Euston-road, London."

EPPS'S COCOA.

THE "Morning Advertiser" says:—
"In the middle of the seventeenth century an announcement appeared in one of the few journals of that period, to the effect that 'out of Bishopsgate-street, at a Frenchman's house, is an excellent West India drink, called chocolate, to be sold at reasonable rates.' This is the first record we have of the introduction of cocoa into England. For a time it flourished as a fashionable drink, and then, like all fashions, subsided. Nearly two centuries after, in 1832, the duties, which had been almost prohibitive, were greatly reduced, and one of the first to take advantage of re-establishing the popularity of cocoa was Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists. Under the name of 'Prepared Cocoa' they introduced a soluble and convenient preparation, which required no boiling, and was palatable and highly nutritious. It met a public want, speedily became popular, and year by year has increased in demand, till the consumption now exceeds four millions of pounds yearly."

THE "Christian World" says:—
"'If I am to take cocoa,' said I, 'I must know what it is made of; I must examine the process; I must dive into the mystery of its manufacture; I must see and judge for myself what are the ingredients of which it is composed. With this view I made my way to the manufactory of James Epps and Co., in the Euston-road.'"

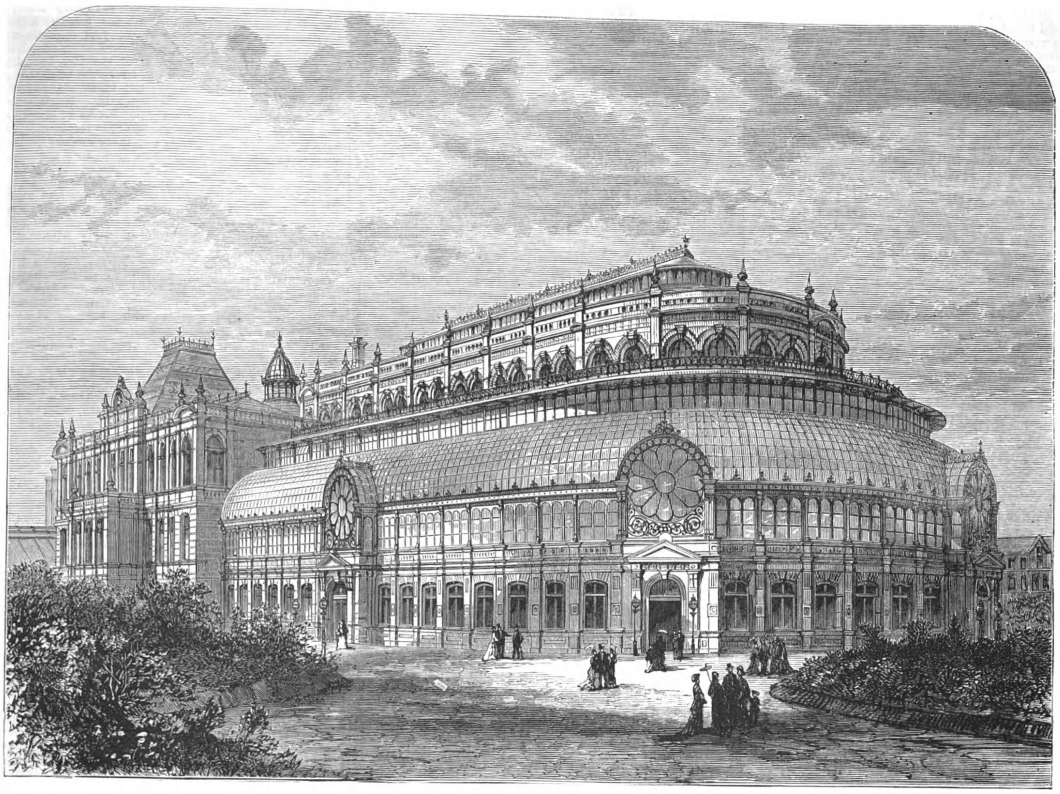
"John Bull" says:—
"In no branches of industry are recent scientific and chemical discoveries more generally applied than in those upon which our food supply is so largely dependent. The luxuries of the last generation have in many cases become the daily necessaries of the present. A forcible illustration of this is to be found in the enormous increase in the consumption of cocoa year by year—in exact proportion to the increased facilities for its manufacture. An idea of the vast extent of this industry may be gained from the fact that one firm alone—that of Messrs. Epps and Co.—now sell over four millions of pounds annually. The 'Homœopathic Cocoa' of Messrs. Epps has, during the many years it has been before the public, gained great and just repute, which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly entitle it to. A cocoa in soluble form, and combining what are technically known as 'flesh-forming' and 'heat-giving' properties, is clearly an invaluable addition to our scanty list of dietetic foods. Such Messrs. Epps claim for their prepared cocoas, and such analysis and—most valuable of all—experience has proved it to be."

THE "Church Review" says:—
"Although we cannot yet boast of a free breakfast-table, still the active legislation in furtherance of that object during the last half century leaves us much to be thankful for. A striking instance of the general good resulting from the removal of heavy imposts upon our food supply is afforded by the marvellous increase in the consumption of cocoa since 1832, up to which period an almost prohibitive duty was levied. In 1830 the total amount consumed in this country was less than half a million pounds yearly. At the present time one firm alone, that of Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists, sell annually four million pounds."

EPPS'S COCOA.

THE "Civilian" says:—
"In the seventeenth century, before either tea or coffee had found their way into the English markets, chocolate was a favourite beverage with the luxurious classes at that period; it then fetched an almost fabulous price per pound. To-day, when modern science and enterprise have placed it within the reach of every class, cocoa is not only still regarded as a palatable and refreshing drink, but is valued for its nutritive and dietetic qualities. One of the first, we believe, who may be credited with introducing cocoa in its present form is Mr. James Epps. Prepared on sound dietetic principles, Epps's Homœopathic cocoa contains all the nutritive properties of the native product in such a form that they are rendered thoroughly soluble, and, therefore, much more easy of digestion. The natural superabundance of fat present in raw cocoa is, moreover, not only counteracted, but made to serve one of the most essential functions of sound diet. Messrs. Epps's works are now, perhaps, the largest in the country, the cocoa produced there amounting to many million pounds a year."

"Land and Water" says:—
"Through the kindness of Messrs. Epps, I recently had an opportunity of seeing the many complicated and varied processes the cacao bean passes through ere it is sold for public use, and being interested and highly pleased with what I saw during the visit to the manufactory, I thought a brief account of the cacao and the way it is manufactured by Messrs. Epps to fit it for a wholesome and nutritious beverage, might be likewise of interest to the readers of 'Land and Water.'"



THE "Mining World" says:—
"The preparation of pure and nutritious articles of diet is, in point of philanthropy, noble work. The wear and tear upon brain and muscle in this age is growing more and more intense, so that without some compensating influence the end must be hopeless collapse in individuals and national decay collectively. Fresh air and more wholesome and nutritious diet must be had at any price. Both food and drink need great improvement. A few chemists have done great public service in this respect. Mr. James Epps, in the preparation of cocoa in its various forms, has done more, perhaps, than any other person to supply the tables of even the poorest with a most agreeable and wholesome article of diet. The application of modern science at his extensive works has brought cocoa, once the dear-bought luxury of the higher classes, within the reach of all; and there may now be found on the labourer's table cocoa in better and more nutritious form than the Royal breakfast-tables of early Kings could boast. Cocoa as prepared by Mr. Epps is palatable, refreshing, strengthening, and infinitely preferable to the trashy tea and coffee in general use."

THE WINTER GARDENS AND AQUARIUM AT BLACKPOOL, LANCASHIRE.

THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON OPENING THE BLACKPOOL WINTER GARDENS, LANCASHIRE.

THE BLACKPOOL WINTER GARDENS.

This healthful and popular seaside place, on the Lancashire coast, much frequented by the Manchester people, has been visited by the Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress, and Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. They were there all last week, staying at the Imperial Hotel as guests of the Mayor of Blackpool, Dr. Cocker, with many other Mayors and municipal dignitaries. On the Thursday, with much pomp and festivity, the Lord Mayor opened the new Winter Gardens, adjoining the Aquarium and the Promenade Pier, of which we have given some Illustrations. Some account of the Promenade Pier and the Aquarium was furnished upon the occasion of their being opened.

The Blackpool Winter Gardens are a short distance from the beach, and are easily accessible from all parts of the town. A dome, of fine proportions, marks the principal entrance, where a gold-and-bronze fountain has been erected. The large Floral Hall has been rearranged, and contains some fine specimens of costly flowering plants. Among the statuary in the flower-beds is a statue of Richard II., and the specimens of sculpture include works by Gibson, Canova, M'Dowell, and others. There are busts of her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal family, with those of other eminent persons. The Grand Pavilion is larger than the Free-Trade Hall of Manchester, being 155 ft. long, 75 ft. wide, and 60 ft. high. The stage is at the north end, and is 29 ft. from the footlights to the back, 47 ft. wide, and 57 ft. high. A theatrical license has been promised, and during the season operettas will be produced, under the direction of Mr. Stevenson, manager of the gardens. The pavilion is well seated, and is brilliantly lighted with three massive chandeliers, each containing 150 lights. A spacious gallery surrounds the building, and affords accommodation for a large number of spectators. Mr. Dugarn, the artist connected with the gardens, has painted a number of shields, which hang above the gallery, representing the armorial bearings of the nobility of England. There are many other attractions, which need not be described at length. The cost of the gardens and works is considerably over £10,000. The architect is Mr. T. Mitchell, of Manchester.

Great preparations were made by the residents of Blackpool in connection with the ceremony and the accompanying festivities. Almost all the shops and houses in the principal streets, as well as the public buildings, the piers, and places of amusement, were profusely decorated. The weather, although not brilliant, was favourable. Shortly after ten o'clock the whole length of the Promenade was thronged on both sides; the windows of every house along the line of route were crowded with spectators, and many people surveyed the procession from the roofs. Soon after the time announced the procession was in motion, and throughout its long course there was no delay. The procession was led by a few mounted policemen and a pilot carriage, which was followed by the local volunteer corps, headed by their band; the life-boat with its crew, with oars and masts decked with flags; and the fire brigade, followed by a number of carriages containing notabilities. The Mayor and Mayoress of Blackpool rode in front of the sword and mace bearers, and then, in the state carriage brought from London for the occasion, came the Sheriff of London, the Sheriff of Middlesex, and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, who were heartily and frequently cheered along the route. Immediately following the chief guests were the Mayors and Town Clerks of many towns, all wearing their official robes. The line of carriages was at least a mile long, and the route extended the whole length of the drive from the north to the south shore.

The ceremony of opening the Winter Gardens occupied only a few minutes. The Mayor of Blackpool and his visitors, together with a large number of invited guests, assembled in the Pavilion, and the Lord Mayor was formally introduced to the company. His Lordship, who was greeted with hearty cheers, expressed his pleasure at being permitted to visit Blackpool on so auspicious an occasion, and declared the Winter Gardens open. Cheers were then given for the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, and the ceremony ended.

In the evening a dinner was given in the Pavilion, followed by a concert under the direction of Mr. Alfred Cellier. At dusk there were a pyrotechnic display on the two piers and a mimic sea fight between two steamers anchored in front of the shore. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress watched the display from the Aquarium, on the beach. At night there was a grotesque torchlight procession. Everything passed off in a satisfactory manner. One page of our Illustrations represents, in a medley of sketches, the most striking groups and figures in the masquerade procession at night; the Blackpool life-boat converted into a triumphal car for Neptune; Britannia waving the British Union Jack; a Ghost and a Fire King, for whom we cannot be answerable; and the hostile armies of the Czar and the Sultan; with our Prime Minister, portrayed in a transparency, high over all, and with the Mayor of Blackpool and the Lord Mayor of London, supporting him to the right and left. We also give a view of the buildings of the Aquarium and Winter Gardens Pavilion.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The specialty here last week was the revival of Rossini's "Semiramide," which had not been heard at this theatre since 1875. The performance now referred to included the specialty of Madame Adelina Patti's first appearance in England in the title-character. The great prima donna sang the music with superb quality of voice and transcendent powers of execution. In the bravura air, "Bel raggio," the singer produced a great sensation by her brilliant and fluent vocalisation and the grace and charm of her style. The elaborate embroideries and ornamentations were rendered with an ease and certainty that formed a rare display of vocal art. In the duet with Arsace, "Serbami ognor," and in the more important one with the same character, "Ebene a te ferisci," the same admirable merits were apparent, several declamatory passages in the more serious situations having been rendered by Madame Patti with much dramatic intensity. The part of Arsace was filled by Madame Scalchi, who was its representative in the performances of the opera here three years ago. During this interval the executive powers of the singer have become largely enhanced, and her success on Thursday week was very great. The charm of her voice and her executive facility were finely manifested in Arsace's arias "Ah! quel giorno," and "In si barbara," and in the duet with Assur, "Bella imago," and those with Arsace already specified. The beautiful andante, "Giorno d'orrore" (belonging to the duet, "Ebene a te ferisci"), produced such an effect that it had to be repeated. The music of Assur, as florid and elaborate as that of the two characters just named, was finely sung by M. Maurel, who created a special effect by his admirable declamation in the scena in the last act expressive of the mingled rage and fear of the guilty Assur. As in 1875, the characters of Idreno and Oroe were well filled respectively by Signori Pavani and Capponi. The overture, finely played, was encored, and repeated from the allegro. The scenery and costumes were, as before, on a splendid scale. "Semiramide" was repeated on Monday. M. Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet" was given on Tuesday, for the first and only time this season; with a repetition of Mdlle. Albani's charming performance as Ophelia. "Les Huguenots" was announced for Wednesday; "La Sonnambula" for Thursday (for the benefit of Madame Patti); a combined entertainment on Friday (for the benefit of Mdlle. Albani); and "Aïda" for this (Saturday) the closing night of the season.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The regular season of this establishment closed on Saturday with the sixth representation of Bizet's "Carmen," including a repetition of the fine performance of Mdlle. Minnie Hauk in the title-character, and the transference of the part of Don José to Signor Runcio, in lieu of Signor Campanini by whom it had been so admirably sustained before. Owing to the very sudden illness of that excellent artist Mdlle. Alwina Valleria, the representative of Michaela, Mdlle. Bauermeister doubled that part (with some omissions) with that of Mercedes, as previously played by her. On the previous Thursday "Le Nozze di Figaro" was given for the first time this season with a generally efficient cast, including Madame Hélène Crosmond as Susanna, Mdlle. Caroline Salla as the Countess, Signor Del Puente as the Count, Signor Galassi as Figaro, M. Thierry as Dr. Bartolo, and Signor Rinaldini as Basilio.

The season just closed began on April 20 with "La Sonnambula," the Amina having been that accomplished artist Mdlle. Marimon, who has again been a valuable acquisition. The subsequent proceedings have included performances of many classical and popular operas. An important feature in the proceedings has been the fulfilment of Mr. Mapleson's promise in the production of an Italian version of the late Georges Bizet's "Carmen," on the merits and success of which we commented three weeks ago. Another specialty was the revival of Balfe's opera "Il Talismano," which was brought out by Mr. Mapleson in 1874, when his performances were given in Drury-Lane Theatre. The work had not been heard in Her Majesty's Theatre until last Saturday week, when, as recently noticed, it was given with the overture composed for it by Balfe, the manuscript of which had remained long undiscovered among his papers. Marchetti's "Ruy Blas"—produced during Mr. Mapleson's off season here in November last—has been given again, the revival of Verdi's "La Forza del Destino" (with changes in the music and the libretto) not having been found practicable.

Madame Etelka Gerster has improved on the great impression made by her last year by various performances of enhanced power. The return of Madame Trebelli has materially strengthened the cast of many operas. More or less successful first appearances have been made by Mdlles. Mathilde Wilde and Tremelli, Madame Pappenheim, Miss Cummings, Signor Rota, M. Thierry, and Signori Roveri and Dondi. Among other artists, in addition to those named above, who have co-operated in the performances are—Mdlles. Parodi and Robiati, Madame Lablache, Signori Fancelli, Marini, Bettini, Talbo, Thomas, and Grazzi, Herr Behrens, and Signori Foli, Rota, and Franceschi.

The ballet department has been well supported by Madame Katti Lanner, Mdlles. Marie Müller and Carolina and Adelaide Monti, and Mdlles. Cavalazzi and Bartoletti—the last two new appearances.

As during many past seasons of Mr. Mapleson's management, the office of musical director and conductor has been excellently fulfilled by Sir M. Costa, his place in a few occasional absences having been worthily supplied by M. Sainton, the well-known leading violinist. The scenic and stage arrangements have been generally good, and the band and chorus on the same scale of efficiency as before.

On Monday a series of farewell performances, at reduced prices, began with Mozart's "Il Flauto Magico," in which the brilliant bravura singing of Madame Gerster, as the Queen of Night, was a special feature—the cast otherwise having been the same as early in the season. On Tuesday "Robert le Diable" was repeated; for Wednesday "Il Trovatore" was announced, with Madame Pappenheim as Leonora, for the first time. "Carmen" was to be repeated on Thursday, "Il Talismano" on Friday, and "Fidelio" this (Saturday) evening—the extra performances coming to a close with the end of next week.

Mr. Mapleson's benefit takes place to-day (Saturday) at the Crystal Palace, the programme including an attractive concert in the afternoon, conducted by Sir M. Costa; and a performance of "Don Giovanni" in the evening, directed by Signor Li Calsi. The principal singers of Her Majesty's Theatre are announced to appear.

The Misses Jadwiga and Wanda Bulewski gave a concert at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday afternoon, under the patronage of Prince Christian and other distinguished personages. The brilliant violin-playing of Mdlle. Jadwiga, and the clever pianoforte performances of Mdlle. Wanda were prominent features in a varied programme.

The musical scholarship in the ladies' division of the Crystal Palace School of Art, Science, and Literature was awarded last Saturday to Miss H. Blagden, of Sydenham.

THEATRES.

A benefit was given at the Queen's last Saturday on behalf of Mrs. Beaumont, lately lady-housekeeper of Drury-Lane and the Adelphi, and now a sufferer from a severe accident. The piece selected for the occasion was the comedy, by Mr. A. W. Dubourg, of "New Men and Old Acres." The characters were supported by amateurs, and, it must be conceded by the most fastidious, were very ably represented. Nearly the whole of the pit was converted into stalls, which were fully and fashionably occupied. The mounting and accessories by which the performance was assisted were perfectly satisfactory.

The only novelty of the week is the benefit given to Mr. S. Emery yesterday and to-day, afternoon and evening, in the shape of Farewell Performances, prior to his departure for Australia, at the Globe. The pieces represented are Mr. Tom Taylor's play of "Plot and Passion," with Mr. Emery in the part of Fouché, and the adaptation from "Dombey and Son" called "Heart's Delight," in which Miss Helen Barry supports her original character of Edith Dombey, and Mr. Emery himself that of Captain Cuttle.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, with the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, returned to the Mansion House on Monday after their visit to Blackpool.—Lord Beaconsfield has accepted an invitation to the Ministerial banquet at the Mansion House on Saturday, Aug. 3.

In order to improve the connection between the Victoria station of the Metropolitan District Railway and the London Chatham, and Dover Railway station opposite, a subway has been completed, by which passengers can pass from one to the other, escaping the inconvenience of the ordinary traffic.

PARIS AT THE CAFÉ.—NO. III.

Yet, in passing from the historic but deserted Procope to the new and crowded Soufflet, let us turn out of our path for a momentary glance at two cafés whose reputation, past and present, is much like that of the Procope upon a smaller scale. Thoroughly literary are both the Tabourey and the Voltaire. At the former—a solid, old-fashioned, rather handsome place, just opposite the little gate which leads to the galleries of the Luxembourg—there are all the reviews, especially those of the Old Catholic party, which would run some danger of irreverent treatment at many other cafés of the rive gauche; but there are, unfortunately, hardly so many readers as journals. Maxime Rude has christened this the Revue des Deux Mondes of cafés; and the name is rather happy—it is so steady, so respectable, and, alas! so dull. At the Voltaire, again, there are not so many customers as memories. It is in some sort the Procope of Bohemia; indeed, Mürger wrote some of his stories of that wild student-country here, in a room on the ground floor. It was one of the regular places of meeting for him and some of his comrades in the later and less poverty-stricken days of his life; and many years afterwards some of his successors in literature followed him hither—notably Alphonse Daudet, whose Tack and The Nabob have made him known even on this side of the Channel. But he and Carolus Duran, the artist, and all their company have passed away, and the Voltaire knows them no longer. For merriment and life, as I have said, we must go to the Boulevard St. Michel.

Unless—we stop on the way for a moment, at what was the Café Racine: de Massénot le vieil estaminet. Great names of the lighter literature of France were once familiar here; but now all is changed, even to the sign—"Racine" has given place to a title light as smoke, which there is no need now to name. Without, the café is not remarkable—it is small, white, and somehow not very respectable in appearance; within, the light is always dim, even in the afternoon, when there are only a few rather sleepy men taking their "bocks" or their "grogs"—the voluptuous but hardly beautiful attendant maidens glide about, in the costume of (stage) Swiss peasantesses, short blue gowns and square-cut bodices, plentifully belaced and be-ribboned—and sometimes. late at night, the hubbub is tremendous, when one or more of the long tables is surrounded by a party of shouting, drinking lads and merry grues. The better class of students rarely come here; the place has, indeed, become a perfect type of those rather mysterious, apparently quiet, disreputable little cabarets which you may often come across within a few paces of a broad noisy street—this one is not fifty yards from the Boulevard.

And now we have at length reached the Boulevard itself—though not the right side of it; for, by one of those accidents that seem so odd, there is, along all the west side of the Boulevard St. Michel, but one really large and important café—simply, I believe, because there is on this side, near the Luxembourg, a long blank wall, which is naturally an unattractive object to promenaders; and they, to avoid it, cross, and remain on the east thereafter. Here are many and interesting cafés, and the chief of them is the Soufflet, whose size and rank are shown by the fact that, though it is by no means an especially English house, five or six London newspapers are taken there. The very brightest and most intelligent of the Quartier Latin youth assemble at the Soufflet—outside, on the ground floor, and in the billiard-rooms up stairs; throughout the evening there rises from its little round tables a din of controversy, laughter, raillery of the passers-by, puns, and politics. And, besides its element of Parisian student life, the Soufflet has some sort of political importance: till a year ago it was always crowded with Roumanians, for whom one part was tacitly set aside. The Roumanians in Paris were (until the war) incredibly numerous, considering the small extent of their country; and it was also the head-quarters of that party of which we have lately heard so much at Constantinople—the "Young Turkey" faction. Here revolutions were plotted, and very likely counter-plotted; here intrigues had birth—and the intriguers, often enough, were bought and sold.

Still, the atmosphere of the place, as a whole, was fresh and healthy—young, living, and never dull. We have seen, at the Procope and the Tabourey, how dull Paris can be; at the quondam Racine, how "fast" and vulgar; let us now turn to a place which, though old, filled with memories, and thoroughly sérieux, is yet by no means wanting in life, if it have not all the exuberance of youth.

This is the historic Café de la Régence, a name sacred to chessplayers over all the world. The present building is not, it is true, absolutely on the site of the haunt of Diderot and of Philidor, but it is close by, and is in every way its legitimate successor. Its position is a very fine one—it is in the Rue St. Honoré, at the corner of the Rue de l'Echelle, and is thus opposite the Théâtre Français, and just at the bottom of the handsome new boulevard leading to the Grand Opera: in the very heart of Paris, within a stone's throw of the Louvre, the Palais Royal, and the house of Molière! The description at the beginning of Diderot's Neveu de Rameau still applies to it: c'est là qu'on voit les coups les plus surprenans et qu'on entend les plus mauvais propos—all chessplayers are certainly not the greatest wits. But here the most brilliant chessplayers have always been seen—in Diderot's time, when it was a narrow, dirty room, at the corner of the old Place du Palais Royal, and was frequented (as he tells us) by Philidor, Légal, Mayot; in our own days, when the handsome salon, some yards from the former site, has witnessed, evening after evening, the coups of Rosenthal and his rivals. Here too great men who were, at all events, devoted amateurs of chess, have spent much time and thought: one of the tables still bears the name of Bonaparte, who "pushed the wood"—to use the old French term—with fiery energy in his younger days; and De Musset, who seems to have stamped his impress on half the cafés of Paris, was really famous among the players of his time—he has left a problem which is still well known, that of "The Two Knights."

Chess begins at six o'clock; before that the café is not very much used—though there are generally some English visitors, who sit outside, looking at the busy crowds of the Rue St. Honoré; for this spot is the very centre of the Englishman's Paris—as, indeed, it is not so far from being exactly in the middle of the town; I suppose the midmost point of all Paris must be somewhere in the Quai de l'Horloge, on the island. Much later than the hour I have mentioned there come to the Régence certain habitués whom almost everybody notices: their faces are familiar, even if one does not at the moment recall their names. These are some of the actors from the neighbouring Théâtre Français—it may be remembered that the well-known comedian Provost was one of De Musset's favourite opponents at chess. Maubant, the stately and old-fashioned tragedian, is a great player—I do not say a particularly good one; and so is Joliet, one of the minor members of the Français troupe. The ardent young lover, Mounet Sully (who has succeeded Delaunay in "Hernani" and kindred parts) is often at the Régence, with his keen Greek face and his black beard, which looks so strange on an actor; and Dupont Vernon, a comedian who has as yet hardly had a chance (except in "Tartuffe"), stands looking over the heads of most of his comrades. Thiron, a stout and eminently respectable actor, with an odd, prominent chin, and Garraud, who is always considered "safe" in the parts technically known as "second old men," are also pretty constant visitors. Finally, with the mention of M. Henri de Bornier, whose "Fille de Roland," produced two or three years ago, was a pleasant and scholarly poem, if not in any sense of the word a great tragedy—let us leave the café of chess for the cafés of society.

ART IN PARIS.

THE UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.—AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

(From our Correspondent.)

The duality of the Austro-Hungarian Empire is expressed in art as well as in politics; and it is curious to observe how nearly the artists of one country balance those of the other. The Austrians, however, have in one respect gained a march on their brethren of Hungary, inasmuch as the former have furnished visitors with a carefully prepared "special catalogue," whereas the latter appear to be contented with such inadequate notice as is taken of them in the "Official Catalogue," a publication necessarily abounding in all manner of blunders.

So far as extent of canvas, academic suavity of composition and brilliancy of colour go, the German Hans Makart, the most distinguished of all the pupils of Pilotty, whose headless bodies of Counts Egmont and Horn many of our readers will remember at the second London International Exhibition, is assuredly among the Austrians facile princeps. His grand picture—some thirty feet by eighteen—representing "The Entry of Charles the Fifth into Antwerp" is just becoming popular by means of photographs, and it is certainly the most riant canvas he has yet covered. The youthful Charles, preceded by crossbowmen and cuirassed warriors, who march to the right of the spectator, approaches on a magnificent war-horse, while five semi-nude maidens of surpassing grace and beauty strew the way with flowers, and otherwise make his entry joyous. Ladies and children fill up the left of the picture and crowd the balconies throughout; while beyond the waving banners and the mediæval sky-line of the city gleams a bright sky almost Southern in its blueness. This Southern character pervades not only the air and atmosphere, but enters largely into the forms and faces of the diaphonously-robed women; and, so far as such a remark is applicable to a composition whose lines sweep on so harmoniously and whose masses are so grandly balanced, jars somewhat on our preconceived notions of the homeliness of Antwerp and her citizens. It is said, indeed, that Hans Makart had the most beautiful women of Vienna to sit to him for these radiant nymphs; and if so, this would fully account for the types being so divergent from that known to belong to Antwerp beauties. It is impossible to stroll into the great square of that city without being struck with the similarity between the women one sees to-day and those Rubens painted two hundred and fifty years ago. The children and the nurses and the ladies are generous in their proportions, almost to redundancy, and look as if they had just stepped out of the canvases of the great master. Makart, on the other hand, eschews such amplitude of development, and affects rather a litheness which is almost classic in its grace. He is a perfect master of surface and texture of every kind, from silk to steel; and in this respect is only to be rivalled by a Hungarian artist, to whom we shall come presently. When weight of pigment is required he hesitates not to apply it; and when lightness and thinness of brushwork serve his purpose he can be as slight and subtle in his touch as anyone. Makart, in short, is a decorative artist of the highest order, looking at life with the joyousness of a Venetian rather than with the thoughtfulness of a Florentine. The same suavity attends his pencil when he applies it to female portraiture, as may be seen in the likenesses of two charming ladies hanging in the same room.

Hans Makart is a German and a professor of his art at Vienna; his only rival in the Austrian section, so far as colour and composition are concerned, is Jan Matejko, a Pole, and professor at Cracow. In sobriety and general historic vraisemblance, his "Union concluded at Lublin in 1569 between Lithuania and Poland is, perhaps, superior to the "Entry of Charles V. into Antwerp." Matejko's dramatic instinct is as active as that of Makart, only he does not think it necessary that it should express itself with so much sensuous beauty. We are, therefore, predisposed to regard him as a more trustworthy historian.

The large historic work which we have named introduces the spectator to a stately apartment with raised benches on each side crowded with ladies and citizens of rank. The central personage in the picture, attired in a black velvet furred robe, holds aloft an ivory crucifix, and an aged citizen, with a roll of parchment, kneels and swears on an illuminated gospel, while a venerable cardinal on the left lifts up his hands in blessing. The scene is remarkably impressive, and it carries belief in its actuality from the quiet reserve of force with which the artist sets it forth.

Portraiture is very ably represented by Heinrich de Angeli, whose Duke of Argyll hangs in this year's Grosvenor Gallery, and who had in last year's Royal Academy a remarkably honest and carefully-modelled likeness of the Crown Princess of Prussia, our own Princess Royal. But this De Angeli, or Von Angeli as he is sometimes called, although educated in Vienna, was born in Hungary, and might be fairly enough claimed by that country. Among the dozen portraits by which he is represented, those which will most interest English visitors are Lord Sydney, the Deans of Westminster and Windsor, and, above all, Lord Beaconsfield. The portrait in which he is larger and freer in handling is probably that of Madame Schwabe, of Berlin—a comely dark lady in black lace, whom we see full-faced against a stamped leather background.

Wilhelm Koller, of Brussels, figures in the Austrian Court because he was born in Vienna. Although not a pupil of Leys, there are not lacking symptoms of the Baron's influence, only Koller is smoother and works to a higher finish than Leys thought necessary. His principal work here represents the Emperor Charles V. at the house of Anthony Fugger, the famous weaver and merchant of Augsburg, and whose family became ennobled, and intermarried with some of the most princely houses in Europe. Gabriel Max, of Munich, with whose portrait of our Saviour we are all familiar, was, like Makart, a pupil of Pilotty. His only picture here is a very touching one of a martyr maiden surrounded by lions and tigers in a Roman arena, and looking up to heaven as she takes her last adieu of earth. A very spirited composition is that of Norbert Schrödl's, representing the violent carrying off or abduction of a man, whom we see being placed on a white horse held by a negro, while the prisoner's women-folk, old and young, scream and protest, and the baby in the basket lies tumbled on the hillside where the fugitives have been overtaken. An old grey-haired Montenegrin warrior being carried wounded on a litter down a mountain pass, while maidens and mothers kneel and pray for him as he is borne tenderly along, is also a striking composition, and comes from the pencil of Jaroslav Cermak, born at Prague, but a pupil of Gallait's, of Brussels. Karl Karger sends a "Railway Station," which reminds one of what our own Mr. Frith has achieved in this way. The arrangement here is a little different. For example, the engine is in the left foreground and the crowd all to the right. There is quite as much characterisation here as in Mr. Frith's picture, and decidedly more daylight. Its size is about 5 ft. by 3 ft.

Neither still-life nor animal painting is neglected in Austria. The former is admirably represented by the Fish Shop of Alois Schönn, one of the professors at Vienna; and the other by Chevalier Otto de Thoren, who almost equals Troyon in the force and truth with which he represents animal life. His milkmaid entering the byre in which half a dozen cows are stalled all in a row, is as forcible as it is true to rural nature. Cocks and hens strut about the place, and everything has the appearance of actual life. His blue-bloused peasant quieting his team of horses at the approach of a thunderstorm is another good example. Chevalier Julius de Blaas is another ardent student of animal life, as is shown by his fox scampering past a herd of cattle followed by the hounds in full cry. Carl Probst, Emil Schindler, Eduard Kurzbauer, and Robert Russ are all artists honourably associated with Viennese art, and which lack of space compels us only to name. The shield on which is represented the Combat of the Lapithæ and Centaurs is one of the finest pieces of repoussé-work we remember to have seen. The artist is Josef Tautenhayn.

Including engravings, photographs, water colours, die-sinking, and sculpture—among the last being a colossal statue of Beethoven, by Caspar Zumbusch, of the highest merit—the works in the Austrian art-section number 330, and fill four saloons, whereas those of Hungary fill only one. Nevertheless, Hungarian art is as pronounced and individual as that of her Austrian sister, and whatever special excellence is shown by the one can fairly be matched by the other. For example, Benezür Gyula's Baptism of a black-haired, brawny-shouldered warrior, in rich ruby mantle, at a white marble font, by a venerable Bishop, whose blue robe stands stiff with gold embroidery, is perhaps richer in colour and more absolute in the representation of texture than anything in the whole exposition, whether by Makart or anyone else. We could scarcely imagine the witchery of brushwork and colour carried further. Then, facing the entrance, is the work of another great master who is more individual still. We allude to M. Munkácsy and his noble picture of Milton dictating "Paradise Lost" to his daughters. The black, low-toned, yet strangely forcible manner of the artist is peculiarly fitted to such a subject; and we think he has realised in a triumphant manner what he set himself to do. The poet sits on the left, attired in black, with white cuffs and collar, his right hand sensitively touching his breast button, his left on the chair, and his head inclined thoughtfully. One girl sews at his side, another stands behind the table and regards her father tenderly, while the immediate amanuensis of the hour leans reverently forward to catch his words. There is a large dark cabinet behind the girl who is standing, which contrasts forcibly with the light falling on the poet through the casement to his right. This is perhaps the most important picture M. Munkácsy has yet painted as regards strength of representation and unity of effect. The same artist has set forth another group with equal intensity, though the dramatis personæ are of quite a different type. We see a number of Hungarian peasant conscripts, each with a rosette of the national colours on his breast—red, white, and green—seated round a table drinking hilariously, or sitting pensively, just as the mood seizes them. In the foreground one lad sits with his sweetheart, hand in hand, looking dejected enough; but the great proportion of the group is mirthful even to boisterousness. Adolf Pichter sends a grand monochromatic design of the Patriarch Jacob on his deathbed, which is well worth the consideration of art-lovers. It is hung too high, and may escape the visitor unless looked for. F. Paczka represents humorous genre. One picture shows an old man bracing up his drum, another an old gentleman examining through his specs the broken string of his violin. Both are roughly yet learnedly painted.

L. Ebner is another artist who delights in the delineation of character. His two ragamuffins of the true Hungarian type is excellent. G. Meszöly sends a picture with a lot of canoe-shaped boats, whose peasant-looking owners are variously employed under the trees which border a sedgy lake. The manner of painting is dry but effective. Keletig uses a juicier pencil, and shows a sleeping swineherd under a mighty oak in the overgrown garden of a deserted palace. Pigs prowl about ground which one can see by its classic remains of figures and fountains was once sacred to Love and the Graces, and render by their swinish familiarity the scene before the spectator still more sad and desolate.

The Hungarian section contains examples also of engraving and sculpture, and of designs and models in architecture; but all on a more limited scale than that of Austria. Being without a catalogue, moreover, or anyone to instruct the stranger, the section runs great risk of being slighted. So far, however, as Hungary has cared to exhibit her art-power, she has shown herself as capable of achievement as any of her sister States.

Charles Marvin, described as a writer in the Foreign Office, was on Tuesday further examined at the Bow-street Police Court on the charge of having committed a breach of trust in appropriating and stealing a secret document purporting to be a communication between the Governments of Great Britain and Russia. Mr. Vaughan decided that that there was no evidence of any larceny having been committed, and the defendant was discharged.

A successful attempt has at last been made to raise the Eurydice, which capsized and sank four months ago off Dunnose, Isle of Wight. After numerous operations, she was on Tuesday shifted out of a hole about eleven feet and a half deep, and moved eastward more than 150 ft. The moving of the vessel is to be continued daily.

The annual flower show of the children in the schools o the five in-wards of St. George's, Hanover-square, was held yesterday week in the gardens of Grosvenor House. The flowers sent by 750 children were set out in a tent, and prizes varying in amount from 1s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. were given to 112 of the little horticulturists. In the absence from town of the Duchess of Westminster, the prizes were presented by the Marchioness of Ormonde. A lively interest was shown in the success of the fête by the visitors, among whom were the Hon. Victoria Grosvenor (the treasurer of the society), Lady Foley, the Countess de Jarnac, Lady Emily Cavendish, Lord Ebury, Lord Foley, Lord Edward Cavendish, the clergy of the district, and the honorary secretaries, the Hon. Fitz-Alan Foley and Mr. Percy K. Knox. After the distribution short addresses, suitable to the occasion, were given by the Duke of Westminster, the American Bishop of Albany, the Rev. E. Capel Cure, Rector of St. George's, Hanover-square, and Lord Edward Cavendish. The band of the Queen's Westminster Rifles played during the afternoon.

THE TREATY OF BERLIN.

The Berlin Congress held its twentieth and final sitting on Saturday last, when the new Treaty was signed by all the Plenipotentiaries.

The official copy of the Berlin Treaty was presented on Tuesday night to both Houses of Parliament. It is prefaced by a long despatch from Lord Salisbury, who remarks that the general effect of the alterations which have been made in the Treaty of San Stefano has been to restore, with due security for good government, a very large territory to the Sultan, while they tend powerfully to secure from external assault the stability and independence of his empire. He denies that the views set out in his despatch of April 1 have been abandoned in the subsequent action of her Majesty's Government, and to obviate the continuance of this misconception the noble Marquis enters into considerable detail respecting the decisions of the Congress. All the objections he then made have been removed, he says, by the Treaty of Berlin, and the Congress has applied an adequate remedy to all the dangers which were threatened. He concludes by observing that it is probably the last opportunity for Turkey, and whether use will be made of it depends upon the sincerity with which Turkish statesmen will address themselves to the duties of good government and the task of reform.

The Treaty consists of sixty-four clauses. We give the articles relating to the changes made in Asiatic Turkey, as they more particularly affect British interests:—

Article 56. The Sublime Porte cedes to the Russian Empire in Asia the territories of Ardahan, Kars, and Batoum, together with the latter port, as well as all the territories comprised between the ancient Russo-Turkish frontier and the following line:—The new frontier commencing on the Black Sea, in conformity with the line determined by the Treaty of San Stefano as far as a point to the north-west of Khorda, and to the south of Artwin, continues in a straight line as far as the River Tchoruk, crosses this river and passes to the east of Aschmichen, going in a straight line to the south to join the Russian frontier indicated in the Treaty of San Stefano, at a point to the south of Nariman, leaving the town of Olti to Russia. From the point indicated near Nariman the frontier turns to the east, passes by Tebrenek, which remains to Russia, and continues as far as the Pennek Tchai. It follows the river as far as Bardousi, then turns towards the south, leaving Bardous and Jönikioy to Russia. From a point to the west of the village of Karaougan the frontier is directed on Medjingert, continues in a straight line towards the summit of the mountain Kasasdagh, and follows the line of the watershed between the affluents of the Araxes on the north and those of the Mourad Su on the south, as far as the ancient frontier of Russia.

Article 59. His Majesty the Emperor of Russia declares that it is his intention to erect Batoum into a free port, essentially commercial.

Article 60. The valley of Alaschkerd and the town of Bayazid, ceded to Russia by Article 19 of the Treaty of San Stefano, are restored to Turkey. The Sublime Porte cedes to Persia the town and territory of Khotour, such as it has been determined by the mixed Anglo-Russian Commission for the delimitation of the frontiers of Turkey and of Persia.

Article 61. The Sublime Porte undertakes to carry out, without further delay, the ameliorations and reforms demanded by local requirements in the provinces inhabited by the Armenians, and to guarantee their security against the Circassians and Kurds. It will periodically make known the steps taken to this effect to the Powers, who will superintend their application.

Article 62. The Sublime Porte having expressed the wish to maintain the principle of religious liberty, and give it the widest scope, the contracting parties take note of this spontaneous declaration. In no part of the Ottoman Empire shall difference of religion be alleged against an individual as a ground for exclusion or incapacity as regards the discharge of civil and political rights, admission to the public service, functions, and honours, or the exercise of the different professions and industries. All persons shall be admitted, without distinction of religion, to give evidence before the tribunals. Liberty and the outward exercise of all forms of worship are assured to all, and no hindrance shall be offered either to the hierarchical organisations of the various communions or to their relations with their spiritual chiefs. Ecclesiastics, pilgrims, and monks of all nationalities travelling in Turkey in Europe, or in Turkey in Asia, shall enjoy the same rights, advantages, and privileges. The right of official protection by the diplomatic and consular agents of the Powers in Turkey is recognised, both as regards the above-mentioned persons and their religious, charitable, and other establishments in the Holy Places and elsewhere. The rights possessed by France are expressly reserved; and it is well understood that no alterations shall be made in the status quo in the Holy Places. The monks of Mount Athos, of whatever country they may be natives, shall be maintained in their former possessions and advantages, and shall enjoy, without any exception, complete equality of rights and prerogatives.

Article 63. The Treaty of Paris of March 30, 1856, as well as the Treaty of London of March 13, 1871, are maintained in all such of their provisions as are not abrogated or modified by the preceding stipulations.

Article 64. The present Treaty shall be ratified and the ratifications exchanged at Berlin within three weeks, or earlier if possible. In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed it and affixed to it the seal of their arms.

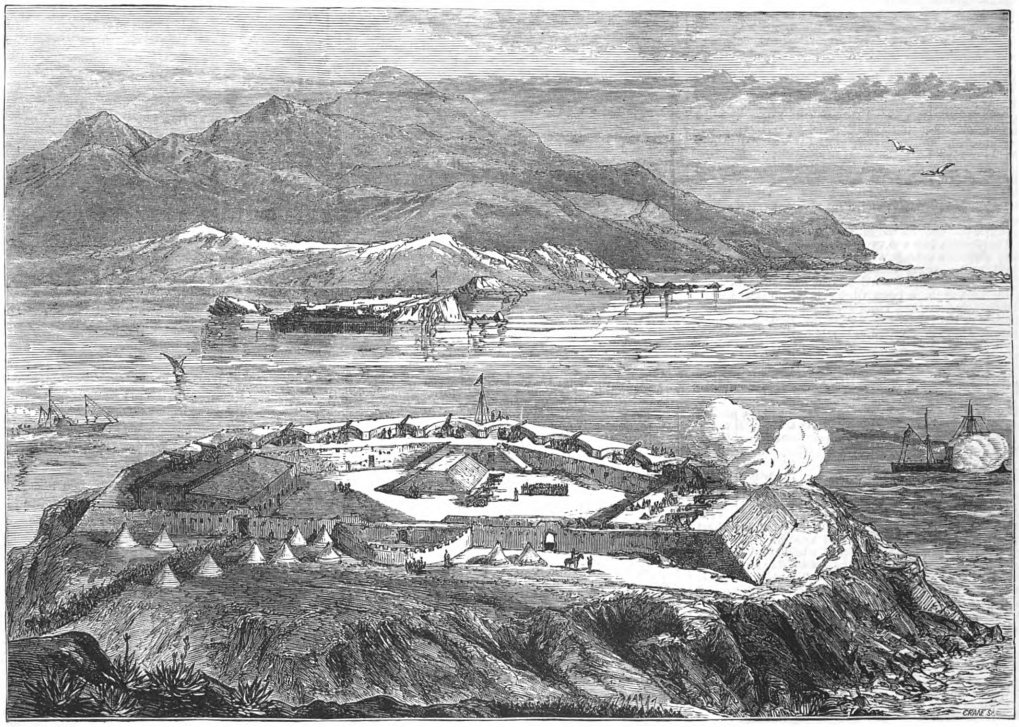
RETURN OF THE ENGLISH PLENIPOTENTIARIES.

The Earl of Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury were received most enthusiastically on their return to England from Berlin on Tuesday.

At Dover the occasion was generally regarded as a holiday, and the ships and buildings were decked with flags. The vessel by which the Plenipotentiaries travelled arrived at the Dover Pier at about half-past two, and the Prime Minister, before landing, was presented with an address of congratulation by the Mayor and Corporation. In acknowledging it the noble Earl said that the country was as much indebted to Lord Salisbury as to himself for any satisfactory results which had been attained at the Congress. Other addresses were presented by local Constitutional societies. The route from the pier to the railway station was strewn with flowers by a number of little girls.

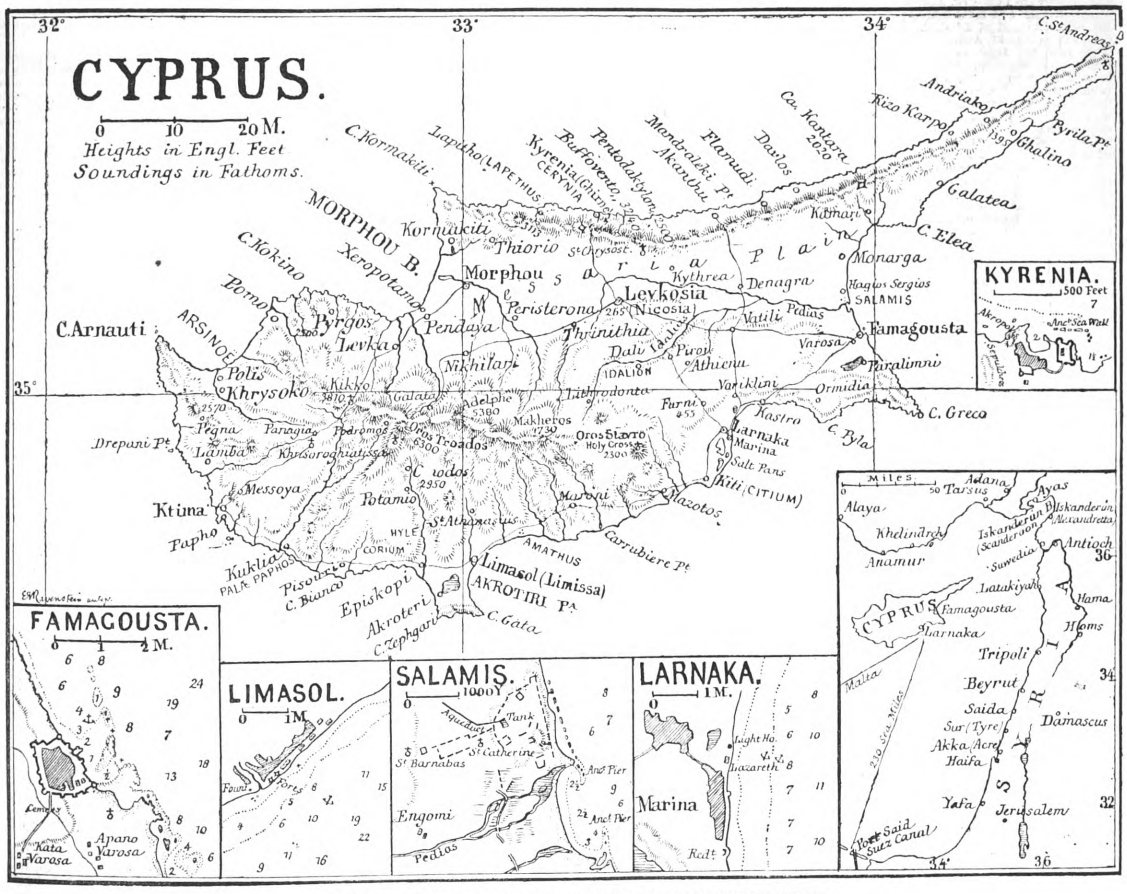
At Charing-cross station, which was reached shortly before five o'clock, their Lordships were enthusiastically received by a distinguished company, including leading members of both Houses of Parliament. The enthusiasm was maintained by the immense body of spectators who lined the route to Downing-street, and on arriving there both Lord Beaconsfield and the Earl of Salisbury had to briefly address the mass of people assembled before they would disperse. The former said a peace had been secured with honour, and it was a peace which he hoped would satisfy their Sovereign and gratify the country. Lord Salisbury said he gathered from that great assemblage that the people would always support a Government which supported the honour of England. Both speeches were greeted with tremendous cheering.

Captain Morley has been selected as chairman of the Middlesex magistrates, in succession to Lord Salisbury.



The name of Mr. William Hardy, Deputy-Keeper of the Records, has been added to the Commission appointed to make inquiry as to historical documents of public interest.

At the annual meeting of the Union Bank of Australia on Monday, the chairman said there was every prospect of a bountiful harvest in the colony. The price of wool in Australia had improved, and, as that was the staple article, they had every reason to hope that the prosperity of the colony was assured.



A young girl employed at service at a house in Great Coram-street was on Monday charged at the Bow-street Police Court with setting fire to the contents of her bed-room in three places. The fire was discovered by a policeman, who aroused the inmates of the house, and the accused was found covered with a quilt in a room next to that in which part of her clothes were burning. Her mistress said that the girl seemed half asleep, and could give no explanation of what had happened; she had no reason to think the accused had any ill-feeling towards her, or intended to do wrong. The case was remanded.

THE INSURRECTION IN CRETE.

We have received, from an officer of one of her Majesty's ships on the coast of Crete, some sketches of the fighting that has taken place between the Turkish forces and the insurgents, who are assisted by volunteers from Greece. The insurgents occupying the valley of Apocorona had made repeated attacks on the Turkish positions from Fort Paleocastro to Kalyvia. Salih Pasha, the Turkish Commander-in-Chief, therefore determined to drive them into the mountains. At four o'clock in the morning on the 23rd ult. Colonel Briscoe, with fifteen hundred Turkish soldiers and two hundred Bashi-Bazouks (Mohammedan volunteers), advanced, and, after ten hours' fighting, succeeded in driving back the insurgents about three miles, and occupying two villages. The insurgents numbered about three thousand. On the next morning General Nedjib Pasha, with eighteen hundred soldiers and five hundred Bashi-Bazouks, renewed hostilities; and, after a whole day's fighting, effectually cleared the valley of insurgents, and stormed and occupied their positions on the hills on the north side of the plain. The Turkish loss was twenty-two killed and fifty-three wounded; while the insurgent loss was much greater, about sixty dead bodies being found. During the second day's fighting the insurgents numbered about four thousand. The inhabitants of Vamos, a large village in the plain, having surrendered their arms, and requested peace of Nedjib Pasha, that village was left unmolested during the Turkish advance. The insurgents have now retired to the mountains.

THE ISLE OF CYPRUS.

The delivery of the Isle of Cyprus to the administration of the Queen of Great Britain took place on Saturday last. Admiral Lord John Hay, who had brought his squadron to the port of Larnaca, then arrived at Nicosia or Levkosia, the capital of the island, and proceeded with his staff to the Governor's residence. There, in presence of Samih Pasha and the officials and notables of the island, he stated the circumstances under which the government of Cyprus has been given into the hands of the Queen of Great Britain. Afterwards the British flag was hoisted, the Admiral pronouncing the words, "I take possession of this island in the name of Queen Victoria." It is stated that, upon hearing this well-known name, the assembled crowd shouted lustily, "Live the British Queen!" and that they remained gazing at the flag till it was hauled down at sunset. The ceremony of hoisting the British flag at Larnaca was performed on Monday. Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley is appointed her Majesty's High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief to administer the government.

Cyprus is a large island in the Mediterranean, lying near the coasts of Syria and Asia Minor. The main part of the island, in shape an irregular parallelogram, is about 110 miles long from east to west. The breadth of this part of the island varies from thirty to fifty miles, its most northern point being forty-five miles distant from Cape Anamur, in Cilicia. The rest of the island forms a horn-like projection, extending for about twenty miles in length with a breadth of from two to five miles, terminating in Cape St. Andreas (the ancient Dinaretum), off which lie two small islets called Kleides, or "the Keys of Cyprus." This part of the island, which is rugged, mountainous, and rocky, takes a north-eastern direction, and lies nearly in a line with Cape Khanzir, the most southern point of the Amanus Mountains on the coast of Syria. The distance from Cape St. Andreas to Cape Khanzir is about seventy-five miles; but the nearest part of the Syrian coast, in the neighbourhood of Latakieh, is only about sixty miles distant from Cape St. Andreas. The island is about 230 miles north from the Damietta mouth of the Nile. A range of mountains runs through the island in the direction of its length, keeping closer to the north than to the south coast. These mountains, called Olympus by the ancient Greeks, now Stavro-Vuno and Santa-Croce, are, according to some, more than 10,000 ft. above the sea. On Mount Santa-Croce, eighteen miles north of Larnaca, is a church said to have been founded by Helena, the mother of Constantine; another summit, five miles from Cerinia, or Ghirmeh, near the north coast, has a monastery and an old castle upon it, from which there is a splendid view. The northern slope of these mountains is bold and rugged; the southern side is still more so, presenting a deeply serrated outline with thickly wooded steeps, diversified by precipitous masses of limestone and deep picturesque valleys. The most extensive plain, called Messarea, is in the south-east part of the island, and is watered by the river Pedias, which is nearly dry in summer, like all the other rivers of the island. Another level tract, watered by the Tretus, lies to the south of Messarea, near the ancient city of Citium.

The soil of Cyprus is naturally fertile; formerly, under the Venetians, it maintained a population of nearly one million, but the number of inhabitants in 1850 was only 140,000, about 100,000 of whom are Greeks and 30,000 Turks, and the remainder Christians and Maronites. From neglect and defective administration the inhabitants are in poor circumstances. Many districts of the island being uninhabited are of course uncultivated wastes, or clothed with heath, thyme, and other aromatic plants. Cotton of the finest quality, excellent wine, and all kinds of fruit are produced; but agriculture is in a most backward state. The average annual yield of corn is about 112,000 quarters. Besides the productions just named, madder, opium, colocynth, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, hemp, and tobacco are grown. The carob-tree (Ceratonia Siliqua) abounds in some districts; its succulent pods are exported to Egypt and Syria, while the pulp, which is called St. John's Bread, and resembles manna, is used as an article of food. Other products are olive-oil, pitch, wool, cheese, raisins, and silk. The Venetians formed plantations of sugar-cane, but these have now been abandoned. On the mountains are forests of fine timber.

In ancient times Cyprus was famous for its valuable copper mines, as well as for gold, silver, and precious stones, including the diamond, emerald, jasper, opal, and agate. Copper, asbestos, talc, rock-crystal, and various other minerals are known to exist, but no mines are worked. Salt is made on the seashore to the extent of about 10,000 tons annually.

The climate is cold in winter, owing to the winds that blow from the mountains of Asia Minor and Syria. In the plains the heat of summer is excessive, but this is moderated by the sea breezes; rain is very rare in summer, and, as irrigation is neglected, there is of course then very little verdure. Some districts are unhealthy from want of drainage, and consequent malaria.

Cyprus appears to have been colonised by the Phœnicians at an early period; and the island, or a portion of it, seems to have been subject to them even down to the time of Solomon. Their chief town, Citium, is supposed to have been the "Chittim" mentioned in the Bible. Phœnician inscriptions have been found in the foundations of a fort, which defended a large basin or harbour, now nearly filled up. Some Greek colonies afterwards settled on the coasts. The island was divided into several petty kingdoms, which were sometimes at war with, and sometimes allied with, the neighbouring powers of Greece and Asia Minor. Amasis, King of Egypt, invaded Cyprus and took Citium, and it was probably he who introduced the Ethiopian or African settlers. The island became subject to the Persians, and afterwards submitted to Alexander the Great, upon whose death it fell, with Egypt, to the share of Ptolemy, the son of Lagus. It continued under the Ptolemies, sometimes united with Egypt and sometimes under a separate Prince of the same dynasty. The last of these Princes, brother to Ptolemy Auletes, King of Egypt, incurred the enmity of P. Clodius Pulcher, who, being taken prisoner by the Cilician pirates, sent to the King of Cyprus for money to pay his ransom. The King sent a sum which was too little. Clodius having recovered his liberty by other means, when he became tribune of the people obtained a decree making Cyprus a Roman province. Marcus Cato was sent to take possession, and the King, hearing of this, put himself to death. Cato seized upon the treasury, and sent a large booty to Rome. Cyprus thus became a Roman province.

On the division of the empire it fell to the lot of the Byzantine Emperors, and, after several vicissitudes, became a separate principality under a branch of the Comneni.

During the Crusades, King Richard I. of England, called Richard Cœur de Lion, took the island in 1191 and sold it to the Templars, whose oppression caused a revolt. Richard resumed the sovereignty, and gave it to Guy of Lusignan, the expelled King of Jerusalem, in 1192. The Lusignans retained it nearly 300 years, which was a flourishing period for Cyprus. John III. of Lusignan died in 1458, leaving the kingdom to Charlotte, his only legitimate child, who married her cousin, Louis, Count of Geneva, second son of the Duke of Savoy and of Anna of Cyprus. Queen Charlotte of Cyprus was solemnly crowned at Levkosia in 1460, but was soon after expelled by her natural brother James, assisted by the Mamelukes of Egypt. Queen Charlotte of Cyprus retired to Rome, where she died in 1487, bequeathing her claims to Charles Duke of Savoy, in consequence of which the Sovereigns of that dynasty assume to this day the title of Kings of Cyprus and Jerusalem. The natural brother James married Catharine Cornaro, the daughter of a Venetian merchant, who brought him 100,000 golden ducats. The Venetian Senate adopted Catharine Cornaro, on her marriage in 1471, as "Daughter of St. Mark." In 1473 James died, and Catharine was soon after delivered of a son, of whom the Republic of Venice assumed the guardianship, and Venetian troops were sent to garrison the towns of the island. The child died an infant, and in 1489 the Venetian Senate persuaded Catharine to abdicate in favour of the Republic. She retired to Asolo, near Treviso, where she lived the rest of her days in princely style and on a liberal pension. The Venetians virtually kept possession of Cyprus for one hundred years—namely, from about 1471 to 1571. Then Selim II. sent a powerful force to invade the island. The Turks took Levkosia by storm, and massacred some 20,000 people. They then laid siege to Famagosta (formerly the second city of the island), which was long and gallantly defended by the Proveditor-General Marcantonio Bragadino. At last, in August, 1571, the Venetians were obliged to capitulate, on condition of being sent safely home. The Pasha, Mustapha, signed the capitulation; but when Bragadino, with the other Venetian officers, repaired to his tent to deliver the keys, he had them all seized and put to death, except Bragadino, whom, after some days, he caused to be led naked to the square of Famagosta, where, in the Pasha's presence, the executioner began to flay him alive. He expired bravely in the midst of his torments. His skin was filled with straw, and hung up to the yardarm of the Admiral's vessel, in which Mustapha returned to Constantinople. Venice raised a monument to Bragadino in the Church of St. Giovanni e Paolo, and his relatives, after a time, ransomed his skin, which was placed in the monument. From then until now the Turks have remained in possession of Cyprus.

Most of the ancient Greek towns have long since disappeared. The present towns of Cyprus are the following:—Levkosia, sometimes called Nikosia, the capital of the island and the residence of the Turkish governor, which is near the site of the ancient Letra or Leucotra. Its population is not more than 16,000. The town stands in the centre of the island, in a plain surrounded by mountains. Levkosia was the residence of the kings of Cyprus of the Lusignan dynasty, and was then much larger than at present; but the Venetians destroyed part of it in order to strengthen the remainder. It is now three miles in circumference. The church of St. Sophia, a fine Gothic building, is converted into a mosque; and the monuments of the Lusignans in it are sadly mutilated. There are also a fine bazaar, a khan for travellers, several Greek churches and convents, a Roman Catholic church, and the palace of the governor, on the portal of which is still seen the Venetian lion in stone. The bastioned walls erected by the Venetians still stand. The streets are narrow and dirty, and many of the fine old mansions are crumbling to decay. Carpets, cotton prints, and morocco leather are the chief industrial products: there is some trade in raw cotton and wine. The Greek Archbishop of Levkosia is Metropolitan of the whole island. Famagosta, on the east coast, a few miles south of old Salamis, not far from the site of the ancient Tamassus, formerly famous for copper-mines, is a town once strongly fortified by the Venetians, but now much depopulated and decayed. The Venetian palace and most of the churches are in ruins, and the fortifications are now insignificant. Larnaca, or Larnaka, near the site of old Citium, near the south coast, and twenty-four miles south from Levkosia, is a thriving place, being the residence of the European Consuls and factors, and the seat of the chief trade. The port of Larnaca is at Salines, about a mile and a half from it. A Greek Bishop resides at Larnaca, and there are also some Catholic churches in the town. The houses are built chiefly of clay, and only one story high above the ground floor, on account of the earthquakes to which the island is subject. The interior of the houses, however, is comfortable, the apartments are paved with white marble, and almost every house has its garden.

We present a Map of Cyprus, with accompanying smaller maps to show the environs of several of its chief towns—namely, Famagousta or Famagosta, Limasol, Larnaka (Larnaca), and Cerinia (this name is also written Kyrenia); and with a map showing the vicinity of the neighbouring coasts of Syria and Asia Minor. The port of Ayas, in the Bay of Scanderoon, is by far the best anywhere on those coasts, and is recommended, in preference to Scanderoon or Alexandretta, for the starting-point of the Euphrates Valley Railway. This line would pass through Aleppo. The distance to the head of the Persian Gulf is about eight hundred miles, through a flat alluvial plain.

Our Views of Cyprus in this week's Number include those Famagosta and of Larnaca, the ancient monastery of Cozzafani, and the singular rocks, called "the Hundred and One Houses," at the verge of the northern highlands above Cerinia.

Nine of the prisoners charged with being concerned in the burning of Colonel Jackson's house during the recent riots in Lancashire were found guilty, and yesterday week the Lord Chief Justice passed sentences varying from seven to ten years' penal servitude. Two of them received minor sentences.

The Earl of Hardwicke laid the chief stone of a new district church in the Fens, near Littleport, on Tuesday.

The sittings of the Lambeth Conference will be resumed in the Library at Lambeth Palace on Monday next.

Forty-five bishops preached in metropolitan churches on Sunday. Of this large number there were only five home bishops—viz., the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Brechin, the Bishop of Aberdeen, and Bishop Claughton, Chaplain General of the Forces.

The Vicar General's Office, for the granting of the Archbishop of Canterbury's marriage licenses for the metropolis and the whole province of Canterbury, is now established on the first floor of No. 5, Dean's-court, Doctor's Commons, opposite the Deanery. The London Diocesan Registry is in the same house, but the two offices are wholly unconnected.

The company appointed for the revision of the authorised version of the Old Testament finished their fifty-second session yesterday week in the Chapter Library, Westminster. The first revision of the minor prophets was completed, and the revision of Esther was continued to the end of the second chapter. The company, since their first meeting on June 30, 1870, have sat for four hundred and sixty days, working six hours each day, and in that time have revised the whole of the Old Testament for the first time, with the exception of part of Esther, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Salomon, and Daniel. They have also been a second time through the Pentateuch.

The Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels held its last meeting for the present session (to be resumed in November) at the society's house, 7, Whitehall, on Monday afternoon; the Earl of Powis in the chair. Grants of money were made in aid of the following objects, viz.:—Building new churches at Bermondsey, St. Crispin, Surrey; Cambridge, St. Barnabas; Chiswick, St. Michael and All Angels, Middlesex; Delabole, near Camelford, Cornwall; Feltham, St. Catherine, Middlesex; Highgate, near King's Lynn; Staleybridge, Christ Church, Cheshire; and Warrington, St. Barnabas. Rebuilding the churches at Llangwyryfon, near Aberystwith; Marple, All Saints, near Stockport; Radstock, near Bath; Upton Noble, St. Mary, near Bath; Water Orton, near Birmingham, and Whilton, St. Andrew, near Daventry. Enlarging or otherwise improving the accommodation in the churches at Ampney; St. Peter, near Cirencester; Allensmore, near Hereford; Avebury, St. James, near Calne, Wilts; Bepton, near Midhurst, Sussex; Edburton, near Hurstpierpoint; Everton, St. George, near Liverpool; Ilchester, near Taunton; Hampstead-road, St. James's, London; Harty, near Sheerness; Heene, near Worthing; Hempstead, near Stalham, Norfolk; Holybourne, near Alton, Hants; Kenfig, near Bridgend, Glamorgan; Landbeach, near Cambridge; Otley, near Ipswich; Rodney Stoke, near Weston-super-Mare; Soham, Cambridge; Steeple-Bumpstead, near Haverhill, Essex; Sutton-under-Brailes, near Shipston-on-Stour; Sutton St. James, near Wisbeach; and Wells St. Cuthbert, Somerset. Under urgent circumstances the grants formerly made towards the enlarging and restoring the churches at Huish, near Marlborough, Wilts; and South Normanton, near Alfreton, Derby, were each increased. Grants were also made from the Special Mission Building Fund towards building mission churches at Fitzroy-square, St. Saviour, London; Iping March, near Midhurst, Sussex; and Broom, near Redditch, Warwick. During the session just concluded the sum voted by the society in aid of the various works brought before them has been £12,471, whilst the amount of receipts in the same time falls considerably short of that sum.

Mackinder, and L. F. Mumby.

The speech-day and annual gathering at Malvern College took place on the 10th inst. A large assemblage of friends met to hear the speeches and to see the prizes given away by the Bishop of Worcester, visitor of the school. The head master, the Rev. A. Faber, opened the proceedings by recounting the history of the school during the past year, and by congratulating the council on the marked success which had attended their efforts.

Wednesday, the 10th inst., was speech-day at Highgate School. The exhibitions of the year were awarded to Fletcher and Elcum; the gold medal to Fletcher; the "Dartmouth" prizes, presented by the Earl of Dartmouth, to Christie, Parry, and Colman (1); the "Dyne" prizes to Piper and Elcum for Divinity, and to Thorp (1) and Elcum for History; the Baroness Burdett-Coutts's prize to Pollock. The list of University and other honours obtained since last speech-day included open scholarship at Brasenose College, Oxford (Fletcher); open scholarship, Queen's College, Oxford (Elcum); open exhibition, Christ Church, Oxford (Pollock).

Speech-day was held in the great hall of Christ's Hospital on Wednesday, when there were orations, &c., by the Senior Grecian, a selection of vocal and instrumental music, and a distribution of prizes by the Lord Mayor.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY WENTWORTH.

The Right Hon. Fanny, Baroness Wentworth, died at Norwood on the 13th inst. Her Ladyship was the daughter of the late Rev. George Heriot, of Fellow Hills, in the county of Berwick, Vicar of St. Anne's, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was married, Aug. 22, 1869, to Ralph Gordon, Lord Wentworth, who succeeded his brother in that Barony Sept. 1, 1862, and is also by courtesy Viscount Ockham, as the only surviving son and heir-apparent of the present Earl of Lovelace. Lady Wentworth had an only child, Ada Mary, born in 1871.

ADMIRAL SIR W. J. H. JOHNSTONE.

Admiral Sir William James Hope Johnstone, K.C.B., died on the 11th inst. at Albany-street, Edinburgh, in his eightieth year. He was the second son of the late Vice-Admiral Sir William Hope Johnstone, G.C.B., by Lady Anne Hope Johnstone, his wife, eldest daughter of James, third Earl of Hopetoun. His mother inherited the large family estates of Annandale, and his elder brother's son, the present John James Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annandale and Rachills, M.P. for Dumfriesshire, is hereditary Keeper of Lochmaben Palace, and claimant of the earldom of Annandale. Sir William, whose death we record, entered the Royal Navy in 1811, and attained the rank of Admiral in 1863, and that of Rear-Admiral of the United Kingdom in 1870, in which year he was placed on the retired list. From 1854 to 1857 he was Commander-in-Chief on the South American station, and from 1860 to 1863 at Sheerness. He married, in 1826, Ellen, eldest daughter of Sir T. Kirkpatrick, Bart., and had three daughters.

The deaths have also been announced of—

The Ven. C. A. St. John Mildmay, Archdeacon of Essex and Rector of Chelmsford, at Homburg, on the 13th inst. He was a son of the third Sir Henry Paulett Mildmay.

Miss Amy Martha Roberts, second daughter of the late Sir Walter Roberts, Bart., of Britfieldstown, Robert's Cove, in the county of Cork, and Courtlands, in the county of Devon, on the 13th inst., aged seventy-five.

Lady Parker, widow of Admiral Sir Charles Christopher Parker, fifth and last Baronet, of Bassingbourne, Essex, who died in 1869, and daughter of J. Pallmer, Esq., on the 11th inst., at 3, Kensington Park-road, aged eighty-three.

Jane Smart, widow of the Right Rev. J. H. Monk, D.D., Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, on the 12th inst., at 93, Eaton-square. The M.P. for Gloucester, Mr. Charles James Monk, is only son of Mrs. Monk, and the Hon. Mrs. Mostyn, wife of Lord Vaux's eldest son, is second daughter.

General Henry Sykes Stephens, K.H., formerly of the 86th (or the Royal County Down) Regiment, and subsequently Sergeant-at-Arms to the Queen, at 13, Wilton-place, on the 6th inst., in his eighty-third year. He obtained his commission as Ensign on June 14, 1815, and attained the rank of General in 1877.

Miss Catherine Winkworth, at Monnetier, in Savoy, the translator of the poems comprised in the well-known volume called "Lyra Germanica," and the writer of the biographies of Amelia W. Sieveking and of Pastor Fliedner, the founder of the sisterhood of Protestant Deaconesses at Kaiserwerth. Miss Winkworth also contributed to the Sunday Library Series a book entitled "The Christian Singers of Germany."

Colonel Arthur Leahy, Royal Engineers, one of the three military inspectors of army schools, on the 13th inst., at Netley Hospital, after a short illness. Colonel Leahy, who had recently returned home from Gilbraltar on sick leave, entered the Royal Engineers in 1848, and served throughout the Crimean War, including the battles of Alma and Inkerman and siege of Sebastopol. Of recent years Colonel Leahy had served in the Works Department at the War Office. He was also for several years Instructor of Fortifications at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

THE PARIS TOURNAMENT.

The following is the first Game between Messrs. Blackburne and Andersen. (Sicilian Defence.)

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)	WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th	26. B to K B sq	Q to Kt2nd
2. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to K 3rd	27. R to K sq	P to Q R 6th
3. P to K Kt 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	28. B takes Kt	P takes Kt
4. B to Kt 2nd		29. B to R 6th

This line of play, although frequently adopted by good players, almost always results in shutting out the K B from the game.

A grave miscalculation; for, by the advance of the adverse Pawn, White's game becomes seriously compromised.

Chess by Electric Telegraph.—We have received the following note from Captain Kennedy, and have only to add to it that our information upon the subject referred to was derived from a contemporary report of the first game played by electric telegraph, that appeared in our Issue of April 12, 1845. The report, which was accompanied by an Engraving, states that the game was played between Messrs. Staunton and Kennedy, in Portsmouth, and Mr. George Walker, "the celebrated player, and another gentleman at Vauxhall":

(To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.)

Sir,—Perhaps you will kindly allow me to rectify an inaccuracy in the otherwise correct notice, printed in your Issue of the 29th ult., of the first chess game played by electric telegraph. It was conducted by the late Mr. Staunton and myself, not against Mr. G. Walker and another, but against Messrs. Buckle, Perigal, G. Walker, and Tuckett, consulting with Captain Evans. The game, with ample notes by Mr. Staunton, will be found in the Chessplayers' Chronicle, First Series, vi. 160.

Yours faithfully,

Hugh A. Kennedy.

Ailas House, Reading.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of General the Hon. Sir Edward Cust, K.C.H., deceased, late of Leasowe Castle, Chester, who died on Jan. 14, 1878, was proved on the 2nd inst. by the Rev. John James Moss, of East Lydford, Somerton, Somerset. The personalty was sworn under £18,000. The testator bequeathed a policy for £500 to his wife; a policy for £1000 to his daughter Victoria Mary Louisa Yorke; and a policy for £1000 to his daughter Etheldred Victoria Frances; and £2000 Russian Five per Cents to his son, Leopold Cust. He gave his pictures of the late Duchess of Kent and of her Majesty the Queen to his daughter V. M. L. Yorke; his Wellington fire-screen, Peninsular War medals, &c., and a Worcester china vase, the gift of the King of the Belgians, to his daughter Margaret Amy Frances Egerton; his square silver tea salver, having the arms of Cust and Newton engraved upon it (as a memorial of the connection of the families of Cust and Sir Isaac Newton), to the Rev. J. J. Moss. He gave certain valuable articles mentioned in a list accompanying, and proved with, his will to his wife for life, and then to his son Leopold, as heirlooms. Among the articles enumerated are a diamond snuff-box, the gift of King Leopold of Belgium; a gold snuff-box, the gift of King Louis Philippe; a gold medal, "pro artibus et literis," of the Empress of Austria; another gold medal, the gift of the King of Hanover; an enamel miniature of the Queen, the gift of her Majesty; the Queen's Journal, the gift of her Majesty; and numerous letters from "crowned and Royal" writers. He gave to the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Widows of British Soldiers all his copyright interest in his works "Annals of the Wars" and "Lives of the Warriors," and all other his literary works. He devised his real estate and bequeathed the residue of his personalty to his wife for life, after her decease as she should appoint, and in default of such appointment to his son, Leopold Cust, absolutely. Sir Edward Cust was one of the three British Knights Commanders of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order. This order has not been conferred by the British Crown since the death of William IV., when the British Sovereign ceased to be monarch of Hanover.

The will (dated March 25, 1874) of Mr. Octavius Wigram, late of No. 27, Bryanston-square, who died on May 20 last, was proved on the 5th inst. by William Knox Wigram, Francis Spencer Wigram, and the Rev. Spencer Robert Wigram, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £100,000. The testator leaves to his daughter, Clara Maria, £22,000; memorial legacies to several friends, one year's wages to the servants who have been six years in his service at the time of his decease, and mourning to all his servants. The remainder of his property is to be divided between his sons.

The will (dated Aug. 15, 1868) of Mr. George Addison, late of No. 15, Cumberland-terrace, Regent's Park, who died on May 4 last, has been proved by Mrs. Mary Addison, the widow and sole executrix, to whom he gives, devises, and bequeaths all the real and personal estate over which he had any disposing power. The personal estate is sworn under £90,000.

The will (dated Jan. 26, 1878) with a codicil (dated April 2, 1878) of Mr. Alexander Mitchell, formerly of Westcliffe-road, Birkdale, Southport, Lancashire, but late of Manchester, and of No. 14, Carlton-hill, St. John's-wood, cotton spinner and manufacturer, who died on April 13 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by William Mitchell, the brother, and William Mitchell, the son, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths to his brother William and his nephew, John McClellan Mitchell, £2000 each; to his sisters, Miss Margaret Mitchell and Mrs. Elizabeth Jaques, £105 each; to his said brother and sister William and Margaret, and for the life of the survivor of them, an annuity of £200; and to his said sister Mrs. Jaques and her daughter Ann, and to the survivor of them, an annuity of £120. The residue of his property he gives to his three sons, John, William, and Alexander.

The will (dated Feb. 19, 1863) of Mr. John Taylor, formerly of Rajmahal, Bengal, indigo-planter and zemindar, but late of Southend, Essex, who died on May 22 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by Joshua Shepherd Taylor, the brother, and Donald Horne Macfarlane, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths to his sisters, Mrs. Margaret Cormack, Mrs. Ann Coghill, Mrs. Williamina Gow, Mrs. Charlotte Shepherd Macdonald, and Miss Christina Taylor, and to his brother George Taylor, 15,000 rupees each; to his nephew John Taylor Cormack, to his niece and god-daughter Margaret Ferrier Cormack, and to his niece Johan Macdonald, 5000 rupees each; and to each of his executors who shall act, 5000 rupees each. The residue of his estate he leaves to his brother Joshua Shepherd Taylor.

The will of the late Mr. Charles James Mathews, the eminent comedian, has just been proved by his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Mathews, the sole executrix, to whom he leaves all his property. The personal estate is sworn under £20,000.

A meeting of the leading inhabitants of Middlesborough was held on Tuesday, when it was decided to erect a statue in the Albert Park, Middlesborough, to the memory of the late Mr. Bolckow, M.P., the founder of Middlesborough. A committee was formed to carry out the object. A subscription of £100 was received from Mr. J. W. Pease, M.P.

The annual Provincial Grand Lodge of Surrey Freemasons was held on Tuesday at the Public Hall, Dorking, under the presidency of General Brownrigg, C.B., Provincial Grand Master, who was supported by representatives from all the lodges in the province. After the new officers for the year had been appointed the Grand Lodge voted five guineas to the Dorking National Schools, ten guineas to the Idiots' Asylum at Earlswood, and ten guineas to each of the three Masonic charitable institutions. A service was afterwards held at the parish church, and a collection amounting to £7 11s. was made on behalf of the Dorking National Schools. Before separating for the day the brethren partook of a banquet.

The Liverpool Orangemen deferred their celebration of the Twelfth of July till Monday. It was held in a field belonging to Lord Salisbury, a few miles from Liverpool. The Eastern policy of the Government was approved and Ritualism condemned. There were no disturbances.—The members of the Liverpool Peace Society, at a meeting held last Saturday, passed a resolution which, whilst it expressed satisfaction at the pacific solution of political difficulties which the Congress by this time afforded, deprecated in the strongest terms the assumption by the Government of territorial and other responsibilities which were sure to involve enlarged armaments and continued germs of international dissension, that might hereafter plunge this country into war.—In connection with the annual picnic of the Salford Conservative Association, which took place on Saturday at Tatton Park, the seat of Lord Egerton, a public meeting was held, at which a resolution was passed thanking Lord Beaconsfield and the Government for their successful treatment of the Eastern Question. The speakersincluded Mr. Charley, M.P., and Col. Walker, M.P

LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST.
THE MOST PALATABLE.
THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.

DR. DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL,
proved by twenty-five years' medical experience to be THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects in CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN, RICKETS, AND ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL, Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was tolerated, relished, and easily digested, and with marked benefit."

LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E., Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on functional or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

DR. PROSSER JAMES, Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
LONDON: SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1878.

Now that the peace of Europe has been secured by the International engagements recorded in the Treaty of Berlin, it is natural for us to look round with some deliberation upon the political position in which we stand. The peace, the value of which, perhaps, it is impossible too highly to estimate, has nevertheless cost us something considerable in many ways. It has cost not a little in the extraordinary strain put upon the principles, or, at any rate, the customary interpretation of the principles, of the British Constitution. It will not be expedient for us to anticipate next week's debate in the House of Commons. The facts, however, on which discussion must be founded have, for the most part, been made known. How far the steps which have been successively taken by the Government to arrive at present conclusions was prescribed by a "necessity which knows no law" we may leave to be determined by Parliament—not simply by a numerical division on Lord Hartington's amendment, but in the main by the impression which will be left upon the mind of the country by the arguments brought forward during the debate. But one thing is clear, whether justifiable or unjustifiable—that the country has passed, during the last few months, through a process which has wrenched it from the position in regard to foreign policy which it had calmly looked upon as incontestable. If it should be found that the power of committing the nation to engagements of unlimited scope abroad really belongs to the Crown, and may be duly exercised without the slightest reference to Parliament or to the people; if, in short, the Foreign Policy of this country is in the hands exclusively of the Prime Minister, and may be secretly carried into effect, whatever may be the responsibilities it entails, it is quite certain that—albeit there may be no novelty in the constitutional theory thus brought to the surface—there is unquestionably an alteration of customary practice which places us in a different position from that which we supposed ourselves to occupy. This is one of the costs at which we have obtained the maintenance of peace. We have discovered that we are not, as we supposed ourselves to have been, masters of our own fate in so far as our Foreign Policy is concerned. Perhaps it was inevitable that it should be so. Perhaps it will be difficult, if not impracticable, to formulate an easy escape from the danger. But this is one of the most important items of expense we have to meet in compensation for the peace in which we now rejoice.

Then, financially, there is the Bill to pay. The warlike preparations deemed necessary by the Government to enable their Plenipotentiaries to speak freely and boldly at the Berlin Congress have been made at no small cost. The Naval Demonstration in the Mediterranean and the Sea of Marmora, the calling out of the Army Reserves, and the transport of an Indian Contingent from our Eastern dependency to Malta, to say nothing of the mobilisation of two divisions of the Regular Army, must have made a very large and appreciable addition to the expenditure of the year. It will probably be found to have cost us as much in mere money as did the Irish Famine many years ago. Incidental advantages may come out of it, as, unquestionably, they did out of that; but we shall probably have to reckon the nation out of pocket this year of several millions of money which but for the near approach of war might have been saved. This, however, is not all. The country has paid in commercial depression and in the derangement of business consequent upon political uncertainty very much more than it will have to contribute directly to her Majesty's Exchequer.

Happily, that uncertainty is now at an end. Capitalists are already beginning to look out for promising enterprises. The information that reaches us from manufacturing and mining districts of the country indicates a somewhat brighter future than has come within the range of hope for some two or three years past. Weather prospects rather aid than discourage these industrial and commercial pre-intimations. There has been a superabundant hay harvest, and, should the present meteorological conditions be somewhat further prolonged, there may be also a good wheat harvest, so that at the period of our greatest need we may be favoured with an unexpected period of productive good fortune. Let this, however, be as it may, both the reality and the prospect tend to loosen the restrictions which for a long time past have limited the employment of capital and, therefore, the remuneration of labour. We should be ungrateful not to note the favourable change. "Peace and Plenty" linked together open to us a future more pleasant in its characteristics than we have lately been wont to look out upon.

As a result of our Foreign anxieties, we must take some account of the arrears of legislation. Parliament has been so distracted by the "Eastern Question" and by the various manifestations to which it has given rise, that, although the present Session began three weeks earlier than usual, not a few of the measures introduced will have to be sacrificed before the Houses rise. We are not sure that this is an evil greatly to be deplored. Too much and too hasty lawmaking do not invariably result in advantages to the country. The Ministerial programme this year was modest enough, but is not likely to be realised. There are some bills sufficiently advanced to allow of a hope that they will reach maturity. There are others which should they perish, as most likely they will, in a "massacre of the innocents," will hardly excite public disappointment. Curiously enough, two of the measures upon which supreme stress is placed by the Leader of the House of Commons issue from the Privy Council Office. They are the Irish Intermediate Education Bill and the Cattle Importation Bill. The first named in most respects solves the difficulties which have beset the question until now, and seems to be cordially accepted by all parties. The second has provoked serious opposition, and the original draught of it has had to be greatly modified. Reasonable doubts may be entertained in regard to the principle lying at the basis of both measures; but they are doubts which, in the present state of public opinion, are not likely to influence to any large extent Parliamentary decisions. We have referred to the Bills simply for the purpose of illustrating the prevailing lack of legislative progress in front of the pressing possibilities of war. The absorption of time, interest, and action due to the obtrusive prominence of affairs in the East must be reckoned among the costs we have to pay for the achievement of a durable settlement of international differences, and, perhaps, the least to be regretted of the fines thereby imposed upon us.

On the whole, perhaps, we come out of the turmoil which old-fashioned and traditional care for the Ottoman Empire had raised about us with somewhat less loss than might have been expected. But it would be a great error to suppose that the country has lost nothing. It would be a great error to suppose that the full penalty to be exacted from it has yet been paid. We are among those, however, who are disposed to make the best of facts which are in themselves immediately disagreeable; and we believe that, in many cases, some of the choicest of our national blessings have eventually reached us through channels which would not have been willingly chosen, whether by our forefathers or by ourselves. In most historical instances, it is true that "every cloud has its silver lining," but it is not less true that we cannot have the brightness without its concomitant shadows.

The Sandringham Estate Cottage Horticultural Society's Show was held on Wednesday. These annual meetings are under the especial patronage of the Prince and Princess of Wales. As usual, the gardens of Sandringham Park were thrown open to public inspection, and the dogs and bears were a source of great amusement. The proceedings were enlivened by a military band.

THE COURT.

The Queen before leaving Windsor entertained at dinner Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Right Hon. Sir Augustus Paget and Lady Paget, the Hon. S. Ponsonby-Fane, and General the Right Hon. Sir T. M. Biddulph.

Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left yesterday week for the Isle of Wight. The Queen travelled by special train to Portsmouth, and crossed thence in the Royal yacht Alberta—Captain Thomson in command—to Osborne. Prince Leopold remained at Windsor Castle, being confined to the house with a sprained knee.

The Earl of Beaconsfield arrived at Osborne, and had an audience of her Majesty. The Queen's dinner party included Princess Beatrice, Lady Waterpark, the Hon. Horatia Stopford, the Hon. Amy Lambart, the Earl of Beaconsfield, Lieutenant-General Ponsonby, and Mr. Montagu Corry.

Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Prothero.

The Queen, who was accompanied by Princess Beatrice, invested the Earl of Beaconsfield with the Order of the Garter at Osborne on Monday, with the usual ceremonial. Captain Baron Seckendorff, of the German Navy, Governor to Prince Henry of Prussia, and Captain Haig, Royal Engineers, Equerry to the Duke of Edinburgh, arrived at Osborne. Her Majesty's dinner party included Lady Waterpark, General the Right Hon. Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph, the Earl of Beaconsfield, Baron Seckendorff, and Mr. Montagu Corry. The Earl of Beaconsfield, Mr. Corry, Baron Seckendorff, and Captain Haig left the next morning.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice have walked or driven out daily.

Her Majesty has conferred the Garter vacant by the death of Earl Russell upon the Marquis of Salisbury.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales returned to Marlborough House on Monday. His Royal Highness left Paris by a special train on Sunday night at eleven o'clock, and, travelling viâ Boulogne and Folkestone, reached London at ten minutes past seven on Monday morning, the entire journey being completed in the unprecedentedly short time of eight hours and ten minutes. Mr. John Shaw, the manager and secretary of the South-Eastern Railway Company, received the Prince on arrival at Boulogne, and the passage was made to Folkestone by the company's special steamer Victoria, under the command of Captain Dane. Sir Edward Watkin, M.P., chairman of the company, was present on the arrival of his Royal Highness at Charing-cross station. The Prince, accompanied by the Princess, visited the London Hospital, in the Whitechapel-road, in the afternoon, and inspected the wards. His Royal Highness paid a visit to the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace. The Prince and Princess went to Her Majesty's Theatre in the evening. Their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by Prince Louis of Battenburg, left London on Tuesday for the Royal yacht Osborne, at Dartmouth, in order to be present at the distribution of prizes on board her Majesty's ship Britannia. They travelled from Paddington by the 1.45 train to Bristol, and thence proceeded by special train to Dartmouth, where they arrived at five o'clock. They were met upon their arrival by the Duke of Connaught, Admiral Sir T. Symonds Captain Fairfax, Lord Ramsay, Sir Samuel Baker, and the officers of the Prussian frigate Niobe, now at Dartmouth harbour. The visitors were rowed on board the Britannia by a crew of cadets, Prince George rowing a bow oar, and Prince Albert Victor steering. After partaking of tea on board, their Royal Highnesses landed on the Dartmouth side and drove through the town, after which they returned to the Royal yacht and entertained a party at dinner. The town was decorated, and in the evening there was a grand illumination. On Wednesday the Prince and Princess received an address on board the Royal yacht Osborne from the Mayor and Corporation of Dartmouth, and the Princess afterwards distributed the prizes to the successful cadets on board the training-ship Britannia. A large company assembled to witness the ceremony, among them being the Duke of Connaught and Prince Louis of Battenburg. Neither of the young Princes was a prize-winner. The Prince afterwards addressed the cadets. Their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by their sons, subsequently left for London.

The Prince has fixed Aug. 12 for laying the dedication-stone of the parish church of St. Mary, Southampton.

THE GRAND DUKE AND GRAND DUCHESS OF HESSE.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse, accompanied by Princess Victoria, visited the Princess of Wales at Marlborough House on Thursday week, and were afterwards present in the House of Lords. The Hereditary Grand Duke and the Princesses of Hesse visited the Tower of London. Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne visited their Royal Highnesses at Buckingham Palace. The next day the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess visited Sir Richard Wallace, M.P., at Hertford House. Their Royal Highnesses, with the Hereditary Grand Duke and the Princesses of Hesse, lunched with the Duke and Duchess of Teck at Kensington Palace. The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess dined with the Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. The Hereditary Grand Duke and the Princesses visited the East and West India Docks in the morning, and were received by the chairman and secretary of the company. On Saturday last the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke and Princesses of Hesse, left Buckingham Palace for Eastbourne. The Princess of Wales visited their Royal Highnesses previous to their departure.

Prince and Princess Christian arrived at Lockinge House, near Wantage, on a visit to Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, M.P., and the Hon. Mrs. Loyd-Lindsay, yesterday week; and on Saturday their Royal Highnesses drove to West Ilsley, and attended Divine service in the parish church, which has been restored; after which the Princess laid a dedication stone in the buttress of the chancel, attended a concert given in the schoolroom, and planted two yew-trees in the churchyard. An address was presented to their Royal Highnesses, and the Princess received a bouquet from one of the school children. The village was gaily decorated. The Royal visitors returned to Lockinge in the evening, where they remained until Monday.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck dined with General and Mrs. Mark Wood on Tuesday in Audley-square.

The Duke and Duchess of Somerset have left town for Bulstrode Park, Bucks.

The Duchess of Roxburghe has arrived at Broxmouth Park.

The Duke and Duchess of Bedford and the Ladies Russell have left London for Endsleigh Cottage, Tavistock.

The Duchess of Marlborough, with Lady Georgiana and Lady Sarah Spencer Churchill, have left London for the Viceregal Lodge, Dublin.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne have left Lansdowne House, Berkeley-square, for Bowood.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Bute have left Brown's Hotel for Arundel Castle, on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Huntly have left Upper Grosvenor-street for Aboyne Castle, Aberdeenshire.

The Marquis of Northampton has left town for Scotland.

Lord Claud J. Hamilton, M.P., second son of the Duke of Abercorn, K.G., was married to Miss Carolina Chandos Pole, second surviving daughter of Lady Anna Chandos Pole and the late Mr. Edward Sacheverell Chandos Pole, of Radburne Hall, Derby, on Saturday last, at St. Mary Abbotts, the parish church of Kensington. The bride came with her mother, and was received by her brother, Mr. Reginald W. Chandos Pole (Grenadier Guards), who gave her away, and her bridesmaids—namely, Miss Chandos Pole, sister of the bride; Lady Victoria Edgcumbe, Lady Katherine Lambton, Lady Beatrice Anson, Lady Evelyn Fitzmaurice, and Lady Frances Spencer-Churchill, nieces of the bridegroom. The bride's dress was of white satin, trimmed with Brussels point and wreathed with myrtle and orange-blossoms; a wreath of orange-blossoms, and Brussels lace veil. The jewels worn were a pearl necklace and diamond pendant, the gift of the Duke and Duchess Abercorn, and diamond earrings, the bridegroom's gift. The bridesmaids' costumes were of white cashmere trimmed with white satin; and beefeater hats of white satin, trimmed with Mechlin lace. Each wore a crystal locket, engraved with the Hamilton badge and surrounded with forget-me-nots in pearls and turquoise. The bouquets were of white and red clove carnations and myrtle Mr. Montague Corry was best man. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, assisted by the Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell, the Rev. Edward Poole, Vicar of Boulton, Derby, and the Rev. George Wingate. The Duke of Cambridge and the Duke and Duchess of Teck were present. The breakfast, to nearly four hundred guests, was given by Elizabeth Countess of Harrington, at Harrington House, Kensington Palace-gardens. The bride and bridegroom left for Luton Hoo, Mrs. Gerard Leigh's seat in Bedfordshire, to spend the honeymoon. Among the bridal presents were—from the Prince of Wales a French clock and candlesticks en suite; from the Duke and Duchess of Teck a silver-mounted crystal claret-jug. Lord Claud received from friends in the Houses of Lords and Commons a large silver bowl on ebony stand, two column candelabra, two cups with covers, and two oval sugar-basins and covers, the principal piece of plate bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to Lord Claud J. Hamilton, M.P., on the occasion of his marriage to Miss Carolina Chandos Pole, by many of his friends in both Houses of Parliament." His Lordship also received, from the directors of the Great Eastern Railway, a silver-gilt dessert service, consisting of three compotiers and two flat dishes, embossed and chased with fruit and flowers, the centre-piece engraved with the following inscription:—"Presented by the directors of the Great Eastern Railway Company to Lord Claud John Hamilton, M.P., their deputy chairman, on his marriage, July 20, 1878."

Lord Ralph Drury Kerr, second surviving son of the late and brother of the present Marquis of Lothian, was married to the Lady Anne Fitzalan Howard, fifth daughter of the late and sister of the present Duke of Norfolk, on Wednesday at the Catholic church, Arundel. The bride was attended by the following bridesmaids—viz., Lady Margaret Fitzalan Howard, her sister; Ladies Cecil and Margaret Kerr, nieces of the bridegroom; the Hon. Alice Fitzalan Howard, cousin of the bride; Miss Hope, Miss Josephine Hope, and Miss Theresa Hope, nieces of the bride; and Miss Gaisford, niece of the bridegroom. Captain Horace Gaisford (Grenadier Guards) acted as Lord Ralph's best man. The nuptial rite was performed by the Hon. and Rev. Monsignor Talbot, uncle of the bridegroom. The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk gave the wedding breakfast at Arundel Castle, at which the relatives and friends of both families assembled. Lord Ralph Kerr and his bride left the castle for Belton House, near Grantham, the seat of Earl Brownlow, for the honeymoon.

Marriages are arranged between Lord Cochrane, 2nd Life Guards, eldest son of the Earl of Dundonald, and Miss Bamford Hesketh, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Bamford Hesketh, of Gwrych Castle, North Wales; and between Sir Francis Winnington, Bart., and Miss Spencer Churchill, eldest daughter of Lord and Lady Alfred Spencer Churchill.

BITS OF OLD BRISTOL.

We give a second page of Mr. S. Read's characteristic sketches of the architectural antiquities of the brave old Western city, lately visited by the Prince of Wales at the meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society there, which was made the occasion of several Illustrations in our last. The Gothic gateway beneath the tower and spire of St. John's Church, which stands upon the old town wall, is part of a singular combination of buildings, but not without grace and dignity. The two stone figures in the canopied niches on each side of this gateway are not effigies of saints or apostles, but of the fabled Romano-British heroes, Brennus and Belinus, the reputed founders of Bristol. The ancient Norman gateway of St. Augustine's Abbey, at the corner of College Green to the west of the Cathedral, with its Perpendicular Gothic superstructure, is in good preservation, as it appeared in the sketch we have engraved. St. Stephen's Church, built in the reign of King Henry VI. by the munificence of John Shipward, merchant and Mayor of Bristol, has a noble tower, 133 ft. high, with a porch of very original design and effective decoration; its architectural beauties are only second to those of St. Mary Redcliffe. The chantry here was founded by a clothier or woollen manufacturer, Edward Blanket, who gave his name to that familiar article of bedding which we find indispensable to our nightly comfort. The old-fashioned house-fronts in King-street, as well as in Maryport-street and other quarters of the city, were noticed by us last week.

Lord Leigh, the Lord Lieutenant of Warwickshire, on Wednesday opened the first model coffee-house for Leamington. Speaking of the evils of intemperance, he said, as a thirty years' visitor of Warwick Gaol, he believed that the prison would be closed were it not for that vice.

We have described, as the subject of more than one Illustration, the buildings, erected in the central avenue of the Paris Exhibition, which exemplify different periods and styles of English domestic architecture. The one representing a country mansion of the time of William III., which was conspicuous in our latest Illustration of that department, was designed by Mr. T. E. Collcutt, architect, of Bloomsbury-square, and was built and decorated by Messrs. Collinson and Lock.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.

At a meeting of this society, held at the offices, Trafalgar-square, on Wednesday, a large number of cases of gallantry in saving life were brought under the notice of the committee.

On the recommendation of the Lords of the Admiralty, the case of Thomas Hawkes, of her Majesty's ship Sapphire, was considered. About three p.m. on March 23 last, the Sapphire at the time going six and a half knots in a heavy cross sea, Michael Begley, A.B., while getting in the wreck of the flying boom, fell overboard. Hawkes witnessed the occurrence, and, losing no time, jumped overboard to the rescue of the drowning man, who had no idea of swimming. He succeeded in reaching him, and supported him for six minutes until the lifeboat, which had in the meantime been launched, reached them. Begley was so far gone when Hawkes reached him that, although two life-buoys were within a few feet, he was unable to avail himself of them, and it required all the strength his rescuer possessed to support him in the water. It was mentioned that the above was the sixth occasion in which Hawkes, who is a sailmaker of the Sapphire, had been instrumental in saving life, he having received the bronze medallion of the society for a similar act of gallantry in 1874. The case was referred to the general court for the bestowal of the silver medal.

The bronze medallion was voted to Mr. M. Robinson, boatswain's mate of her Majesty's ship Shah, for jumping from the topgallant forecastle, a height of 40 ft., and attempting to rescue H. A. Broughton, who fell overboard in six fathoms of water at Panama on May 11, the gallantry of the act being much enhanced by the known presence of sharks; to T. Grunnah, for leaping from the quay wall at Swansea, a height of 15 ft., and diving to the rescue of D. Buckley, who attempted suicide in 20 ft. of water, on the 17th ult.; and to W. Rose, bombardier of the Royal Artillery, and D. Clarke, gunner of the same regiment, for swimming to the assistance J. Hogg, a corporal of the 2nd battalion 5th Fusiliers, who sank while bathing at Gravesend on the 22nd ult., a strong ebb tide running at the time.

In addition to the above, handsome testimonials inscribed on vellum and on parchment, recording the services rendered and the acknowledgments of the society, were voted to seventeen persons, and several pecuniary rewards of various amounts were given.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN AUGUST.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The fourth and last Eclipse of the year is one of the Moon, and the only Eclipse visible from Europe during the year; it takes place on Aug. 12 and 13. The Eclipse begins at 43 minutes after 10h. p.m. on the 12th; the Moon on this evening rises at 7h. 18m. p.m. The middle of the Eclipse is at 8 minutes after midnight. The Eclipse ends at 34 minutes after 1h. in the morning of the 13th. At the time of the greatest phase about three fifths of the diameter of the Moon is obscured. At the time or beginning of the Eclipse the Moon is in the zenith of a place whose longitude is 19¾ deg. east of Greenwich, and latitude 14¾ deg. S. At the middle of the Eclipse the Moon is in the zenith of a place whose longitude is a little more than 1 deg. west of Greenwich, and in latitude 14¾ deg. S. At the end of the Eclipse the Moon occupies the zenith of a place whose longitude is 22 deg. west of Greenwich, and latitude 14 deg. S.

The Moon is near Jupiter during the evening hours of the 11th, near Saturn during the evening hours of the 16th and morning hours of the 17th; she is near Venus during the morning hours of the 26th, near Mars on the 28th, the day of New Moon, and near Mercury on the 29th. Her phases or times of change are—

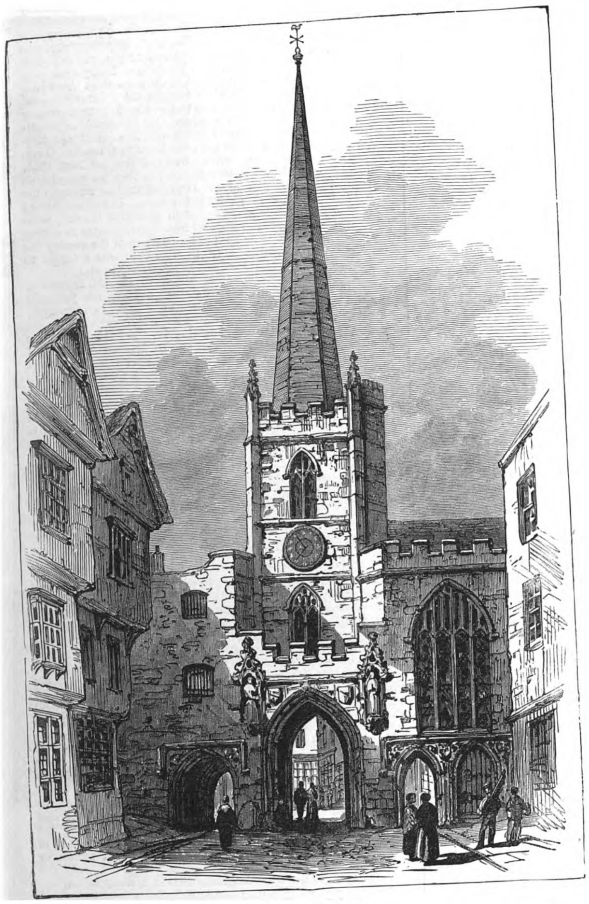
First Quarter on the	5th	at 19 minutes	after	1h.	in the afternoon.
Full Moon	13th	16		0	morning.
Last Quarter	21st	8		4	morning.
New Moon	28th	0		6	morning.

She is nearest the Earth on the morning of the 1st, and again on the morning of the 29th; and most distant from it on the morning of the 17th.

Mercury is an evening star, setting on the 4th at 8h. 32m. p.m., or 51 minutes after sunset; which interval gradually decreases to 31 minutes by the 19th (the planet setting at 7h. 44m. p.m.), and to 7 minutes by the 29th (the planet setting at 7h. 0m. p.m.). On the last day the Sun and planet set together, and from this day till Oct. 16 Mercury sets in daylight. He is in his descending node on the 2nd (the third time this year), at his greatest distance from the Sun on the 13th, at his greatest eastern elongation (27 deg. 23 min.) on the same day, stationary among the stars on the 27th, and near the Moon on the 29th.

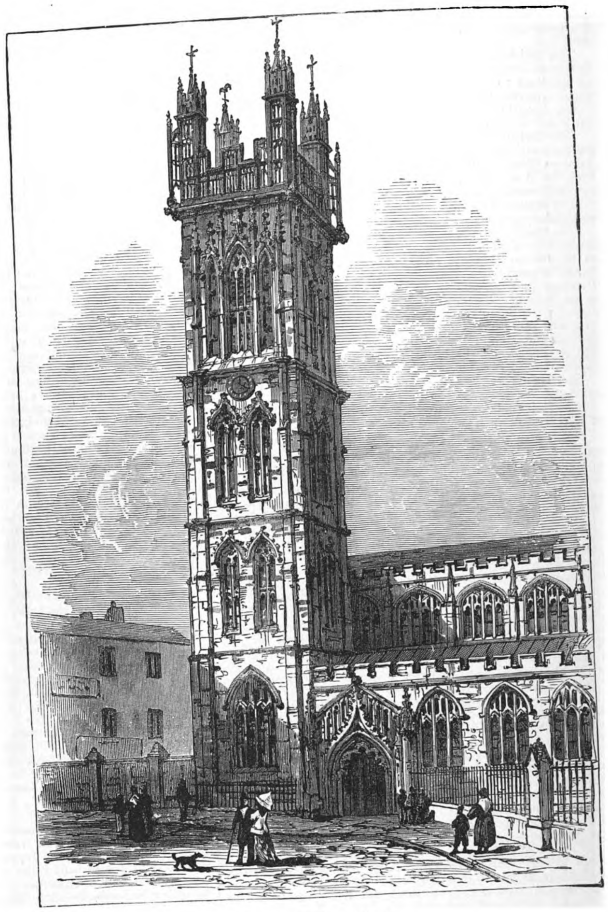
Venus is a morning star, rising on the 1st at 1h. 43m. a.m., on the 19th at 2h. 17m. a.m., and on the 29th at 2h. 45m. a.m.; being respectively 2h. 42m., 2h. 35m., and 2h. 23m., before sunrise on these days. She is due south on the 1st at 9h. 52m. a.m., on the 11th at 10h. 4m. a.m., on the 21st at 10h. 16m. a.m., and on the last day at 10h. 27m. a.m. She is in her ascending node on the 17th, and near the Moon on the 26th.

Mars is an evening star, setting on the 9th at 8h. 7m. p.m., on the 19th at 7h. 39m. p.m., and on the 29th at 7h. 11m. p.m.; being respectively 35 minutes, 26 minutes, and 18 minutes after sunset on these evenings. He is due south on the 1st at 1h. 10m. p.m., on the 15th at 0h. 49m. p.m., and on the last day at 0h. 24m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 28th.



Jupiter sets on the 1st at 3h. 49m. a.m., on the 10th at 3h. 8m. a.m., on the 20th at 2h. 23m. a.m., and on the last day at 1h. 34m. a.m. He is due south on the 1st at 11h. 33m. p.m., on the 11th at 10h. 49m. a.m., on the 21st at 10h. 5m. p.m., and on the last day at 9h. 22m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 11th.

Saturn rises at 9h. 6m. p.m., or 1h. 32m. after sunset, on the 8th; at 8h. 26m. p.m., or 1h. 11m. after sunset, on the 18th; and at 7h. 46m. p.m., or 51 minutes after sunset, on the 28th. He is due south on the 1st at 3h. 35m. a.m., on the 11th at 2h. 55m. a.m., on the 21st at 2h. 13m. a.m., and on the last day at 1h. 32m. a.m. He is near the Moon on the 16th.



It is announced that the Home Secretary, after consultation with the Lord Chancellor, has sent an unfavourable answer to the deputation of Members of Parliament and others who recently waited upon him to urge an increase in the remuneration of county court Judges in consequence of additional work thrown upon them.

Mrs. Gladstone and Lady Frederick Cavendish gave a garden party on the 18th inst. in the pleasant grounds of the Free Convalescent Home at Woodford, near Epping Forest, desiring much to express their gratitude to those neighbours who so kindly visit the home, and cheer the patients by reading aloud and music. About four o'clock visitors began to arrive from the neighbourhood, and were received on the lawn in front of the house by Mrs. Gladstone and Lady Frederick Cavendish. Tea and fruit and other refreshments were laid out in the shade, and an agreeable entertainment was provided in the shape of hand-bell ringing by the "Holdfast Temperance Campanologists."

BITS OF OLD BRISTOL.

SANS SOUCI ON SUNDAY.

Potsdam is the Versailles, or the Hampton Court and Windsor, of Berlin; it contains also, like Woolwich, a Royal Military Academy, and is a favourite popular resort for the loyal cockneys of the Prussian capital, who adore the Army and the Court. Here, at a distance of seventeen miles from the great metropolitan city, is the Palace of Sans Souci, which was the residence of Frederick II., "called Frederick the Great," as we may read in Carlyle's five volumes of his biography. The gardens and pleasure-grounds, on the banks of the Havel and its canal, adorned with shrubberies and lawns, with fountains, vases and statuary of fine marble, in the Italian style, afford to Sunday afternoon visitors an agreeable promenade. An English family is unmistakably to be recognised in the gentleman and two ladies, with the little girl standing beside her father, who are seen in our Illustration watching the goldfish in the clear water of the basin, to the right hand. The middle-aged couple to the left hand belong not less certainly to the German townsfolk or Bürgerschaft; and the officer in the foreground has no scruple in turning his back upon them while he receives the devout homage of a Prussian lady, who simply worships his uniform. Aristocratic soldiership, in the present phase of social opinion throughout North Germany, is prized far beyond the highest intellectual attainments or the greatest professional or industrial success in the arts of peace. This state of affairs, we trust, is not likely to continue for ever.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Marshal MacMahon, the Duchess of Magenta, and their daughter left Paris on Saturday for Trouville, where they were received by the Archduke Albert of Austria. Before leaving Paris the President paid a visit to the Prince of Wales. On Tuesday morning Marshal MacMahon in Council signed and ratified the Treaty of Berlin. M. Waddington has made a full report upon the Congress to the Cabinet. His communications (a Reuter's telegram says) are understood to have been of a character to remove unfavourable impressions which have prevailed in French circles in regard to the position of France.

The Prince of Wales left Paris last Saturday evening, having attended the English musical performances given under the direction of Messrs. Arthur Sullivan and Henry Leslie in the hall of the Trocadéro on Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday last. On the occasion of the last concert the Prince sent for Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Leslie, and expressed to them personally the pleasure he had experienced and his sense of the trouble they had taken. The Prince further desired Mr. Leslie to thank the soloists and choir for the admirable manner in which they had rendered the works of the various British composers. Besides the presence on the first occasion of Lord Lyons and the members of the Embassy, the Prince had invited the Colonial Commissioners connected with the Exhibition to be present each day in his Royal Highnesses own box. The Daily News correspondent states that on Saturday the Prince of Wales invited M. Gambetta to breakfast, and thanked him for the assistance he had rendered the British Commission. M. Gambetta is said to have told the Prince that, but for his Royal Highness's exertions, the Exhibition must have fallen through.

A collection was made on Sunday at Christ Church, Neuilly, on behalf of the English Orphanage, 35, Rue Bineau, which needs immediate help. Some members of Mr. H. Leslie's Choir kindly volunteered their services and sang "Judge me, O God" with great effect during the alms collection. One hundred and sixty-one English and American children passed through Miss Leigh's hands during the past five years. Of these many have been sent out to service, there being a constant demand for such; some have been claimed by relations and friends in England, and others adopted. Thirty-two now remain in the Orphanage, while five others are awaiting admission. The Prince of Wales sent Miss Leigh £20 towards the completion of her church.

M. de Marcère, the Minister of the Interior, has met with a brilliant reception from his constituents in Maubeuge and the surrounding district.

Balloting took place on Sunday, at Largentière, department of Ardèche, and at Valenciennes, department of the Nord, resulting in a double triumph for the Republicans.

Two decrees, dated July 19, grant pardons, commutations, or reductions of sentences to fifty-nine persons who were condemned in connection with the events of the Commune.

The Government has lost no time in punishing the ringleaders of the strike at Anzin. Twenty of them have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. The Republican committee of Denain has issued an address to the miners recommending them to be calm and prudent. A telegram from Valenciennes states that there are about 9000 men on strike in that district. At St. Etienne 700 men engaged in the dyeworks have struck for an increase of wages, and in Bordeaux 450 journeymen bakers have struck for the same reason. Measures have been taken by the authorities to ensure, if necessary, the regular supply of bread to the public.

The international chess tournament ended on Wednesday last in a tie between Herren Winawer and Zukertort for the first and second prizes, with a score of 16½; Mr. Blackburne takes the third prize with a score of 14½; Messrs. Mackenzie and Bird, having each scored 13, tie for the fourth and fifth prizes, and the sixth prize has fallen to Herr Andersson. The ties are to be played off, the winners of the first two games to be declared the victors.

An international competition of mowing-machines, exhibited at the Exhibition, took place on Tuesday at Mormant, in the Seine et Oise. The Minister of Agriculture and Commerce was present. There were forty-five exhibitors, of which sixteen were French, thirteen English, eleven Americans, two Canadians, two Russians, and one Swiss. The three machines that came out first were the American machine of Mr. M'Cormack, and the English machines of Messrs. Osborne and Walter Wood.

The Academy of Sciences has presented as candidates for the Chair of Medicine vacant by the death of Claude Bernard, M. Brown Seguard, twenty-five votes, and M. Dareste de la Chavanne, twenty-two votes.

The election of a President of the Order of Advocates was held on Wednesday. M. Nicolet, of the Court of Paris was the successful candidate.

The large captive balloon placed in the courtyard of the Tuileries, between the ruins of the palace and the portico of the Carrousel, has been inflated, and has taken 80,000 cubic feet of hydrogen. The balloon is 120 ft. high, and is fixed at a distance of 180 ft. from the ground. Trial ascensions of this monster balloon attracted the attention of Parisians on Sunday and Monday. At five o'clock on Monday evening the captive balloon made an ascent with some representatives of the press in the car; and afterwards ascended a second time with the committee appointed to examine the capacities of the balloon. All the apparatus was found to work well.

The Christian Evidence Society have made arrangements for a series of lectures in English and French at the Salle Evangélique, Trocadéro, Paris. They will be given during the months of August and September. The first French lecture will be by Dr. de Pressensé, on La Royauté de l'Homme, on Aug. 1; and the first English lecture, by the Rev. Canon Barry, on The Moral Force of Christianity in History, on Aug. 13.

SPAIN.

The Envoys-Extraordinary of England, France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, and Portugal went to the Escurial on the 18th inst., and had an audience of the King, the Princess of the Asturias, and the Duke and Duchess of Montpensier. Lord Norton was accompanied by the resident Minister, the Hon. Sackville West, and Sir John Walsham.

On Wednesday the Cortes were prorogued by Royal decree. The autumn session will begin at the end of October. Distress is said to prevail in the agricultural districts owing to drought.

Decrees published in the Madrid Gazette lay down the principal reforms in the administration of Cuba.

PORTUGAL.

The anniversary of the entry of the Liberal army into Lisbon under the Duke of Terceira was celebrated as a general holiday in Lisbon on Wednesday. The streets and squares were decorated with flags and there were numerous bands of music. A parade of the troops took place before the King and Queen. At night there were brilliant illuminations.

ITALY.

Under the presidency of Signor Menotti Garibaldi, a meeting of about 2500 persons in Rome on Sunday passed a resolution condemning the violation by the Berlin Congress of the principle of nationalities and popular sovereignty, and reminding Italy that there still exist Italian countries subject to foreign domination. In Genoa and several other towns similar meetings are to be held.

HOLLAND.

The second Chamber, after a debate which lasted for five weeks, has passed, by 52 against 30 votes, a bill for reforming the law upon primary education in Holland.

BELGIUM.

An extraordinary Session of the Legislative Chambers was opened on Tuesday. There was no Speech from the Throne.

M. Rogier, Minister of State, and a member of the Belgian Congress of 1830, has been elected President of the Chamber of Representatives. It is proposed to maintain him in this post till the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Belgian independence, in 1880.

GERMANY.

After seven weeks' confinement to his room, the Emperor William went for a drive on Saturday and Sunday last; and on Monday, accompanied by the Empress and the Grand Duchess of Baden, his Majesty left Berlin by special train for Babelsberg. He had his right arm in a sling, and saluted with his left hand the populace who crowded to see him pass.

All Germany subscribes towards the Kaiser Wilhelm Fund. The money is being collected for some charitable purpose, to be determined by the Crown Prince, in memory of the Emperor's delivery from the assassin's hands. To make the subscription truly national the committee, presided over by Field Marshal Count von Moltke, fixed the largest contribution at one shilling.

The Commission of naval officers appointed to inquire into the loss of the Grosser Kurfürst have sent in their report to the Admiralty. According to what has been allowed to transpire, the report acquits all the officers in command, asserting that the men at the helm of the König Wilhelm misunderstood orders.

The Duke of Cumberland has formally notified the death of his father, the late King of Hanover, to the German Princes and Free Towns. In the same document he announces that he considers all his father's rights to have descended upon him, and is prepared to maintain them. While prevented from exercising his rights in the Kingdom of Hanover, the Duke will, he states, bear the title of Duke of Cumberland and Prince of Brunswick-Luneburg. By doing so, however, he does not wish to be understood to be abdicating his claims to the succession in Hanover.

An Imperial order appeared in the German official gazette of Monday evening rescinding from that date the prohibition to export horses from Germany.

An international exhibition of all kinds of paper and pasteboard was opened at Berlin last Saturday. The exhibition, the first of the kind ever attempted, seems to be a complete success, and promises to promote effectually the manufacture of the important articles to which it is devoted. Five hundred and thirty-one firms, including most of the leading houses in Germany, Austria, England, France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Russia, Italy, Switzerland, and the United States have contributed towards the exhibition. Besides every variety of writing and printing paper, there are special departments for paper-hangings, paper blinds, and paper for building purposes, the general applicability of the article being demonstrated by a paper house erected in the courtyard, with tables, chairs, chandeliers, and stoves of the same material. The greater part of the space is set apart for machinery employed in the production of paper. The exhibition will be open till Sept. 1.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Considerable trouble, even an armed resistance, in Bosnia and Herzegovina is anticipated by the Austrian authorities. Arrangements have therefore been made for the advance of strong reinforcements to the frontier and to the neighbouring garrison towns.

SERVIA.

The Skuptschina on the 18th inst. unanimously voted the Budget for 1878 as introduced by the Government, with the exception of a few unimportant amendments. The Budget of the Minister of War is raised to 15,718,340 piastres on account of the increase in the staff of the officers in the standing army and the organisation of the militia to be stationed in the annexed territory. On Saturday the Skuptschina unanimously passed the bill with regard to the pensions and monetary assistance for invalids and the families of soldiers who fell in the late war.

On Tuesday the bills which have been passed by the Skuptschina received the signature of Prince Milan.

M. Ristics, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, addressing the members of the house on Wednesday, declared that Servia should be well satisfied with the result of the Berlin Congress. She had acquired more than her neighbours, and it was impossible to obtain further concessions from the Great Powers without risking everything.

The Assembly was closed on Thursday.

RUSSIA.

An Imperial ukase has been promulgated accepting the resignation of M. de Reutern, the Minister of Finance, on account of ill-health, and appointing Controller-General Greig as his successor. M. Szolski is appointed to the post of Controller-General, and is replaced in the post of Director of the Imperial Chancellery by M. Peretz, Secretary of State. The Emperor has sent an autograph letter to M. de Reutern conferring upon him the order of St. Andrew and acknowledging his valuable services to the State during his tenure of office, particularly in the construction of the extensive network of railways and in effecting the equilibrium of the Budget in place of the previously existing deficit, thus enabling the country to bear the heavy cost of the late war.

AMERICA.

A Reuter's telegram, dated New York, July 22, says:—"Mr. Bennett, the proprietor of the New York Herald, proposes to send the yacht Dauntless on a voyage of discovery to the Polar Seas, viâ Spitzbergen, in addition to the Pandora, which will attempt to reach the Pole by another route."

The American papers announce the death, on the 7th inst., of Mr. George Swett Appleton, of the firm of Messrs. D. Appleton and Co., publishers, of New York. Mr. Appleton was in his fifty-seventh year. His funeral on the 10th inst. was attended by representatives of most of the principal publishing firms in New York.

CANADA.

The Earl of Dufferin has ordered that the Canadian inland revenue laws, not inconsistent with special legislation regarding British Columbia, shall be declared in force in that colony.

The statements which have been made to the effect that Lord Dufferin has consented to serve for a further term as Governor-General of Canada are incorrect.

The Legislature of Quebec has been prorogued.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

We have news from Cape Town to July 2. An amnesty has been proclaimed and a free pardon offered to the Kaffirs who surrender themselves. The late Sandilli's sons and councillors have been captured. General Thesiger is in Cape Town, and Parliament has passed a vote of thanks to him, Commodore Sullivan, the Army, Navy, and colonial forces, for their services in quelling the rebellion on the frontier. General Thesiger was to proceed to the Transvaal in a fortnight.

Advices received at New York from St. Thomas, viâ Havannah, report a rising in Hayti, which was repressed.

The death is announced from Bombay of Sir Cowasjee Jehangeer Readymoney, justice of the peace for Bombay.

Intelligence from Cassabianca to the 12th inst. confirms the news of the Sultan of Morocco's recovery.

Sir Arthur Borton, the new Governor of Malta, was sworn in last Saturday, with the customary honours.

The Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations will open its sixth annual conference at Frankfort-on-the-Maine on Aug. 20.

Sir William Norcott, Lieutenant-Governor of the Island of Jersey, fired the first shot on Monday morning at the opening of the National Rifle Association's annual competition, which extended over four days, on Gorey-common.

The Postmaster-General has notified that the steam-ship Garonne (Oriental Steam Navigation Company) will leave Plymouth on Aug. 1 for Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney, and will carry letters, newspapers, &c., if addressed per Garonne viâ Plymouth, and posted in London on or before July 31.

Advices received at Lloyd's announce the loss of the Bombay steamer Europa, which came into collision with the steamer Staffa off Ferrol on the 17th inst., and sunk. The passengers and crew were saved.—The White Star steamer Adriatic, from Liverpool to New York, came into collision with the G. A. Peak, from London, on Sunday, during a dense fog; the latter sank, and the crew were all lost, with the exception of one man. The Adriatic, after embarking mails at Queenstown, resumed her voyage.

A treasure has been discovered in the ancient ducal palace of Andria, near Naples, which belongs at present to the Spagnoletti family. It consists of 400,000 ducats (2 fr. 25c. each) in gold. The present owner, in examining a plan of the building, noticed a door marked where none now exists. He had the wall pierced, and found an entrance into a chapel, in which was deposited a coffer containing the coin. It had been concealed there by the Duke d'Andria, when he emigrated to Germany, at the time of the French invasion of Italy.

The Foochow Herald hears that the high provincial officials of Fohkiew, the province of China in which Foochow is situated, have sent 500 dols. to the United States Consul at Foochow, of which 200 dols. are for distribution to the Medical Missionary Hospital for Women, under the direction of Miss Trask, M.D., and 300 dols. for the general hospital, under the control of Dr. Osgood. These liberal donations are from the private purses of the Viceroy, Tartar General, Acting Governor, and other officials of rank, who take an interest in foreign hospital work.

Mr. Blanchard Jerrold, corresponding member of the International Literary Society, in a letter from the Reform Club, on Saturday last, writes as follows:—"I am informed by the Société des Gens de Lettres de France that steps are being taken with the French Government to bring about a meeting of the representatives of Foreign Powers in Paris, in order to frame a uniform copyright convention to embrace all nations, in conformity with the resolution in favour of a world-wide copyright, which was carried at the recent Congress. It is proposed that the Copyright Convention shall, in all cases, be distinct and separate from Treaties of Commerce."

A Parliamentary return relating to the purchase of the Suez Canal shares contains the accounts presented to Parliament in pursuance of the Act, "showing the sums received from the Khedive of Egypt, the charge for principal and interest on the money raised in respect of the purchase of the above shares, and the amount of principal still outstanding." The total amount paid for the shares and expenses was £4,076,622 8s. 5d. The amount issued out of the Consolidated Fund for the payment of interest and principal on £4,000,000 of Exchequer Bonds have been—in the year ended March 31, 1877, £149,912 10s., and in the year ended March 31, 1878, £199,923 5s.; and the Exchequer Bonds remaining unredeemed amount to £3,929,200. The amount received from the Khedive in 1876-7 was £139,110 2s. 3d. The assumed amount of debt remaining unredeemed on Dec. 1, 1877, is £3,873,064 13s. 2d.

The Copenhagen correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, writing on the 19th inst., says:—"This morning Queen Sophia of Sweden arrived here, coming from Germany shortly after eleven o'clock, and was received by the Crown Prince and Crown Princess. The Queen was looking wonderfully well, and it is evident that her long sojourn at Heidelberg, under the care of Professor Friedrich, has had the most beneficial effect. Her Majesty only remained here the necessary time to have the train shunted on to another line, proceeding then to Elsinore, and only stopping at the station of Gyentophe, where the Queen of Denmark had arrived from Bernsdorff Castle to greet the illustrious traveller. According to a telegram just received, the Queen arrived at half-past one at Elsinore, and embarked at once for Sweden, under salute from the fortress of Cronborg. Her Majesty proceeds to Christiania, where she will join the King, who arrives there to-day, and where their Majesties will spend the summer."

POLITICAL.

Her Majesty has conferred the Order of the Garter upon the Earl of Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury. The following is a complete list of the Knights of the Garter:—The Duke of Abercorn, the Emperor of Austria, the Earl of Beaconsfield, the Duke of Beaufort, Leopold II., King of the Belgians, the Emperor of Brazil, the Duke of Brunswick, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Cleveland, the Duke of Connaught, Earl Cowley, Earl Cowper, the King of Denmark, the Duke of Devonshire, the Duke of Edinburgh, Earl Fitz-William, the Emperor of Germany, the Crown Prince of Germany, Earl Granville, the King of Greece, Earl Grey, the Earl of Harrowby, the Grand Duke of Hesse, Prince Christian of Holstein, the King of Italy, the Earl of Leicester, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Marlborough, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Shah of Persia, the King of Portugal, Prince William of Prussia, the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Marquis of Ripon, the Emperor of Russia, the Duke of Rutland, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, the Earl of Shaftesbury, the Duke of Somerset, Earl Spencer, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, the Duke of Sutherland, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Wellington, and the Duke of Westminster.

The Duke of Buccleuch will preside at a banquet to be given to the Prime Minister and the Marquis of Salisbury to-day (Saturday) at the Duke of Wellington's Riding School by supporters of the Government in the Lords and Commons.

The Earl of Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury are to receive the freedom of the City at the Guildhall just before they and the other members of the Ministry proceed to the Mansion House to dine with the Lord Mayor next Saturday.

Between 800 and 900 persons were at the first anniversary celebration in connection with the Southwark Liberal Association, held last Saturday afternoon in the Drill-Hall, Neckinger-road, Bermondsey, under the presidency of Mr. S. B. Bevington. Mr. Gladstone attended, and spoke at considerable length on the subject of Liberal organisation and in condemnation of the home and foreign policy of the Government. He said it was quite time that the people should be consulted as to the mode in which they were being governed, things being now done by the Government in the dark such as not the most despotic Government in Europe would dare to do. The Anglo-Turkish Convention he characterised as an insane covenant, and its ratification as an act of duplicity of which every Englishman should be ashamed. Turning to the subject of expenditure, the right hon. gentleman showed that, beginning with a balance in hand of over five millions, in four years the present Government had increased the ordinary expenditure by seven millions and a quarter. He hoped they would be induced to state fully what the country would have to pay for their late performances; and the people would have to say whether the credit of the Government was worth sustaining at the price.

Mr. Forster presided last Saturday at the annual dinner of the Cobden Club, held this year at the Ship Hotel, Greenwich, and, in proposing the principal toast, considered what Cobden would have felt in regard to the present position of England. His principal topic was the Convention with Turkey. The Government, he said, had made England a Continental Power, and it must not be supposed that protecting Turkey in Asia was the same thing as having a dominion in India. To make us have a frontier along the whole of the Asiatic territory of Turkey was, in his opinion, the most unwise and reckless act that any Govovernment had ever committed. The Queen had been forced by the Ministry to guarantee the worst possible Government that existed. In the House of Commons the Opposition were about to make what protest they could. They would not succeed; but, whatever was the majority against them, they would have done their duty. Mr. Rylands and Mr. Fawcett also spoke.

Lord Cranbrook was entertained at dinner on Wednesday evening in the little Kentish town from which he derives his title, and which is near his residence at Hemsted Park. Gentlemen of all shades of opinion united to congratulate the noble lord on his elevation to the Upper House. Mr. Beresford Hope, who presided, gave a sketch of the official career of the guest of the evening. Lord Cranbrook, in responding, dwelt upon his pleasant associations with the people of the county since he came to live among them, and expressed his satisfaction that in England politicians respected each other, whatever views they entertained.

Lord Granville took the chair at the annual meeting of members of the City Liberal Club, held at the club-house, Walbrook, on Thursday. At the conclusion of the annual meeting there was a special general meeting, in order to make certain alterations in the rules.

Mr. Bright, while expressing his full appreciation of the great honour which the Liberals of Birmingham proposed to pay him by publicly celebrating the twenty-first anniversary of his political connection with the town, writes to say that he is too much disturbed by recent and still pressing sorrow to enable him to join in any public ceremony in which he was expected to take a prominent part. In accordance with his wish, the celebration will not therefore take place during the coming recess.

The members of the Reform Club are about to place a portrait of the late Earl Russell in a conspicuous position in their house in Pall-mall. The cost is to be defrayed by a subscription among the members.

Major-General Charles J. Foster, C.B., will fill the vacancy in the Indian Council caused by the appointment of Sir Garnet Wolseley as Administrator of Cyprus.

Mr. Edward Wingfield has been appointed Assistant Under-Secretary in the Colonial Office, in the place of Mr. W. R. Malcolm.

At a meeting of the Leicester Conservatives on Monday night a resolution, moved by Colonel Burnaby, was unanimously passed expressing continued and entire confidence in the Government, and the greatest satisfaction at the wise and statesman-like way in which the British Plenipotentiaries had upheld the best interests of the nation, and for securing such modification in the Treaty of San Stefano as would promote the lasting peace of Europe. Similar resolutions have been passed at Birkenhead, Buckingham, and other places. The Dundee Town Council yesterday week, by 16 votes to 7, resolved to forward an address of congratulation to Lord Beaconsfield on the conclusion of the Treaty of Berlin. A resolution was passed yesterday week by the political committee of the Manchester Reform Club, stating that in the opinion of the committee the action of Ministers at Berlin and in taking over Cyprus did not serve the interests of Great Britain or of Europe; that they have lowered the dignity of the nation, set constitutional law at defiance, and deserved the censure of the country. They therefore called upon Liberal members to resist to the utmost the grant of supplies to carry out the policy of the Administration. An address to Lord Beaconsfield, signed by nearly 3000 inhabitants of Stonehouse and Devonport, was on Wednesday forwarded to the Premier, to express the satisfaction of the signatories at the maintenance of peace.

Sir H. Ferguson Davie has announced his intention to resign the representation of the Haddington Burghs. Lord W. Hay has offered himself for the seat in the Liberal interest, and it is stated that he will receive the undivided support of the party. The nomination of candidates has been fixed for Tuesday next. In the event of a contest the poll will take place on Saturday, Aug. 3.

Lord Rendlesham, M.P. for East Suffolk, has, in accordance with medical advice, given up his Parliamentary duties for the remainder of the Session, and has gone to Homburg.

The Liberals of Warrington, on Wednesday night, at a meeting especially called for the purpose, selected Mr. J. G. McMinnies as the future Liberal candidate for the borough.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Mr. Justice Hawkins and Mr. Justice Manisty will be the two Judges acting during the long vacation, which will begin on Aug. 10 and end on Oct. 24.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has adopted the report of a committee recommending that the necessary steps should be taken with a view to legislation for providing a remedy for floodings from rainfall.

Colonel Frank Bolton, the official examiner of the water supplied to the metropolis, reports that the condition of the Thames and the Lea was generally clear throughout June. The Thames was in a state of flood during the first few days.

The foundation-stone of the extension of the existing premises of the National Provincial Bank of England, in Bishopsgate-street, was laid on Tuesday by the Marquis of Ailesbury, one of the directors.

A lecture on Life, Health, and Disease was given on Wednesday evening in the smaller theatre of the Royal Polytechnic Institution by Mr. J. H. Pepper— Dr. B. Richardson presiding. The lecturer travelled over the whole ground of sanitation.

A meeting, largely attended, to protest against the foreign sugar bounties, was held on Wednesday evening at the Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road—under the presidency of Mr. C. T. Ritchie, M.P., who argued in favour of the imposition of a countervailing duty. Resolutions to this effect were adopted.

The ninth annual competition of the Society for the Promotion and Encouragement of Gardening in the City was held on Tuesday in the grounds of Finsbury-circus, the Lady Mayoress, in the absence of Princess Beatrice, distributing the prizes.

Mr. John B. Gough, the temperance lecturer, was welcomed on Tuesday at a garden party given by the National Temperance League in the College Gardens, Westminster Abbey. A meeting was held at which speeches were made, and Mr. and Mrs. Gough and several of their friends were afterwards conducted over Westminster Abbey by the Dean.

The Duke of Cambridge, as Ranger of Regent's Park, has undertaken to perform the ceremony of opening the new Gloucester-gate Bridge and approaches, which have been carried out by the Vestry of St. Pancras, from designs by Mr. W. Booth Scott, C.E., their chief surveyor. His Royal Highness has fixed Saturday next, Aug. 3, for the ceremony.

Sir Rutherford Alcock has presented fifty volumes to the Free Library in Bethnal-green (supported entirely by voluntary contributions), in response to the committee's appeal for 10,000 required to render the library efficient. The Earl of Derby, the Marquis of Lorne, Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P., Professor Fawcett, M.P., and others have also forwarded donations.

Mr. Mundella, M.P., one of the vice-presidents of the British and Foreign School Society, took the chair last Saturday evening at a meeting held in the Kindergarten College, Stockwell-road. He pointed out the great importance of this description of training, and rejoiced that the society was making efforts to extend the system in this country.

The Hackney guardians on Wednesday took into consideration the necessity for an enlargement of their union infirmary accommodation, and decided, by twelve to six, to purchase an adjacent plot of ground, known as the Castle House estate, at Homerton, the intention being to build upon the land an extensive infirmary for acute cases.

A meeting of the Mansion House committee formed to aid in the preparations for holding the show of the Royal Agricultural Society in the metropolis next year took place on Monday, when it was stated that of the £20,000 required as a guarantee fund £6300 had been received. It was determined to allot £3000 as a first instalment, to be given in prizes for foreign stock and produce.

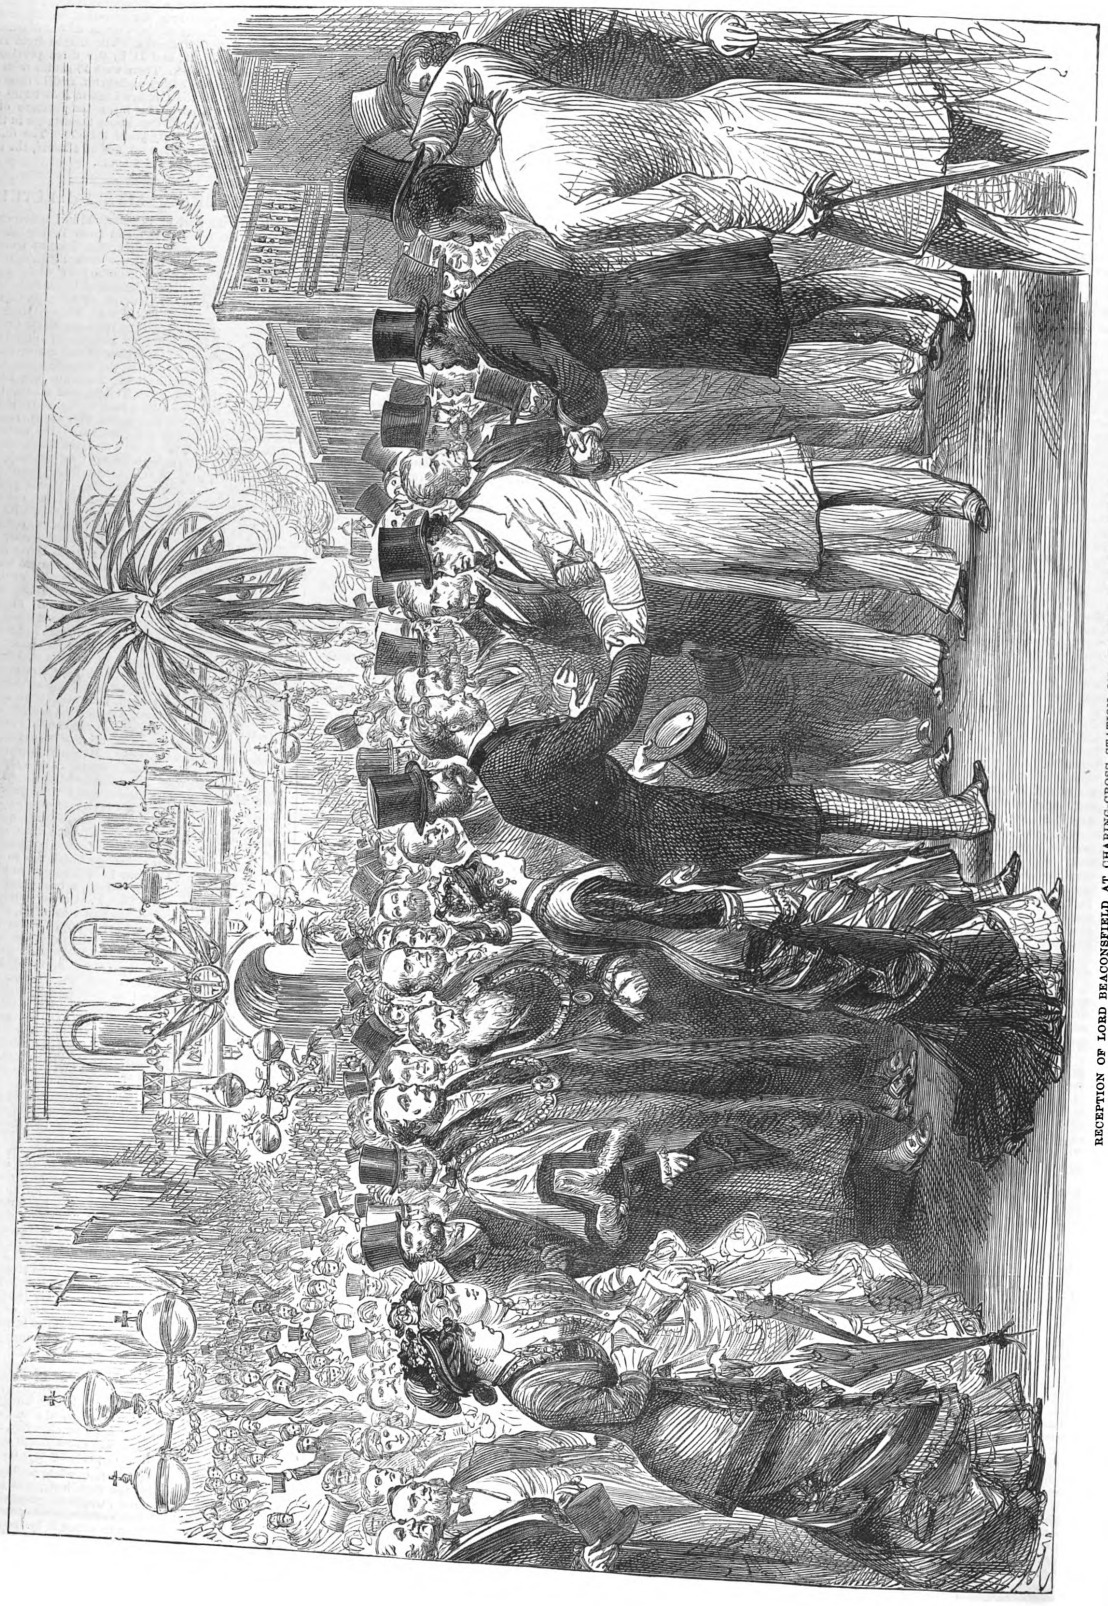
The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the third week in July was 76,570, of whom 38,068 were in workhouses, and 38,502 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1877, 1876, and 1875, these figures show a decrease of 363, 347, and 6700 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 607, of whom 373 were men, 187 women, and 47 children under sixteen.

At Wednesday's meeting of the School Board for London Sir Charles Reed, who presided, presented scholarships to three boys and two girls who had been successful out of about 250 candidates. The half-yearly account of receipts and expenditure was presented. At the end of a long discussion, it was resolved to open to the public on Saturday afternoons and summer evenings three of the playgrounds attached to the Board schools.

The annual report of the council of the Nightingale Fund states that twenty-nine probationer-nurses who had completed their training at St. Thomas's Hospital received their appointments last year, eight resigned, and seven were discharged as unsuitable for the work, leaving thirty-two probationers in residence at the commencement of the present year. The small training school at Highgate Infirmary has been closed, the arrangements proposed for its future conduct not being deemed sufficient.

The following gentlemen, having undergone the necessary examinations for the diploma, were admitted members of the Royal College of Surgeons at a meeting of the Court of Examiners on Tuesday:—Messrs. Henry Handford, Henry Joy Clarke, Bernard James Guillemard, Craig Dixon, George Herbert Rowe, Gerald Edward Coleman, Walter Henry Cheetham, Warwick Long Childs, Hector Leak, Miles Millbourne Williams, Arthur Albert Mouritz, Robert Jones, Alfred Swann, George Jordan Lloyd, Ernest William Walter, Arthur Jackson, Samuel James Rennie, Pershouse William Leslie Langley, and Charles Henry Keep.

At the meeting of the shareholders of the London and Brighton Railway on Wednesday, at which Mr. S. Laing, M.P., presided, the report was adopted. Mr. W. S. Allen, M.P., moved a resolution requesting the directors to discontinue excursion-trains on Sunday and to decline to supply special Sunday trains to the National Sunday League. Mr. Laing said that the company were only meeting a public demand; and as to Sunday labour, the traffic by trains did not cause so much work as travelling by steam-boats, omnibuses, and private conveyances. Out of the 9000 proprietors of the company only 1125 have sent in proxies in favour of the resolution moved by Mr. Allen. The resolution was rejected by a large majority.



There were 2364 births and 1787 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 6, and the deaths 123, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. Whooping-cough continues to be severely epidemic, and caused 106 of the deaths registered last week, against 108 and 85 in the two preceding weeks, exceeding the corrected weekly average by 60. The high mortality of the week is due to diarrhœa, from which there were 339 deaths. The deaths from smallpox, which had been 38, 19, and 11 in the three previous weeks, rose again to 19 last week. There were 13 deaths from measles, 21 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, and 19 from different forms of fever. In the Greater London 2853 births and 2064 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 66·8 deg., and was 4·2 deg. above the average in the corresponding week of the sixty years 1814-73. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 56·4 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 112·2 hours.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S RETURN.

The arrival of the Earl of Beaconsfield in London on Tuesday week, when he reached England from Berlin after the termination of the Congress upon the Eastern Question, was greeted with a popular ovation. The Prime Minister, with the Marquis of Salisbury, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and Lady Salisbury, landed at Dover from the double-hulled steam-boat Calais-Douvres, at twenty minutes before three in the afternoon, received an address from the Dover Mayor and Corporation, and one from the Dover Constitutional Association, and proceeded to London by special train. Sir Edward Watkin, M.P., Chairman of the South-Eastern Railway Company, and Mr. Shaw, the Superintendent, were with the train. The Charing-cross Terminus was magnificently decorated for this occasion. The flags of all the Great European Powers, with the Union Jack in the centre rising highest, were arranged by Mr. Edgington over the entrance archway, both inside and outside of the station. The arrival platform, and the opposite platform on which seats were ranged for the company of privileged spectators, were adorned with about ten thousand plants of various kinds, supplied by Mr. John Wills, florist, of South Kensington. Palms and ferns were placed at the base, with geraniums, fuchsias, calceolarias, and other bright flowers; beds of green lycopods, with taller plants rising from their midst, and a profusion of roses trained up the lamp-posts and pillars, or festooned across, which had a beautiful effect. The special train from Dover came in about ten or twelve minutes before five. Its arrival was awaited by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London, wearing their robes and badges of office, and by a large assembly of ladies and gentlemen of rank, including several of the Cabinet Ministers, the Dukes of Northumberland, Sutherland, Abercorn, and Beaufort, many peers and members of Parliament, with their wives and daughters. Lord Henry Lennox acted as marshal of the reception; and the Marchioness of Abergavenny, with Lady Northcote, wife of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P., personally took care of Lord Beaconsfield as soon as he had received the official greeting from the Lord Mayor. The Prime Minister was dressed in a white overcoat, and seemed not more fatigued than most men of his age would be after a long journey on a hot summer day. He was kept some time shaking hands with his numerous friends. Among those who first approached him were Lady Burdett-Coutts and the aged Sir Moses Montefiore, who blessed him for the provision made by the late Congress to ensure better treatment of the Jews in Servia and Roumania. There was a good deal of cheering, waving of hats and handkerchiefs and fans, as his Lordship, with the Marquis of Salisbury, Lady Abergavenny, and Lady Northcote, entered the carriage which was to convey them to Downing-street. This was Lady Abergavenny's own carriage, and it was followed by others, a brougham conveying Mr. Montagu Corry and Mr. P. Currie, private secretaries, having charge of the Treaty just concluded, and two carriages with Lady Salisbury and her family. There was an immense throng of people outside the Charing-cross station, in West Strand, Trafalgar-square, and Whitehall; and the windows, balconies, and house-tops were occupied by hundreds of spectators. The Premier and the Foreign Secretary were enthusiastically cheered as they passed round to Whitehall. At the fronts of the Admiralty, the Horse Guards, the Home Office, and the Colonial and India Offices, in Whitehall, and the Foreign Office in Downing-street, many of the gentlemen employed in those Government departments turned out in honour of the First Minister. The buildings in Downing-street were draped with crimson cloth, and bouquets of flowers were showered from the windows above. Lord Salisbury alighted at the door of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's official residence, while Lord Beaconsfield entered his own, that of the First Lord of the Treasury, at the top of the street, in which stood many Conservative members of Parliament. A bouquet of flowers sent by the Queen was received by Lord Beaconsfield on alighting from the carriage. Having entered the house and gone up stairs, he presently appeared at a window, and thanked his friends for this reception. He observed that Lord Salisbury and he had brought home peace, but peace, he hoped, with honour, which would satisfy their Sovereign, and be for the welfare of their country. Nearly the same words had been used by his Lordship in his reply to the Mayor of Dover two hours before. On Thursday week, as reported in our last, he addressed the House of Lords. On Monday he waited upon her Majesty at Windsor Castle, and was then and there invested with the Garter, particulars of which are set forth in our Court news of this week. Such honours have been conferred upon Lord Beaconsfield, to reward his labours in the settlement of the Eastern Question.

Some experiments with guns of different calibre were carried out at Shoeburyness on Wednesday, in presence of the Secretary for War and a number of officers connected with the Artillery and Engineers. In the course of the morning the 80-ton gun was fired at an elevation of 10 deg., and the gruze of the first shell was exactly four miles and a half, the ricochet carrying the shot probably two miles further.

Mr. Walter Grey Weston, while walking through Wepre Park, Hawarden, on the 19th inst., was attacked by a bull. Mr. Grey, a one-armed gentleman, possessing great strength, dodged the animal, but eventually was tossed. As he fell the bull rushed at him, but he seized it by the nose-ring. To this he firmly clung for two hours, during which time the bull endeavoured to gore him. He was then found in a pitiable condition, covered with blood, and frighfully lacerated.

THE INSURRECTION IN CRETE: SKIRMISHING IN THE MOUNTAINS.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The recriminatory scene which closed in rather too lively a fashion the full-dress debate on the Congress initiated by the Prime Minister may almost be said to have hung like a pall over the subsequent sittings of their Lordships. No apology is therefore needed for returning to the eventful discussion of Thursday week. The illustrious assemblage of Princesses and Peeresses gradually became less and less when the Earl of Beaconsfield had, in clarion tones, brought his prolonged speech to an end with the rounded phrase that "ours is an Empire of Liberty, of Truth, and of Justice." Earl Granville having with practised skill referred to the merits and demerits of the Berlin Treaty, his voice actually rising to a loud pitch and being perfectly audible when he deprecated the pre-arrangement by which the English Plenipotentiaries agreed not to offer serious objection to the retrocession of Bessarabia to Russia, the noble Earl devoted himself for the most part to an adverse criticism of the Anglo-Turkish Convention. Lord Derby had all the evening been biding his time, with a bundle of notes in his hand. The noble Earl rose directly Lord Granville resumed his seat, and, from his place below the gangway on the Ministerial side, poured a formidable broadside into his late colleagues. First, however, Lord Derby congratulated the Cabinet on preventing war, and felt bound to agree for the most part with the rearrangement of Turkey in Europe, albeit he could not quite see how Lord Beaconsfield came to the conclusion that there had been no "partition," remembering that "we give some portion of Turkey to Servia and Montenegro, two provinces go to Austria, we take an island for ourselves, and we give some portion of Armenia to Russia," not to mention Bessarabia. The main front of the noble Earl's offence, however, was his revelation as to the acquisition of Cyprus. Lord Derby calmly and deliberately asserted that the real reason for which he left the Ministry was the decision come to that it was necessary to seize the island of Cyprus and a port on the Syrian coast, with or without the Sultan's consent, in order to secure a naval station in the eastern part of the Mediterranean. This statement fell like a bombshell among the members of the Government. The cool-headed analyses of the reasons for and against the present acquirement of Cyprus by pacific means, and the common-sense objections to burdening the United Kingdom with the protectorate of Asiatic Turkey, were left to sink deeply into the minds of the readers of the noble Earl's able speech. The one thing for Ministers to do was to deny with emphasis the correctness of Lord Derby's statement with regard to the intention of the Government to forcibly seize Cyprus last March. The Marquis of Salisbury was the mouthpiece of the Ministerial denial; and the Foreign Secretary had recourse for the nonce to the bitter vocabulary used by him when Lord Cranborne. His Lordship bluntly declared the explanation in question was "not true." Whereupon Lord Derby rose and called the noble Marquis to order, as did Earl Granville likewise. "Not correct" then said the irate Foreign Secretary, not only for himself, but also on behalf of the Prime Minister, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary for India, the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Home Secretary, and the Lord President of the Council. In the heat of debate the Marquis of Salisbury had the bad taste to compare the revelations of Lord Derby to those of Titus Oates, and did not at all strengthen his answer by the vituperative nature of his retorts. In reply, Lord Derby confined himself to measured language, insisting on the correctness of his statements. The memoranda which the noble Earl took at the time, moreover, confirmed him in his opinion. Lord Salisbury would have it, however, that Lord Derby's recollection was inaccurate. The debate was carried on by Lord Northbrook, Lord Cranbrook, Lord Kimberley, Lord Napier and Ettrick, and then dropped.

After the storm, a calm. Friday week was chiefly noticeable for the disinclination or inability of Lord Salisbury to give Lord Granville any fresh information as to Cyprus; and for the second reading of the Scottish Roads and Bridges Bill in spite of the Earl of Rosebery's well-meant effort to refer it to a Select Committee. Monday was devoted to the giving of Royal Assent by Commission to a large number of measures; to the interchange of courtesies between Earl Granville and the Lord Chancellor as to improving the ventilation of the House; to a considerate reply on the part of Lord Cranbrook to Lord Napier and Ettrick's inquiry as the Madras and Bombay Famine; and to the pushing through Committee of the Scottish Roads and Bridges Bill. On Tuesday Lord Beaconsfield (wearing his blushing honours with characteristic coolness) brought up a Message from her Majesty requesting their Lordships to concur in making a further provision for the Duke of Connaught on the occasion of his marriage with Princess Louise of Prussia. Various measures were advanced a stage; and Lord Fortescue's motion for returns relating to endowed schools was agreed to. Lord Henniker thanked Lord Truro for calling attention to the improper stowage of twenty tons of gunpowder on board the ship Pereora in the Thames. Cyprus was then brought on the carpet again, this time by the Earl of Camperdown, who wished to know how much surplus revenue England would have to pay Turkey for the bargain. Earl Granville and Lord Hammond joined in depreciating the value of the island; but Lord Beaconsfield could not be prevailed upon to emerge from his cloak of mystery. Secrecy was absolutely necessary in the acquirement of Cyprus, he boldly declared; and at a proper time, when the policy of the Government should be directly challenged, he would be ready to defend the action of the Cabinet in entering into the Anglo-Turkish Convention. The Lord Chancellor enlightened Lord Cardwell as to the administration of the law in Cyprus; but the explanation did not satisfy Lord Selborne; and the sitting closed with a conversation on the Chefoo Convention, in the course of which Lord Salisbury informed Lord Aberdeen that it had been ratified, with the exception of two provisions.

Their Lordships on Thursday sat for about an hour and a half, in the course of which time they agreed to an Address, proposed by the Earl of Beaconsfield and seconded by Earl Granville, in answer to her Majesty's Message, thanking her Majesty for her gracious communication, and assuring her Majesty of their Lordship's support and attention to her wishes.

COMMONS.

The Marquis of Hartington's resolution is generally regarded as the one remaining obstacle to that exodus of hon. members from town which heralds the close of the Session. His Lordship prepared the House for the Resolution at the beginning of the sitting yesterday week, which was mainly devoted to the improvement in Committee of the Government Cattle Plague Bill. The following are the terms of the motion to be submitted (as arranged by the Chancellor of the Exchequer) on Monday next by the Leader of the Opposition:—

That while this House has learned with satisfaction that the troubles which have arisen in the East of Europe have been terminated by the Treaty of Berlin without further recourse to arms, and rejoices in the extension of the liberty and self-government of some of the populations of European Turkey, this House regrets that it has not been found practicable to deal in a more satisfactory manner with the claims of the kingdom of Greece and the Greek subjects of the Porte; that by the assumption of an absolute guarantee of the integrity of the remaining territories of Turkey in Asia the military liabilities of this country have been unnecessarily extended; that the undefined engagements entered into by her Majesty's Government in respect of the better administration of those provinces have imposed heavy responsibilities on the State, whilst no sufficient means have been indicated for securing their fulfilment; and that such engagements have been entered into and responsibilities incurred without the previous knowledge of Parliament.

Dr. Kenealy, amid laughter from the Opposition benches, was the first to come to the rescue of the Government on Monday last with notice of a motion expressing satisfaction with the policy of her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries at Berlin. But it was reserved to Mr. D. Plunket to announce the amendment, of which it is believed the Government approves:—

As an amendment to the Marquis of Hartington's proposed resolutions, to move to leave out from the first word, "That," to the end of the question, in order to insert the words, "An humble address be presented to her Majesty, thanking her Majesty for communicating to this House the Treaty of Berlin, the protocols of the Congress of Berlin, and the Convention between Great Britain and Turkey; assuring her Majesty that this House has learnt with deep satisfaction the termination of the late unhappy war and the conclusion of a treaty between the Great Powers of Europe; and expressing an earnest hope that the arrangements made and sanctioned by her Majesty's Government may, under the blessing of Providence, avail to preserve peace, to ameliorate the condition of large populations in the East, and to maintain the interests of this Empire."

A variety of other matters, such as the alleged firing at an English man-of-war's boat by the Russians in Turkish waters, the case of Charles Marvin, and the date for the submission of the supplementary estimates, having received more or less satisfactory answers from Ministers, the House went into Committee again on the savoury Cattle Plague Bill, hon. members remaining beyond midnight to arrive at the fifty-sixth clause, which was ultimately agreed to.

On Tuesday the Chancellor of the Exchequer was not to be moved from his reticence regarding the Anglo-Turkish Treaty and the annexation of Cyprus. Sir Stafford Northcote was not wanting in alacrity, however, in bringing up the Queen's Message announcing the forthcoming marriage of the Duke of Connaught, and anticipating the readiness with which the House would make a further provision for his Royal Highness. True to his mission, Sir Charles Dilke gave notice of an amendment adverse to the motion on this subject which the Chancellor of the Exchequer said he would make on Thursday. Sir Bryan O'Loghlen having accepted the office of Attorney-General in Victoria, Mr. Sullivan moved that a new writ should be issued for the county of Clare; but, at the suggestion of Sir Stafford Northcote, the matter was referred to a Select Committee, as being a "more solemn" proceeding—though it is hard to see where the solemnity is to come in unless the members of the Committee are to be composed of Bishops in Convocation. There ensued a long debate on the motion of Mr. Gladstone—"That a humble address be presented to her Majesty praying her Majesty graciously to give directions that all proceedings which may be taken by the authorities under the Indian Vernacular Press Act be reported to the Secretary of State and laid before Parliament from time to time." The right hon. gentleman took great objection to the sudden and summary fashion in which the Marquis of Salisbury had telegraphed to India approval of the Viceroy's measure for controlling the native press. Mr. O'Donnell censured the measure in a strongly worded amendment. The objections of Mr. Gladstone met with the support of Sir George Campbell, Mr. Fawcett, Sir H. James, and other hon. members; but the motion was opposed by Mr. A. Gathorne Hardy, by Mr. E. Stanhope in a remarkably good speech, and by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, among others. There was a majority of 56 against Mr. Gladstone—208 against 152—but some hon. members explained that they voted by mistake against the resolution of the right hon. gentleman.

On Wednesday such good progress was made in Committee with the Cattle Plague Bill that Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson expressed a hope that all the clauses might be passed on Friday.

Considerable sensation was created on Thursday by the presentation of a petition by Mr. Cowen demanding the arrest and impeachment of Lord Beaconsfield. The hon. member stated that it emanated from a number of gentlemen associated together in Manchester, Bolton, Stockport, Macclesfield, Madston, Oldham, and London. The petitioners reviewed the events that have taken place in the East of Europe during the last twenty years, and charged the noble Earl with high crimes and misdemeanours demanding exceptional punishment. The petition was laid on the table, notwithstanding an objection made by Mr. C. Lewis to its reception, the Speaker declaring that there was nothing to justify its rejection. The Committee on Elections would, however, take cognisance of it. On the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the House go into Committee to consider the Queen's Message relating to the approaching marriage of the Duke of Connaught, Sir C. Dilke moved as an amendment—That the consideration of the Message be deferred until the production of certain documents having relation to former grants to Royal Princes. The hon. Baronet argued that no application for increased annuity had ever been made in these cases except with a distinct view of providing for the succession to the Throne, and on each occasion a distinct declaration was made that that was the case. The only precedent that had been made was that of 1873, when a further allowance was made to the Duke of Edinburgh on his marriage; and this precedent, he added, was not binding on those who, like himself, had opposed that grant. He further submitted that, even if there had been precedents in former reigns, they would not be applicable, because, by the passing of the Private Estates Bill in the absence of information as to the landed private property possessed by the Crown, the former state of things was wholly changed. Sir W. Lawson seconded the amendment. The Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that the proposal he should have to make in Committee would be of the same kind as that made in the case of the Duke of Edinburgh. With regard to the question of precedent, he denied that the argument in the Duke of Edinburgh's case rested entirely on precedent. On the contrary, in that and the present instance the argument rested rather on the state of things that now existed, there being a wide difference between the circumstances of the present day and those which prevailed in the days of George II. and George III. In former times the Crown might be said to have contracted with the Parliament to carry on the Government of the country, and the charges on the Civil List were of a very different character to those of the present day. It should be remembered that her Majesty was in receipt of £150,000 less than George IV. received for precisely the same purposes, while the various arrangements since made with the Crown relative to various hereditary revenues had been more to the advantage of the nation than to the Crown. It would be with no definite reference to the succession that a proposal would be made to-day; but, because the Duke of Connaught stood on the same footing as his brother the Duke of Edinburgh, because he had secured a hold on the affections of the people, and because he was about to contract a marriage which was not only popular in the country, but which would necessitate an increase in the amount of the allowance hitherto granted to him. Lord R. Montagu supported the motion to go into Committee. Mr. Anderson took the contrary view, and asked why some of the Royal Princes had not been sent to represent her Majesty at the funerals of the King of Italy and the Queen of Spain, adding that, instead of going there, they were immersed in their own pleasures. Mr. Gladstone said it was well known that her Majesty had not sufficient private means to make the requisite provision for the members of her family. He should support the Government in the proposal they were about to make, as one in strict conformity with the precedents of the present reign, beyond which it was impossible, from the different circumstances of the times, that there could be precedents. The object of the arrangement made with her Majesty was to get rid of the system which appertained to previous reigns, when the Crown accumulated debts which were from time to time made the subject of applications to Parliament, and which were often the cause of much scandal, and always of great annoyance to the Sovereign, who had to come to the door of the House of Commons almost in the character of a mendicant. Mr. Taylor gave notice "that, on the second reading of the bill, he would move its rejection." The House having divided, the numbers were—For going into Committee, 320; against, 33. The House then went into Committee, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that a grant of £10,000 per annum be made to his Royal Highness on his marriage, and that in the event of the Princess surviving him she should be allowed out of the Consolidated Fund £6000 a year during her life. The Marquis of Hartington having seconded the motion, it was agreed to. The House afterwards went into Committee upon the Intermediate Education (Ireland) Bill.

THE INSURGENTS OF CRETE.

There are conflicting accounts of the position and the disposition of the Greek insurgent bands which still withhold submission to the Turkish Government, in this large and important island of the Eastern Mediterranean. The interior of Crete is mountainous, and it is in the highland districts, more especially in Sphakia, overlooking the rich plain of Apocorona, and on the northern slopes of Mount Ida, that the Christian population, a hardy race of peasants, shepherds, and goatherds, have long maintained their struggle against Moslem rule. The inhabitants, however, of the upland district of Selinos, which forms the south-west corner of the island, are most zealous Mohammedans and devoted subjects of the Sultan. Those of Kissamos, at the north-west extremity of Crete, are mostly of the Greek race; and here, being favoured with easier access to the Continent of Europe, and possessing a fertile soil, the natives have attained a fair degree of material comfort and prosperity. The whole island, besides Canea, the seat of Turkish provincial government, is divided into four districts, each administered by a Mutessarif or Prefect, with thirteen subdistricts, each under a Kaimakam; and it is provided, by a constitutional charter which the Sultan granted some years ago, that these persons in official authority shall be Christian where the majority of the people are Christian. In the Cretan General Assembly, which meets once a year at Canea, four members being elected by the inhabitants of each of the subdistricts, there has usually been a small majority of Christians; but this Assembly has never yet possessed any real legislative power. It cannot be denied that, in spite of the laws formally promulgated by the advice of Great Britain and other Powers friendly to the Turkish Empire, the Greeks of Crete are still denied their fair share of civil liberty; but the abuses constantly perpetrated in collecting the taxes are their worst grievance. At the same time, the rights and interests of the Mussulman population, which amounts to nearly one fourth of the whole, estimated in all at a quarter of a million, of people of different races and creeds, ought not to be entirely sacrificed. This portion of the Cretans is chiefly to be found in and around the towns of the seacoast, and comprises the more wealthy and influential classes. The problem of securing an equitable and efficient common government for Mohammedans and Greek Christians alike seems to be one of the greatest difficulty.

The Flag Officer's Greenwich Hospital pension of £150 a year, vacant by the death of Admiral Sir William Hall, K.C.B., has been given to Admiral John L. Stokes.

In the account given last week of the Blackpool Winter Gardens, the cost of the buildings should have been stated at £100,000, not £10,000, as printed. Mr. T. Mitchell, of Manchester and Oldham, is the architect of those buildings.

The Midland Railway Company have improved on the plan adopted on the London and Brighton Railway. They intend to supply travellers on their system with iced water gratis. The passengers by the Midland line have merely to make a request for iced water at any of the company's own refreshment-rooms, and a glass of the cool, refreshing beverage is supplied.

The committee of the Liverpool Art-Club propose to open an exhibition of the works of Josiah Wedgwood during the next session. To make this exhibition a useful representation of Wedgwood's productions, it has been thought advisable, so far as it is possible, to exhibit the specimens in the order in which they are described by Wedgwood himself, in the various editions of his catalogue. A committee, consisting of Messrs. William Bartlett, A. H. Brodrick, Charles T. Gatty, and T. Shadford Walker, has been appointed to carry out this plan, and they will feel much obliged if those who are collectors or possessors of old Wedgwood ware would give them some general description of the works they possess, and which they would be willing to exhibit. Communications may be addressed to Mr. C. T. Gatty, at the Art-Club, Myrtle-street, Liverpool, who is compiling the catalogue, and who will gladly give any further information.

The Duke of Cambridge inspected yesterday week the whole of the troops stationed at Portsmouth.—His Royal Highness, with Lord Napier of Magdala and other distinguished visitors, arrived at Aldershott on Wednesday, in order to witness a review of the troops previous to the departure of the reserves and the regiments and corps brought here at the beginning of the month for the summer drills. The force, paraded in the Long Valley at ten o'clock, included over 18,000 officers and men, about 3000 horses, and 48 guns. The three provisional battalions of volunteers, doing duty there for a week, were present. The reserves in the ranks were 3178 of the first class Army Reserve, and 1917 Militia Reserve. After the march-past the men were divided for a sham fight. The troops, who had been drenched by heavy rain in the early part of the day, returned to quarters about two o'clock.—The 3rd Middlesex Militia was disembodied last Saturday. Its strength at Aldershott consisted of twenty-five officers and 682 men. The 1st Middlesex Militia, consisting of thirty officers and 688 men, begins its annual training at Aldershott this week. The regiment is encamped on Rushmoor-hill.—An official notice has been issued from the War Office that the services of the Army and Militia Reserves will not be required after the 31st inst. Orders have been received at Devonport Dockyard for the weekly discharge of hands until the staff shall be reduced by 1100 men. The reserves in Dublin, as in many other garrisons, were disbanded on Wednesday.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I read in the daily papers of Tuesday:—

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by Colonel Clarke and Mr. Knowles, left Paris by a special train at eleven o'clock on Sunday night, and, travelling vâ Boulogne and Folkestone, reached London at 7.10 yesterday morning, the entire journey being completed in eight hours and ten minutes. Mr. John Shaw, manager and secretary of the South-Eastern Railway Company, received the Prince on his arrival at Boulogne; and the passage was made to Folk stone by the company's special steamer Victoria. Sir Edward Watkin, M.P., chairman of the company, was present on the arrival of his Royal Highness at Charing-cross. The Prince and Princess of Wales attended the performance at Her Majesty's Theatre yesterday evening.

The extract would not have been complete without the mention of our Prince having been able to go to the Opera on Monday night; and you will observe that H.R.H. had had, besides, an entire day at his disposal after the train landed him at Charing-cross. Let me see. Referring to a certain mental diary of mine, I find that at eight o'clock on a Sunday morning in the month of July, 1838, I left some Stairs, near London Bridge, in the steam-boat Harlequin, bound for Boulogne. We were fain to take the sea route, as one of our company was an invalid, and all the inside places in the Royal Mail to Dover were booked for a week to come, and the funds of the family of which the present writer was one did not "run" to a postchaise.

We entered the port of Boulogne shortly before midnight. Put up at the Hotel de Something or another. Slept tant bien que mal. Fleas. At nine on Monday morning we left Boulogne in the intérieur of one of the diligences of MM. Lafitte Caillard. Six horses. Rope harness. Postillion with a pig-tail and jack boots, each of which was big enough to contain one of the Forty Thieves. Beggars swarming along the dusty road all the way to Montreuil. They had a special song, these mendicants, set to a whining tune, which haunts me to this day:—

Charité!
S'il vous plait,
Petit morceau de pain anglais.
Charité!
S'il vous plait,
Donnez petit sou Anglais.

Lunched at Montreuil, that ugly fortified town, if I remember aright. Dined at five p.m. at Abbeville. Table-d'hôte dinner, a very humorous performance. Five francs a head. We had scarcely finished the soup and bouilli before the conducteur appeared at the door yelling "Allons, Messieurs et Mesdames! En voiture! en voiture!" Ten minutes' grace, purchased by a general contribution for the conductor's pourboire. Jolted and "wobbled" about all night. At foot of a heavy hill compelled to alight and walk for three quarters of a mile by moonlight. Café au lait, black bread and no butter at four in the morning at Beauvais, I think. At ten o'clock, St. Denis. At twelve, noon, on Tuesday (just in time to hear the cannon in the Garden of the Palais Royal fired by means of a burning-glass), arrival in the yard of the Messageries of MM. Lafitte Caillard, hard by the Place des Victoires. That is how we used to go to Paris forty years ago.

If contemporary caricatures are any index to the state of public opinion, the French are still very sore with respect to the occupation of Cyprus by this country. The Charivari has been full of spiteful cartoons bearing on the ethics of our latest Mediterranean acquisition. A little urchin tells his mother that a fierce dog ran at him in the street, but that a passing Englishman protected him. "Vraiment," observes his fond pa, "How much did the Englishman make you pay for protecting him?" A gentleman, hemmed in by a crowd, discovers that he has lost his watch. "On vient de me Chyprer ma montre," he cries. "Chiper," in Parisian argot, means to filch. Again, the ingenious artist "Cham" depicts Britannia as an elderly female in spectacles, and with very prominent front teeth, sustaining the principal part in the opera of "La Reine de Chypre." But Cyprus herself, symbolised by the Paphian Venus, sits in the front row of the stalls and whistles disparagingly into a key. Never mind. We have got Cyprus. Beati possidentes.

Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury are now K.G.s. If old Roger de Hovenden the Chronicler be right, it must have been in Cyprus that one of the earliest Chapters of the Garter was held, full a hundred and fifty years before the supposed institution of the Order by Edward III. Hear Roger: "On the arrival of Queen Berengaria in Sicily, King Richard, in honour of his betrothment, established a fraternity of twenty-four knights, who pledged themselves to the King to scale the walls of Acre, and that they might be known at the storming of that city the King appointed them to wear each a blue band of leather on the left leg. They were known as the Knights of the Blue Thong, and they were placed under the invocation of St. George, the tutelary saint of Aquitaine." What becomes after this of the pretty legend of the Countess of Salisbury and her misadventure at the Court ball?

The London Season may now be considered as moribund. It is dying hard; but with a few more gasps and struggles its feverish existence will come to a close. Do you feel inclined to moralise on the many wickednesses of the "Season" now departing—over its manifold naughtinesses, its more or less heinous and revolting scandals? I do not feel inclined to moralise about anything just now (it is too hot); still I cannot help thinking that many rigid moralists who have most vehemently denounced the growing turpitude of the age would do well to study the following shrewd little passage in the Vicountess Combermere's "Our Peculiarities," a collection of essays, which I have just been reading with equal pleasure and edification. "Although a very aged actor, Hypocrisy never excelled in genteel comedy so successfully and constantly as at present, while outward semblances are so necessary to keep us up to the regulation standard of Society." This was written in 1863; but does the "aged actor" show any signs of falling off in genteel comedy in 1878? I met Mr. Mawworm at a garden party last Tuesday, and I hear from the highest authority that Mr. Tartuffe (disguised with a flaxen wig and a false nose) has attended no less than six representations of the "Pink Dominos" at the Criterion Theatre.

The accomplished grande dame de par le monde whose "Peculiarities" I have just quoted has been enthroned in the stalls of the Theatre Royal Society these ever so many years. How many performances of the "aged actor" in that very genteelest of comedies, Hypocrisy, must not her ladyship have witnessed! Ah! if the relict of the heroic Field Marshal Viscount Combermere would only, after exhausting her survey of "Our Peculiarities," favour us with a few of her own Reminiscences. Lady Combermere must have been on familiar terms with the World, "and all its motley rout—Church, Army, Physic, Law"—from the first decade of the present century. She must have seen everybody and known everybody worth knowing in England and on the Continent since the days of the Regency; and her "Reminiscences" would be as interesting as the autobiography of Mary Granville Mrs. Delany. That last named wondrous old gentlewoman, so intelligently edited by Lady Llanover, is to me the English Saint Simon.

I may be wrong—I daresay that I am wrong; in fact, my family and friends are never tired of telling me that I generally am wrong; but I cannot help thinking that the St. Paul's Cathedral Decoration Committee will perpetrate a gigantic blunder if they are allowed to carry out their recently elaborated project for spending between forty and fifty thousand pounds in lining the interior of the dome of St. Paul's with a colossal veneer of mosaic work. The experiment is, in the first place, far too vast to be undertaken by English art-workmen, who have little experience as mosaicists; and it would be scandalous to have to pay some £25,000 to a Venetian or Florentine firm to do that which we are unable to do ourselves. Even in the case of an English house taking the contract, they would be compelled to engage troops of foreign workmen. In the next place, while there is not one word to be said against the selection of two such admirable artists as Mr. J. E. Millais, R.A., and Mr. E. J. Poynter, R.A., to prepare the cartoons for the proposed decoration, I hold it to be highly injudicious that they should be handicapped by having to adhere more or less rigorously to a design for the embellishment of the dome prepared by a very talented but very over-rated artist, the late Mr. Alfred Stevens, whose monument of the Duke of Wellington in the metropolitan basilica fails to fill me with ecstatic admiration: sinning, as it does, from a dozen points of view against the proprieties of architectural perspective.

In the last place, I find that the subjects for illustration by Messrs. Millais and Poynter are to be drawn from the Book of Revelation. I never, advisedly, allude to theological matters in this column; but I think that I shall find a good many readers who will agree with me when I say that the two eminent Royal Academicians had better leave the Apocalypse alone. The Theme is too awfully mysterious to warrant any attempt to popularise it pictorially; and, besides, when Messrs. Millais and Poynter have exercised their imaginative faculties and their graphic powers to the utmost, of what avail will be the outlay of genius and skill when the immense altitude of the dome must render three fourths of the designs invisible? All that will be seen from the pavement will be a blurred haze of gold and staring colour. If the Decoration Committee desire to know how the dome of a cathedral may be most fitly embellished with mosaic, let them go to Constantinople and study the colossal Cherubim on the great cupola of the Mosque of St. Sophia.

Mem: From the dome of St. Sophia there is a constant pattering down of fragments of disintegrating mosaic; and the Turkish custodians of the mosque are always ready to sell a handful of parti-coloured tesseræ to an inquisitive Frank for half a medjidié or so. I used to keep on a table at home a bonbonnière full of these relics of the art of mosaic as practised in the reign of the Emperor Justinian; but a female member of my household being afflicted with a cough, mistook the pretty little semi-transparent cubes for jujubes; and it was only at the nick of time that I prevented her from swallowing the five-thousandth part of one of the quill feathers of an archangel's wing in mosaic thirteen hundred years old. But, looking at the dampness of our climate, the mosaic in St. Paul's might begin to patter down piecemeal very shortly after it had been put up.

History has ruthlessly and righteously stigmatised the conduct of the Sparrow in killing and slaying Cock Robin. The deed was done with a bow and arrow; and the atrocious crime was seen by the Fly, with his little Eye. Anxious as I am by timely confession of guilt to avoid the opprobrium of posterity, I hereby proclaim my frank repentance for having inadvertently killed (with a "J" pen) a very eminent English sculptor. I spoke of him, in connection with the noble relievo from his chisel in Guildhall, as "the late John Bell." I rejoice to say that Mr. John Bell, like the Thane of Cawdor, lives, a prosperous gentleman. Que vive mil años. G. A. S.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Great diversity of opinion appears to exist with respect to the new racecourse at Kempton Park, which was formally opened last week. Our own impression is a decidedly favourable one, though we are scarcely prepared to go as far as one enthusiastic supporter of the venture, and pronounce it "the best course in England." Still, it is undoubtedly a very good one, rather flat and dead galloping, after the style of York and Doncaster, but one over which no owner need be afraid to run the most valuable animal in his stable. Hypercritical people objected that the "straight" mile did not fulfil Euclid's definition, and "lie evenly between its two extreme points;" but the curve looks far sharper than it really is, and the jockeys stated that they could come round it without the least inconvenience. Of course, everything was not quite in such order as it will be by the next meeting; and then, when a few more trees which at present obstruct the view of the racing have been cut down, people must be hard indeed to please who are not thoroughly satisfied with Kempton Park. A capital field of fifteen ran for the Inauguration Plate, one silver cup being given to the trainer and another to the rider of the winner, in commemoration of the first race on the new course. These fell to R. Porter and Fordham, the latter displaying all his old skill on the uncertain Dunkenny. The chief race of the day was the Kempton Park Two-Year-Old Stakes, and nothing in the field, which included fair youngsters like Shoestring and Turtle Dove, could even extend Sword Knot, who, it will be remembered, ran very fast in the New Stakes, at Ascot. Her stable companion, Salamis, took the Queen Elizabeth Stakes on the following day, and repeated her victory in the Royal Stakes on Saturday. The "Cup" was rather spoilt by the very light weight allotted to Rylstone (7 st. 7 lb.), and, though she only defeated Ivy (6 st. 12 lb.) by half a length, it was quite clear that Fordham had plenty in hand, and none of the remaining half-dozen persevered to the finish.

A capital little meeting was brought off at Huntingdon on Tuesday and Wednesday. The opposition of Julius Cæsar and Lollypop in the Portholme Cup created great interest, and, though a mile is beyond the latter's usual course, and he had to concede 5 lb., he made a very fair fight of it. The Duke of Hamilton was compensated for his defeat by the dual victory of Greenback; and, on the following day, Julius Cæsar (9 st.), who is in rare form just now, carried home the top weight in gallant style in the Huntingdonshire Stakes. Le Promeneur, a very useful selling plater, scored twice; nor must we forget to mention that Archer won four out of the five races in which he rode.

The heavy rain, which is falling as we write, will probably give bowlers another turn; but batsmen have certainly taken full advantage of the lively ground, and we have no space to chronicle half the long scores that have been amassed. Last week Middlesex beat Yorkshire by 90 runs, the batting of the Hon. E. Lyttelton (72), Messrs. A. J. Webbe (51), H. R. Webbe (37 and 51), T. S. Pearson (84), and E. H. Salmon (49) proving very effective. The best scores on the other side were made by Ulyett (30 and 37) and Roper (68). The Australians beat a powerful eleven, termed the Hull Town Club, by ten wickets, Messrs. Horan (50), Allan (78), Blackham (53), and Conway (46) doing most towards putting together 305, which is the largest number of runs that they have made in a single innings during their visit. They, however, fared badly in their match against Cambridge University, being beaten in a single innings with 72 runs to spare. We append the full score:—

Perhaps the feature of the match was the brilliant bowling of Mr. Morton, who took twelve wickets, at an expense of only 90 runs. On Tuesday evening the members of the Australian team were entertained at a banquet at Willis's Rooms, the Duke of Manchester being in the chair. Surrey has beaten Sussex by an innings and 47 runs, thanks to the bowling of Barratt (ten wickets) and the batting of Jupp (45), and Messrs. Strachan (84), J. Shuter (37), and L. A. Snuter (53). Notts has gained a most decisive victory over Yorkshire, by an innings and 64 runs; Daft (39), Oscroft (42), and Shrewsbury (60) were the chief scorers for the former, and no one did much on the other side. Messrs. C. M. Cunliffe (not out, 37, and 47), C. A. Absolom (70), and F. Penn (59) materially helped Kent to beat Derbyshire by 125 runs, and Hearne got eleven wickets, Mycroft taking twelve for the latter county.

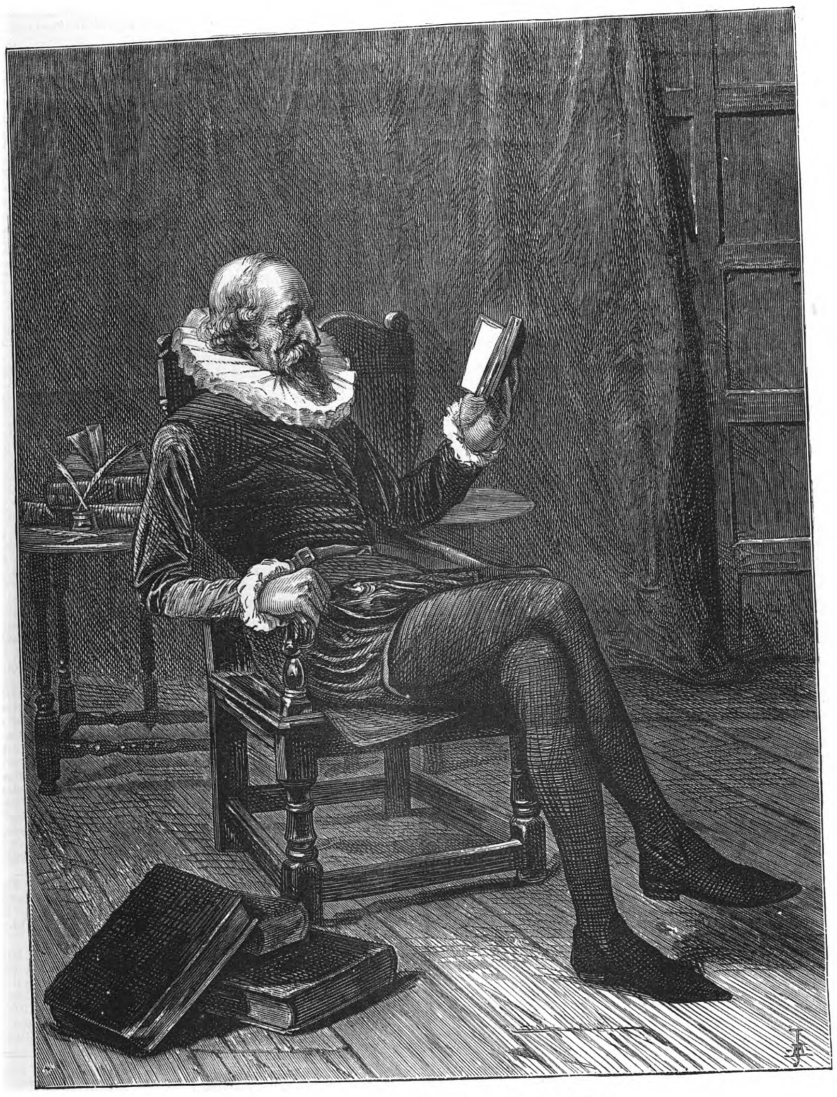
The race for the Wingfield Sculls, the amateur championship of the Thames, took place on Monday evening, over the recognised course from Putney to Mortlake. Only one man, A. Payne, of the Moulsey B.C., was bold enough to oppose F. L. Playford, who has been champion since 1875; and, though they were together until reaching the Oil Mills, it was clear that Playford had the race in hand from the start, and he eventually won as he liked, in 24 min. 13 sec. Playford was not in the best of condition; but there is little doubt that he is the finest amateur sculler of this or any other time.

The Channel-match of the Prince of Wales's Yacht Club was sailed last Saturday from Gravesend to Ramsgate harbour. Eight vessels started, and there was a spirited contest. Mr. Dowdall's Mildred won the first prize easily by time, Torch taking the second, and Fleur-de-Lis the third.

The annual regatta of the Royal Welsh Yacht Club, of which the Prince of Wales is president, took place at Carnarvon on Tuesday. The Roberta, of Carmarthen, won the cup for 30-tonners. The Elaine, of Liverpool, took the sailing-boats' prize; and the Naval Volunteer Artillery match was carried off by the Carnarvon crew, Liverpool being third, and Southport fourth. There were many minor races.

A successful meeting of the Royal Cornwall Yacht Club Regatta was held at Falmouth on Tuesday. In the first-class yawl-match Neptune saved her time on Jullanar, and Milly was distanced. The cutter-match was fought out between Formosa and Vol-au-Vent. Formosa led nearly all the way, and won well after a very fine race. Norman won the 40-ton race, and Myosotis took second prize; Coralie being third, and Glance fourth. Vanessa beat Maia in the 20-ton class; Florence was first in the 10-ton class, and Freda first in the 5-ton class.

A return match at a hundred pigeons, between Captain Bogardus and Mr. Cholmondeley Pennell, resulted in exactly the same way as did the former one—the American, who killed seventy-one, winning by two birds. He was not, however, so fortunate in his match with Mr. Wallace, as, after they had tied by killing seventy-nine each, the stakes were doubled, and Mr. Wallace won, with seventy-one against sixty-two.



The Mississippi and Dominion Line steamer Dominion reached the Mersey on Wednesday from Quebec, having on board 324 head of cattle and nineteen horses, all of which arrived in prime order. The steamer Memphis, of the same company, has also arrived at Liverpool from Canada, bringing 306 live cattle and 182 sheep.

The annual exhibition of the Worcestershire Agricultural Society opened at Bromsgrove on Tuesday, and was one of the best ever held under the auspices of the society. The entries greatly exceeded those of last year, there being 137 entries of horses, 98 in the cattle classes, 83 in the sheep, and 54 in the pig classes. Nearly £900 was awarded in prizes for cattle, &c., besides premiums in the flower-show department. The Marquis of Exeter obtained the leading prize in shorthorns for his celebrated five-year-old bull "Telemachus;" and Mr. Harris, of Stoney-lane, Bromsgrove; Mr. Ackers, of Prinknash Park, Gloucestershire; and Mr. T. M. Hopkins, of Wick, near Worcester, were also among the most successful in the shorthorn classes. Mr. Taylor, of Showle Court, Ledbury, won the prize-bull premium in Hereford cattle. The annual dinner was held on Wednesday. Lord Lyttelton presided, and the Earl of Coventry, Sir E. Lechmere, M.P., and Mr. Winn Knight took part in the proceedings.

On Wednesday afternoon London was visited by a thunderstorm and a heavy fall of rain, which had been threatening the greater portion of the day. There were storms the same day in other places, some being attended with fatal results. In Nuneaton and other parts of Warwickshire there was a storm, accompanied by lightning and a heavy fall of rain. A terrific thunderstorm broke over the Potteries, causing injury to life and property. At Whitmore, near Hanley, two women went under a tree for shelter from the heavy rain, when a flash of lightning split the tree into splinters, and killed one of the women, greatly injuring the other. Several persons have been injured in the surrounding districts. At Bristol the tall chimney of a factory and the cross of a church were knocked down by the lightning, but no personal damage was done. The storm extended to Ireland, where several fatal accidents occurred. At Belmont, near Tuam, a girl, aged eighteen, and a man named Ryan were killed by the lightning; and at Kilcornan a lad, aged sixteen, named Kennedy, was killed. His brother, a year younger, was struck down by the same flash, and remains dangerously ill.—There have been thunderstorms during the week at Southampton, Taunton, and other places, doing considerable damage.

"READING RABELAIS."

The subject which is here treated by Mr. Sidney Holland, a young artist of much talent and promise, whose picture has doubtless been noticed by many visitors at the Royal Academy Exhibition now about to be closed, is highly suggestive. A contemporary reader is enjoying the solitary perusal of those famous drolleries which are too strongly flavoured with gross impudence for the more refined literary taste of modern times. But the marvellous satirical romance of Gargantua and his friend Pantagruel is the vehicle of a great amount of political and moral instruction and severe reprobation of the social and ecclesiastical abuses of the age in which it was written. Such was the design of that witty free-thinking clergyman, the parish Curate of Meudon, who chose to wrap up his earnest protest against Shams, as Carlyle has of late called them, in a burlesque effusion of the wildest imaginative humour, outrageously transcending all bounds of decency and probability, as though in mockery of a world then full of rottenness, of hypocritical lies, perfidy, cruelty, and all manner of wickedness in high places. We can hardly conceive how bad was the Court of Francis I., with the Church and University, as then existing in France; how corrupt was the state of education and society in that kingdom just before the Huguenots attempted a Reformation. It is, in some degree, by the aid of even such extravagant caricaturists as Rabelais, and Butler in his "Hudibras," and Swift in his "Tale of a Tub," that the historical picture of a past evil condition of human affairs and opinions may be vividly brought to the view of thoughtful students. And we can thus also readily suppose that many of their serious contemporaries would be likely to seek, in the audacious flights of grotesque fancy, by which those men of genius held up to derision the vices and follies, the impostures and bigotries, of their times, something more useful than mere entertainment. It may at least be claimed for Rabelais, as well as for the two English authors named with him, though his practice of speaking of the foulest things by the vilest names far outruns every competitor in that species of literary ruffianism, that he does not make immorality appear seductive, as some of the politest and daintiest writers of a later period have done. Nastiness is better than the nicest and sweetest confection of a delicate but deadly poison; but the shrewd-looking elderly gentleman, sitting in his library, as Mr. Sydney Holland has cleverly depicted him, is perfectly competent to appreciate the merits of his favourite author. This figure is exceedingly characteristic—that of a Frenchman of birth and breeding and intellectual culture, with the habits of his class and nation in the sixteenth century, which are familiar to us from the essays of Montaigne. The accessories of costume and furniture also have been correctly studied; and the picture, as a whole, might almost serve for an illustration of bygone domestic life in a château of the provinces, where the Seigneur prefers a quiet hour with his books to the fatiguing pursuit of game in the neighbouring forest.

THE CHAMPION RIFLEMAN.

The great event at the annual meeting of the National Rifle Association on Wimbledom-common, which was concluded last week, was the competition, at three different ranges, for the Queen's Prize of £250 and the Gold Medal and Badge of the Association, with all the honours of Champion Shot for England, to be worn during the next twelvemonth. We announced, in our last publication, that the winner of the Queen's Prize for this year was Private Rae, of the 11th Stirling Rifle Volunteers, who made an aggregate score of 78 points, of which 25 were made at the thousand yards' long range. His nearest competitors were Lieutenant-Colonel Walrond, who made 22 at the long range, and 77 altogether; and Serg. Walker, with 23 at the thousand yards, and a total of 76 points. Mr. Rae, upon the declaration of his victory, was carried by his comrades on their shoulders to the London Scottish camp, preceded by the band of the Victoria Rifles playing "See, the Conquering Hero Comes," and escorted by a detachment of mounted and foot police. He was very heartily welcomed by all. Peter Rae was until this year a Sergeant in the 31st Lanark Rifles, but a few months since, on removing his business as a builder to Kilsyth, he became a private in the 11th Stirling, to which regiment he now belongs. Mr. Rae has long been known as one of the best Scottish marksmen, and, in addition to the tie for the Queen's Prize in 1874, has gained many honours at Wimbledon and elsewhere, his latest exploits being winning the President's Prize and the Ironbrokers' Cup at the meeting of the West of Scotland Rifle Association this year at Cowglen.

PRIVATE RAE, OF THE 11TH STIRLING RIFLE VOLUNTEERS, WINNER OF THE QUEEN'S PRIZE AT WIMBLEDON.

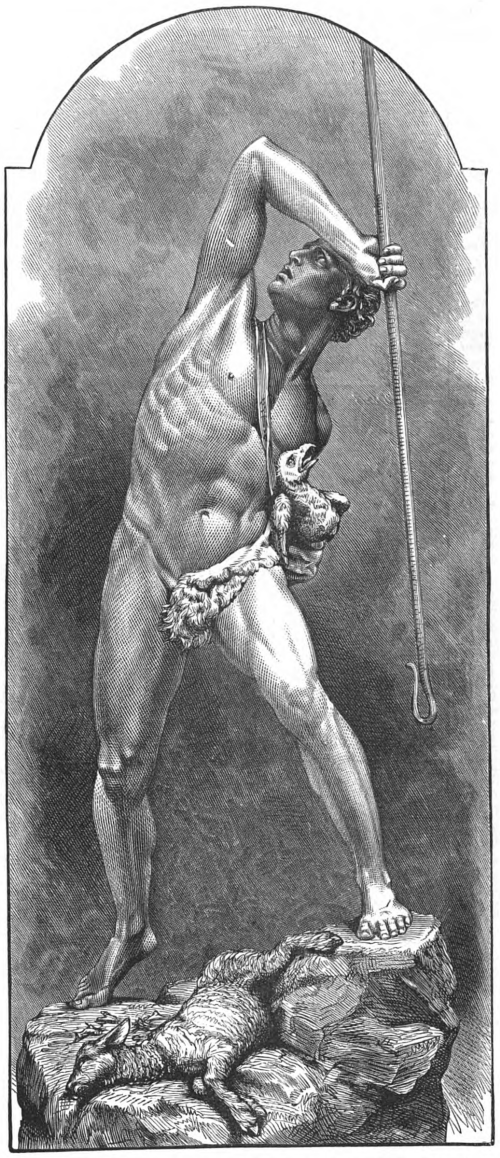
RETALIATION.

The spirited work of art to which the sculptor, Mr. Birch, has given this significant title, must have been admired by not a few of the daily crowds at the Royal Academy Exhibition. This nude figure of a mountain shepherd, who has climbed the height of the craggy precipice to the eagle's nest, pursuing his lost lamb, which that fierce bird of prey had lately snatched from the bleating flock of ewes and their offspring is a truly noble conception. His approach has driven off the eagle from the rocky pinnacle where the slain lamb is left bedrabbled with its own blood, a piteous sight for the faithful shepherd to behold. The eagle's nest, however, was left for a moment unprotected by the feathered biped accustomed there to perform its parental duty. This being perceived by the avenging swain from the fields below, he has captured one of the eagle's callow brood, and now threatens to accomplish a just act of "retaliation" by carrying off the shrieking young one, probably to a life-long captivity in some artificial cage, where it will be gazed at with wonder by the villagers who shall have heard of this adventurous exploit. The eagle is supposed meanwhile to be hovering overhead in a most angry mood, but not daring to swoop down upon its foe, to rescue its bantling or to recover its stolen repast; for the shepherd has a long staff wielded by a strong arm, with which he is prepared to strike the rapacious bird if it should come for a moment within his reach. This idea may be compared, not disadvantageously, with that of another work of sculpture—namely, Bell's "Eagle-Slayer," in which the man was represented as having just shot an arrow to kill the winged prince of the upper air while soaring in his pride of place on high.

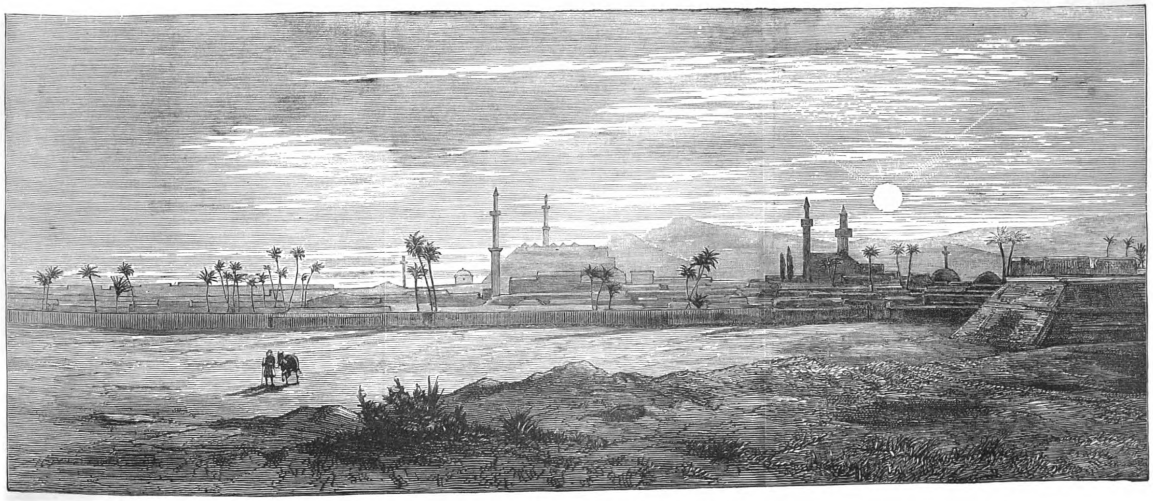
At the Cardiff Townhall on the 19th inst. the Mayor presented a valuable gold chronometer-watch to Captain George Williams, at the request of the Board of Trade, "for the cool and intrepid courage" shown by him on May 9 last, when he commanded the ship Confidence, of Bristol, which was destroyed by a tidal wave off the coast of Peru. The letter from the Board of Trade also stated that the Queen, on the recommendation of Sir Charles Adderley, had conferred the Albert medal of the second class on three seamen who at great risk and in intense darkness put off from that ship and saved lives.

The Extra Supplement.



"GIRL READING." BY C. E. PERUGINI.

For the delineation of feminine grace and modesty M. Perugini has earned for himself a reputation as wide as it is merited. His pencil is at once facile and true, and it never fails to convey that sense of preciousness which is so valuable an element in the limning of ladies gently born. His colouring is correspondingly suave and harmonious, as he does not strive to force his pigment too palpably on the eye. In the case before us, the colour is laid on so lightly and daintily that the canvas is allowed to show through and help thereby the texture of the dress. His is essentially a sympathetic brush, and he must address himself to his sitter con amore or not at all. The "Girl Reading," to whom we present our readers, is the first important figure which catches and rivets the attention of the visitors in Gallery II. of the Royal Academy. Attired in a loose white dress with a simple frill round her neck, we see her seated on a marble bench engrossed in the illuminated volume which lies in her lap. It is bound in blue velvet, and is probably a mediæval romance of valour and true love; and, as if in sympathy with the triumph of the lovers, she holds in her right hand a sprig of white orange-blossom. The back of this hand touches her finely-moulded chin, and the elbow rests in the palm of her left hand. Her well set head is adorned with short auburn hair, which contrasts pleasantly with the green foliage in which the ripe golden fruit nestles behind her, and in which the white blossoms sparkle starlike. Her eyebrows are slightly raised, indicative of attention; and the soft fall of her eyelids betokens consent. Her mouth is at once delicate and mobile, and ready at a moment to droop into sorrow or break into a ripple of delight. In short, the "Reading Girl" is a realisation of maidenly sweetness and modesty, and the sentiment she inspires in the beholder is as pure as she herself is lovely.



THE ISLE OF CYPRUS.

The new British Administrator, Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, arrived at the port of Larnaca on Monday morning in the transport-ship Himalaya, with his staff and a portion of the troops under his command. The British Naval squadron, consisting of the Minotaur, the Black Prince, the Salamis, the Monarch, and the Invincible, saluted his Excellency on entering the harbour. The troops arriving from Malta are mostly encamped beside the aqueduct, near Larnaca, but one battalion is sent to each of the other chief towns—Famagusta, on the east coast, Kydenia and Limasol, and Nicosia or Levkosia, which is the capital of the island. We have already dispatched a Special Artist to furnish this Journal with Illustrations of the commencement of British rule in Cyprus. The Engravings published in this and last week's Numbers present views of the capital, Nicosia; the Holy Cross Mountain, or Stavro Vouni, eastward of Larnaca; and the seacoasts at opposite extremities of the island. We gave some account of the geography and history of Cyprus in our last publication. More recent and precise information as to Cyprus is not readily obtainable. But for the inquiry instituted a few years ago as to the facilities offered to agricultural and industrial emigration carried on in countries where England has a consular service, and for the occasional reports of those Consuls upon the local commerce with Great Britain, there would not have been available for the general public at this day any recent sources of information about the island which has become on a sudden so interesting to England. In German there has been published, indeed, a more complete description of Cyprus, and of the antiquities of the island the American Consul, General Cesnola, has given a comprehensive account. But modern Cyprus has not yet found its English historian. Meanwhile, enough is on official record to furnish an intelligent comprehension of the country and its capabilities for European colonisation and European capital. The only opening which Cyprus offers to European colonists (we here quote Mr. Consul Lang) is as farmers. "Perfect security to life and property is an advantage possessed to a greater degree in this island than in any other part of Turkey," he says. "The land is all for sale, and at most moderate rates. The climate is not unhealthy, but demands—as every other place in the world does—simplicity in diet and temperance in habits. Under these conditions, capital invested would certainly find a handsome return in agricultural enterprise in Cyprus." The purchasing power of money in the island may be easily compared with that in England, when we say that in the necessaries of life £15 in Cyprus is as good as £25 in England; but that in the luxuries of life £15 in Cyprus is not so good as £10 in England.

As regards the temptations Cyprus offers to European capital, a glance at commercial returns will show the very varied nature of the goods in which it deals. Among its exports are raw cotton, wool, salt, dyes, silk, oil seeds, wine, locust beans (Russia imports them to the value of £42,000 per annum), hides, dried fruit, wheat and barley; while its imports include, as the larger items, cotton, woollen, and leather goods, tobacco, sugar, coffee, salt fish, rice, butter, hardware, iron, spirits, soap, and glass. The unequal nature of the climate is a drawback; one year will be remarkable for a torrent of rain forty days together, and the next memorable for drought. This is a fact against the farmer; but for such extremes of the seasons Nature has herself provided a set-off in endowing the island with such differences of temperature and such variety of soil that in no year—even though it be marked by local floods or partial droughts—does the average production of the whole island suffer. Thus when, in 1871, the cotton crop—owing to the drought, fell off some 60 per cent in the field as compared with 1870, the harvest from the carob-tree (the "locust bean") yielded a larger revenue than in the year before. In this, however, all authorities agree, that the soil of Cyprus is still an unworked mine, and that, as Consul Lang says, "capital invested would certainly find a handsome return in agricultural enterprise." Among the other sources of local revenue, the salt-fields deserve a passing notice. Thirty years ago those of Larnaca were leased for £400, but in 1871 they produced a clear revenue of £20,000. Nor does this last amount represent the profit which might be realised from this property, for the supply of salt—we give the words of local authority—is "unlimited," and, in spite of the unfortunate fiscal policy of the Turkish Government, the trade continues to increase. In the hope of obtaining an immediate increase of revenue, the Pasha of Cyprus raised the market rates of salt, but, failing in his object, lowered them again. The mischief, however, had been done; and, in spite of the cost of sea-carriage, Syria is now largely supplied with salt from Barbary. Yet but one word is wanting to double the Cyprus revenue from salt; for, by lowering the price a couple of paras per oke, not only would the home consumption rise to former proportions, but the Barbary traders, who at present make only bare profit, would have to abandon the Syrian market. Still, the main prosperity of Cyprus depends upon its land; it is pleasant, therefore, to gather from the official reports promises of future progress. In the first place, we learn that when, in 1869, a year of favourable seasons succeeded one of unfavourable, the Government tithes from the land leaped up 28 per cent. And in the next we note that the value of the crops has, as compared with ten years ago, largely increased bulk for bulk, owing solely to the improvement in the quality of the produce.

"RETALIATION." BY C. B. BIRCH. IN THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

LEVKOSIA OR NICOSIA, THE CAPITAL OF CYPRUS.

The parish church of Eckington, near Chesterfield, has been reopened, after a very effective restoration.

The reopening services of St. Thomas's Church, Gawber, near Barnsley, took place on the 18th inst.

Blickling church, Norfolk, has been rebuilt, from designs by Mr. Street, at the expense of the Marchioness of Lothian, in memory of her husband.

The old church of Osbaldwick, two miles from York, was on the 18th inst. reopened by the Archbishop of York, after undergoing complete restoration.

A beautiful Munich window, consisting of two lights, and representing "Christ Blessing Children," has been placed in All Saints' Church, Norfolk-square, in memory of Mr. Buchanan, M.D. It has been executed by Messrs. Mayer and Co.

The Bishop of Lichfield was unable through indisposition to attend the consecration of the new church at St. John, West Bromwich, yesterday week, as arranged. The service was deputed to the Coadjutor, Bishop Hobhouse.

The new parish church of St. Andrew, Drypool, Hull, was consecrated by the Archbishop of York last Saturday morning. The total cost of the building is estimated at about £6000, of which £1000 has still to be raised.

Lord Harrowby presided on the 18th inst. at a conversazione of the Christian Evidence Society at the National Club, Whitehall-gardens, at which addresses were delivered upon the state of unbelief in different parts of the world, with suggestions for the best way of promoting the objects which the organisation had in view.

A meeting was held on the 18th at the rooms of the National Society, Broad Sanctuary, in support of the movement to raise a memorial to the memory of the late Bishop Selwyn. The Earl of Powis presided, and among the speakers were Lord Carnarvon, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Lichfield, Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P., Mr. Raikes, M.P., and the Bishop of Albany.

At the monthly board meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel on Friday—Bishop Claughton in the chair—a vote of thanks to the American Bishops for their advocacy of the society's cause was, on the motion of the Rev. Brymer Belcher, seconded by Mr. Boodle, unanimously adopted. The business included the granting of £2000 for erecting a steam-mill on the society's estate in Barbadoes.

The Church of the Holy Trinity, Clee, on the south of the Humber, near Great Grimsby, was reopened last Saturday. This church, as is recorded in a contemporary inscription on one of the Norman piers near the south door, was consecrated by St. Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln, A.D. 1192. It has now been restored (by Mr. James Fowler) at the sole charge of Mr. A. W. Thorold Grant Thorold, of Weelsby House.

In the Court of Arches last Tuesday on an appeal as to the removal by Mr. Fry, the late churchwarden of St. James's, Hatcham, of a chancel screen, side screen, and steps to the communion table put in the church by Mr. Tooth, the Dean of Arches granted a faculty for the removal of all the articles in question except the chancel screen, which will remain, provided that the gates are removed and the panels painted without representations on them.

The Bishops attending the Lambeth Conference reassembled on Monday and began the consideration of the reports of the committees that have been sitting since the adjournment. An address, signed by a number of Members of Parliament and other leading Churchmen, was presented, congratulating the Bishops on their gathering and expressing the hope that their deliberations would tend to union among the various branches of the Anglican Communion.

The Rev. Garnons Williams has presented another chalice and paten to Llandaff Cathedral, in memory of his father, Dean Williams. They are by Messrs. Lias and Son, St. Bride-street, Ludgate-circus, and, like those presented last year, are in the style of the Italian Renaissance. Both vessels are richly chased with vine-work, and relieved by raised medallions containing symbols of the Passion and the arms of the cathedral.

A meeting of the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy was held last Saturday. It was stated that since the commencement of this year the governors have granted £7333 in donations of various amounts to about 650 poor clergymen and clergy widows, aged single daughters and children, and forty-five widows and daughters have been elected to vacant pensions of £20 per annum, and the pensions of twenty-four other widows and daughters have been raised from £20 to £30 per annum. The total number of ladies on the list of pensioners is 712.

Last Saturday the Bishop of Rochester consecrated the chancel and part of the nave of the permanent Church of St. Augustine, Lynton-road, Bermondsey. When completed, this church is expected to be one of the finest in South London. The architects are Henry Jarvis and Son. The principal contributors towards the building fund have been Mr. Richard Foster, who gave £2500; Mr. Philip Cazenove, who laid the first stone and gave £500; Mr. J. R. West, Mr. J. A. Shaw Stewart, the Incorporated Church Building Society, the South London Fund, and the Trustees of Marshall's Charity.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Class I. A. J. Ashton, Balliol; J. C. Brown, Keble; A. Cattley, New College; G. Cave, St. John's; B. C. Costelloe, Balliol; L. R. Farnell, Exeter; J. S. Furley, Christ Church; W. E. Gabbett, Lincoln; A. E. Haigh, Corpus Christi; H. B. Hodson, Queen's; R. F. Horton, New College; R. S. de Courcy Laffan, Merton; A. F. M. Lockhart, Hertford College; R. L. Ottley, Pembroke; D. G. Ritchie and W. Scott, Balliol; W. E. Smith, New College, and Oscar O'Flahertie Wilde, Magdalen.

Class II. A. A. Baumann, Balliol; W. S. Brook, Oriel; C. E. Brown, Lincoln; T. N. Carter, Queen's; M. S. Crawford, Exeter; F. T. Dalton, Corpus Christi; L. Dyer, Balliol; J. H. J. Ellison, Merton; W. L. Giles St. John's; A. D. Gooley, Balliol; F. W. Gorton, New College; S. G. Hamilton, Balliol; T. A. C. Hampson, New College; H. C. Holloway, Balliol; J. O. Johnston, Keble; L. Kay, Balliol; G. P. F. Keogh, Christ Church; W. P. Ker, Balliol; J. H. W. Lee, Corpus Christi; L. S. Milford, Pembroke; C. J. Moore, Merton; J. M. Mulgen, Worcester; F. D. Ogle, New College; S. Paget, Christ Church; A. H. Pearson, University; E. L. Peel, Balliol; A. C. Smith, St. John's; W. J. Tanner, Pembroke.

Class III. G. T. Atkinson, Magdalen; G. E. Barnard, Merton; H. D. Bateson, Trinity; L. J. T. Darwall, New College; R. S. Dewing and E. C. Jones, Lincoln; W. Hampson, Trinity; T. d'Eyncourt, University; W. F. Goldberg, Lincoln; W. Hampson, Trinity; A. Inkersley, Brasenose; W. P. James, University; E. B. Layard, Keble; H. May, Brasenose; F. H. Mentha, Hertford; W. Pratt, Queen's; J. M'Mullen Rigg, St. John's; J. Smith, Queen's; A. H. Stanton, New College; W. A. Strawbridge, Worcester; A. E. Street, Magdalen; J. L. Stuart, Hertford College; G. H. Wells, St. John's; and A. P. Wickham, New College

Class IV. E. W. Badger, University; W. Bently, Lincoln; B. K. Bourdillon, Queen's; G. F. Burgess, Keble; O. P. Dexter and W. A. L. P. Evans, Christ Church; C. V. Green and A. G. Hutchins, Keble; G. F. Jones, Lincoln; J. E. Moulson, New College; E. G. O'Donoghue, Exeter; F. G. Rucker, Brasenose; H. S. Seymour, Balliol; L. H. B. Spiers, University; A. E. Wigan, Keble; and A. W. Williams-Wynn, Christ Church.

Mr. Arthur Molyneux Jackson, unattached student, late of Magdelen College School, has been elected to the Dixon Exhibition at Queen's.

The trustees of the Eldon Law Scholarship have elected Mr. Alfred Milner, Fellow of New College, as the nineteenth Eldon Scholar.

The result of the recent examination for the Tomline prizes at Eton has been made known, as follows:—Kingdom, K.S., prizeman; French, K.S., Russell prizeman. Order of merit—White Thompson, m.a., K.S.; Brooke, m.a., K.S.; Bayley, m.a.; De Havelland, K.S.; A. Ferries, K.S. Assistant Masters' prizes—H. B. Smith, prizeman. Order of merit—Childers, K.S.; Garst, Brooke, m.i., K.S.; Wood, K.S. Assistant-Masters' junior prize—K. Wood, K.S., prizeman. Order of merit—White Thompson, m.i., K.S.; Du Cane, Wyndham. The examiner was Mr. N. M. Ferrers, M.A., F.R.S. Oppidans Exhibition, 1878—1, Norman; 2, Newton, proxime accessit; 3, Tailby, Winthrop, m.i.; Egerton-Green, Donaldson, m.a.; Wyndham, M.A. The examiner was Mr. E. C. Selwyne.

The following have been elected to scholarships at Winchester:—R. H. Fuller, J. B. Leathes, A. S. W. Whitehorne, E. C. Harpur, H. W. Orange, H. W. Pyddoke, J. R. Lumby, J. R. Le B. Tomlin, R. H. P. Crawfurd, W. E. B. Brodrick, R. S. Milford, F. M. Ingram, E. M'C. Poulter. The following have been elected to exhibitions:—G. W. Ricketts, G. R. Benson, A. N. St. John-Mildmay.

At a meeting of the council of the Oxford Military College, held on the 13th inst., the following new members of council were elected—viz., Lord Napier of Magdala, the Marquis of Lorne, General Lord Mark Kerr, Sir E. Lechmere, Bart., M.P., and General Maitland, C.B.

The "breaking up" of Magdalen College School, Oxford, took place on the 17th inst. The President of the college was in the chair, and a large number of resident and other friends of the school were present. The reports were of an eminently satisfactory character. The list of honours included two first classes in Moderations and several second classes and other distinctions. The most important prizes were adjudged as follows:—The Sheppard Prize for Classics and the President's Medal for Composition, Tylee; the President's Medal for Mathematics, Platt; the President's Prize for Mathematics, Maxwell; Mathematics, under fifteen, Tollitt; Divinity Prize, Jephson; Head Master's Exhibition, Vincent (Scholar of University College).

Durham Grammar School celebrated its annual speech-day recently, when Canon Tristram, on behalf of the Dean and Chapter, presented the prizes. During the past year the following honours have been gained:—J. Adamson, Sizar and Baker Exhibitioner, St. John's College, Cambridge, Sixth Senior Optime; W. B. White, Sizarship at Trinity College, Cambridge; J. Harward, "Proxime" to Scholarship at University College, Oxford; W. C. Bradley, Scholar of Queen's College, Oxford, second class, Moderations, "Proxime" for the second time to the Boden Sanskrit Scholarship, Hartwell Exhibition from Durham School; T. Thistle, Scholar of Corpus Christi College, second class in "Litt. Human.;" T. H. Y. Trotter, New College, Oxford, third class in "Litt. Human.;" J. K. Trotter, Gold Medal of the Royal Artillery Institution for Essay Prize, 1878; W. Greenwell, M.A., University College, Durham, author of "British Barrows," Fellow of the Royal Society; G. H. Wilkinson, M.A., Canon of Truro.

A meeting of the members of the Yorkshire College of Science was held on Monday at Leeds. Dr. Heaton presided. A general view of the position of the college may be best given by stating that £56,000 has now been promised in donations, and that the endowments from the Akroyd Foundation, the Clothworkers' Company, and the bequest of the late Mr. Henry Brown would, if capitalised, represent a further sum of about £20,000. On the question of the proposed new University the committee reported that the college had held friendly communications with the authorities of Owens College, but could not at present make them the subject of a public report. Mr. Baines stated that the number of students this year was 355, as compared with 288 last year.

The report of the Queen's College, Galway, for the session 1876-7, states that the number of students attending lectures during the past session was the largest since the opening of the College, and that "the system of united education has been really carried out in the College," the number of students continuing to represent "in just proportion those classes of the several persuasions who seek for collegiate education." The president says:—"It is gratifying to be able to add that since the opening of the College not a single circumstance has occurred to interrupt the harmony which has subsisted among the students of the several denominations."

A large number of the dignitaries of the Church of Ireland, headed by the Archbishop of Dublin and the Bishops of Meath, Killaloe, Derry, and Limerick, have addressed a memorial to Lord Beaconsfield in favour of including girls in the awards proposed by the Government bill on Irish Intermediate Education. The memorialists propose that separate examinations at local centres, to be settled by the Commissioners under the Act, should be held.

Mr. Moncure D. Conway writes to state that he is authorised by a lady to offer £1000 towards the formation of a fund to provide some means of collegiate education for women at Oxford, subject to the condition that an equal sum be subscribed within the next few months. A committee of influential persons has been formed at Oxford, who have suggested a scheme which they believe feasible, and who are able and willing to work for its success. Messrs. Robarts, Lubbock, and Co., Lombard-street, have consented to receive subscriptions.

Mr. Goschen, M.P., on the 18th inst. presided over the annual distribution of prizes at the Middle-Class Schools in the City-road. He congratulated the school on the success which it had achieved, and commended the principles upon which the system of education was based. The prizes were delivered by Mrs. Goschen. Among the most distinguished of the recipients were M. A. Cooper, W. Hamar, J. E. Forty, and C. Meanwell, to whom scholarships had been awarded.

The Marquis of Hartington, in distributing, at Eastbourne on Wednesday, the prizes and certificates gained in that district in connection with the Cambridge University local examinations, expressed great satisfaction at the growing interest manifested by the two national Universities in the promotion of secondary education throughout the country.

Lord Houghton on Wednesday presided, in one of the large rooms of Cannon-street Hotel, at the distribution of prizes awarded to pupils in the different departments of the City of London College for Ladies, near Finsbury-square. The occasion was one of special interest, as it marked the first stage of progress under the management of Miss Mary Murton, who acceded last year to the post of Lady Principal, and who was complimented in graceful terms by the noble president as having, while a student at London University, diligently fitted herself for the art of teaching by becoming a proficient in the art of learning. Two scholarships, of the value respectively of 50 guineas and 35 guineas, were included in the prize-list, and were bestowed, the first on Miss Catherine Emily Hemmerde, and the second on Miss Nelly Blakeley, both young ladies having repeatedly mounted the steps of the platform to receive prize after prize in several branches of study. The names of the many recipients were reported by Professor Henry Morley. Other speakers were the Rev. Philip Magnus, examiner; Professor Cassal, who gave the chief French prize; and Mr. Brinley Richards, who gave an account of the progress which had been made by the musical students, his statements being amply verified by the young ladies in the course of a concert, which brought the proceedings to a close.

The annual commemoration of St. Olave's Grammar School, Southwark, was celebrated on Wednesday. The prizes were distributed by the Bishop of Rochester, visitor of the school. The Warden, Mr. L. Shuter, congratulated the friends of the boys on the popularity of the school, as evinced by its increasing numbers—there being nearly 800 boys—and on the variety and thoroughness of the teaching, as shown by the highly satisfactory reports of the examiners and the numerous successes the school had attained during the past year at the Universities and the Oxford Local Examinations, where the highest possible honours were obtained. The Head Master, the Rev. A. Johnson, read the report of the examiners awarding the exhibitions at the Universities and a large number of scholarships tenable in the school for the ensuing year. The Bishop of Rochester addressed the boys on their duties and prospects; and the proceedings were closed with recitations in English, German, French, Latin, and Greek.

The permanent buildings of St. Bernard's College, Goldworth, Woking, were opened on Wednesday. They comprise a spacious chapel, dining-hall, dormitories, school-rooms, masters' and mistresses' houses, &c. The school is intended for little boys preparing for public school life, and especially for the public school in London in connection with the Southwark Theological College.

Last Saturday the prize distribution of Bruce Castle School, Tottenham, took place, when a large party assembled in the big school to see the prizes given away by the Lord Mayor.

The Rev. W. H. Bond, Second Master of St. Bees' School, and late Scholar of Clare College, Cambridge, has been elected Head Master of the Barrow School, Borden, Kent.

The First Lord of the Admiralty has consented to distribute the prizes at the Royal Naval School, New Cross, on Aug. 6.

The following scholarships, tenable for one year each, have been awarded by the Masters of the Bench to students of the Middle Temple—viz.: International and Constitutional Law—One first-class scholarship of one hundred guineas to Mr. John Scully, of King's Inns, Dublin; and one second-class scholarship of thirty guineas to Mr. Arthur Robert Ingpen, of the University of London. Common and Criminal Law—One first-class scholarship of one hundred guineas to Mr. Nobushige Iriye, of the University, Tokio, Japan; and a second-class scholarship of thirty guineas to Mr. Herbert Louis P. Elles, of Balliol College, Oxford. Real and Personal Property—One first-class scholarship of one hundred guineas to Mr. Joseph Gatey, of the University of London Equity—One second-class scholarship of thirty guineas to Mr. George Godfrey Gray, of the University of London, LL B.

At the examination by the Incorporated Law Society of candidates for admission on the roll of solicitors of the Supreme Court the examination committee recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—Arnold Muir Wilson, John Thomas Anderson, Harry Plews, Charles A. M. Lightbound, William Ramsden, Arthur Newman, Robert Henry Carpenter, Henry Earnest Ward, Cecil Edward Kingsford, and William Rudd. The council of the society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—To Mr. Wilson, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's Inn; to Mr. Anderson, the prize of the Honourable Society of New Inn; to Mr. Plews, Mr. Lightbound, Mr. Ramsden, Mr. Newman, Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Ward, Mr. Kingsford, and Mr. Rudd, prizes of the Incorporated Law Society. The examiners have also certified that the following candidates, under the age of twenty-six, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—Henry Bulcock, Frederick Arthur Evans, Alexander James Fenton, Archibald H. J. Fletcher, John Sydenham Francis, Hugh Roger Hartley, James Thomas Heppell, William Arthur Jellicorse, Francis John Trewhitt, and Wm. Augustus Woodley, jun. The council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit. The examination committee have further certified that the answers of the following candidates were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to commendation if they had not been above the age of twenty-six:—Benjamin Thomas Bartrum, M.A., B.C.L., Charles John Buckmaster, William Handley Kay, Samuel Richard Meredith, B.A., and George Tilling (would have been entitled to certificates of merit). The number of candidates examined in this term was 324; of these 262 passed and sixty-two were postponed.

A tank of 2000 gallons of creosote, which was on its way from Birmingham to South Wales, burst at Hereford on the 19th inst., and ran into the River Wye, killing a great quantity of salmon, trout, and other fish.

The bark Scottish Admiral sailed from Gravesend on the 19th inst. with the following number of emigrants for Brisbane:—Forty-seven married men, forty-six married women, 123 single men, fifty single women, sixty-two children between the ages of twelve and one, and fifteen infants.—The Agent-General for New South Wales has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship Earl Dalhousie, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in April last. There has been some expeditious telegraphing to and from Australia. The Agent-General for South Australia sent a telegram to Adelaide, South Australia, at three p.m., last Monday from Broad-street, E.C., and a reply to same was received by him, at Westminster, at 9.45 a.m. next morning.

THE LADIES' DRESS ASSOCIATION (Limited).

Established under the direct patronage of nearly 200 ladies of title.

First issue of capital £50,000, divided into 10,000 shares of £5 each, which, excepting forty shares reserved for subscribers resident abroad and in the colonies, is subscribed for by between 3000 and 4000 shareholders.

The board have much pleasure in announcing to their members that the loot and shoe department is now opened for business, being received, the Directors beg to inform the public that the privilege of dealing with the association and securing its advantages and economy is exclusively limited to shareholders. A register of the names and addresses of ladies desiring it, as for the purpose of obtaining the benefits of the Association is kept by the company free of charge, and each lady, in the order of priority in which her name is entered on the register, is offered one share without payment of a premium out of any profits placed at the Company's disposal by the public. Unless ladies register their names immediately, they may be unable to obtain a share, except on payment of a premium. Application for registry of names must be addressed to the Secretary.

By order of the Board.

Sold by all Chemists, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

INDIGESTION.

It is conclusively ascertained that LACTOPEPTINE will bring about the Digestion of Food in a manner perfectly identical to that obtained under the influence of the natural gastric juice. "A glance at the Formula of LACTOPEPTINE would convince even the most sceptical of the valuable results that must ensue through its administration. Composed of ptyalin, pepsine, pancreatine, hydrochloric and lactic acids, it is a combination of all the digestive agents; consequently, can never be administered without giving the utmost satisfaction; for if there is a deficiency in the system of all or any of these agents, LACTOPEPTINE will supply it, and thus assist in digesting the food, enabling the organs that produce these principles of digestion to rest and recuperate their relaxed energies."—From "Practical Medicine and Surgery," July 1877. LACTOPEPTINE being presented in saccharated form, is most agreeable to the taste, and can be administered even to the youngest child. The price of LACTOPEPTINE is 4s. 6d. per one oz. bottle. (An ounce bottle contains forty-eight ten-grain doses.) If any difficulty is experienced in obtaining LACTOPEPTINE from your Chemist, communicate direct, sending P.O.O. for 4s. 6d. Address—CARNRICK, KIDDER, and CO., 61, Russell-st., corner of Charlotte-st., London, W.C. Pamphlet to any address.

THE TERRITORIAL CHANGES.

Our Map of the territorial changes, made by the Treaty of Berlin, in European Turkey and the adjacent provinces or States, puts before the reader's eye the relative situation of every piece of country taken from its late Sovereign and transferred to another Government. The portions marked "R," being those ceded to Russia, consist in the European map of those districts of Bessarabia, which lie north of the Kilia outlet of the Lower Danube and east of the Pruth; but, in the small map of a corner of Armenia, which occupies a separate compartment of our Engraving, the Asiatic territory ceded to Russia is also shown, including the seaport of Batoum, and the fortresses of Kars and Ardahan. The Dobrudscha, or strip of land inclosed between the bend of the Lower Danube, the Black Sea, and a line drawn from Silistria to Mangalia, south of Trajan's Wall, has been given to Roumania, as is here indicated by the sign "Ro." The accession of new territory to Servia, marked by the letter "S," will be found south of its former boundary on the side towards Bulgaria; and the important fortified city of Nish, with the border towns of Pirot and Vranja, has passed under Servian rule. The little highland principality of Montenegro is enlarged by the addition, marked "M," of a strip around three sides of its limited domain, with a very small bit of the Adriatic seacoast, being the town and port of Antivari. The newly-constituted semi-independent State of Bulgaria, between the Danube and the Balkans, possessing an area of 23,000 square miles, and including Sofia, to the west, and Varna, to the east, with all the battle-fields of the late campaign, is distinctly represented in this Map. To the south of it lies a considerable province, henceforth to be styled East Roumelia, inhabited by a mixed Bulgarian and Turkish population, which has suffered far more than any other country from the late horrid massacres and other effects of misrule or inhuman strife between hostile races and religions. This province is now to be placed under a reformed administration, with guarantees for liberty and equity, prescribed by the European Congress. We can but hope that the lot of all its inhabitants, both Christian and Mohammedan, will be rendered tolerable; and that they will be compelled to refrain from destroying and outraging each other. The condition of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the most westerly provinces of the Turkish Empire, was quite as bad, or even worse, previous to the revolt and massacres of 1876, inasmuch as they were greatly impoverished by a vicious fiscal system, and excluded from foreign commerce. They are now, as shown at a glance in our Map, to be occupied and administered by the Austrian Empire. The total amount of the territories lost by the Sultan under the Treaty of Berlin is 71,500 square miles, with an aggregate population of three millions and a half. A much larger deduction from his Empire in Roumelia or European Turkey, corresponding with the ancient Thrace and Macedonia, was proposed by the Treaty of San Stefano. This would have brought the projected new Bulgarian principality southward to the shores of the Ægean, only sparing the port of Salonica and the peninsula of Mount Athos. Our Map will make it clear that so much of what Turkey was forced to cede at San Stefano has been restored by the Congress at Berlin.

We may here notice the publication, by Mr. Stanford, of an excellent coloured map of this subject, which many of our readers will like to preserve as a more permanent memorial of the late grand transaction in the affairs of the East.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The season of this establishment closed on Saturday with a repetition of Verdi's "Aida," the cast, as recently noticed, including Madame Patti as Aida, Madame Scalchi as Amneris, Signor Nicolini as Radamès, and Signor Graziani as Amonasro. The final week has comprised the benefit on Thursday of Madame Patti (who repeated her charming performance as Amina in "La Sonnambula," which had not been heard for some seasons); and on Friday that of Mdlle. Albani, who appeared in three of her favourite characters—as Gilda in the first act of "Rigoletto," as Lucia in the last act of "Lucia di Lammermoor," and as Violetta in the last act of "La Traviata." The entertainments on this occasion included a ballet divertissement, with the clever dancing of Mdlle. Zucchi and the Mdlles. Reuters. The reception of Madame Patti and Mdlle. Albani was of the most enthusiastic kind.

The season just closed opened on April 2, the first few weeks having comprised repetitions of well-known operas, with several sudden changes in the cast or of the work performed, owing to the unusual number of cases of indisposition caused by the ungenial weather of the period, the chief instance having been that of Mdlle. Thalberg, whose reappearance was delayed, and who, after a few performances, was incapacitated from singing by continued throat ailment.

The first novelty of the season was the production, on June 1, of an Italian version of M. Victor Massé's "Paul et Virginie," in which the charming performance of Mdlle. Albani as the heroine was a prominent feature, excellent also having been that of M. Capoul, the original representative of Paul in Paris. The revival of Meyerbeer's opera, "Le Prophète," in June, after an interval of nine years, was an interesting event, and afforded fresh manifestation of the enhanced declamatory powers of Madame Scalchi and Signor Gayarre respectively in the characters of Fides and John of Leyden. A second absolute novelty was the production, on July 9, of Flotow's latest opera, "Alma, l'Incantatrice," originally brought out at Paris in the preceding spring. This afforded a fresh triumph for Mdlle. Albani in the title-character, which she had previously filled in the Paris representation of the work. A marked success was obtained by Mdlle. Belocca in her excellent performance as Zingaretta; M. Capoul as Camoens having been an important accession in the cast. "Semiramide"—revived on July 11, after three years' interval—gave occasion for Madame Patti's appearance as the Assyrian Queen for the first time in England. Of her transcendently fine singing of the exceptionally florid and difficult music, as also of the effective performances of Madame Scalchi as Arsace, and M. Maurel as Assur, we spoke last week.

Besides the artists incidentally named above, other well-known singers have reappeared, including Mesdames Saar and Corsi, Mdlles. Smeroschi, Ghiotti, Cottino, Avigliana, De Synnerberg, Signori Bolis, Carpi, Pavani, Piazza, Sabater, Rosario, Rossi, Manfredi, Cotogni, Bagagiolo, Ciampi, Capponi, Ordinas, Caracciolo, Scolara, and Raguer.

Several new appearances have been made, with various degrees of success, including those of Mdlles. Cepeda, Bertelli, Mantilla, Sarda, and De Riti, Signor Carbone, and M. Jamet.

The orchestra—with Mr. Carrodus as leading violinist—and the chorus have been on the same extensive scale as in preceding seasons. Mr. J. Pittman has well fulfilled the duties of organist, besides having acted as adapter of the English text of the new operas; other offices having also been well filled as before, including those of the leader of the ballet, Mr. Betjemann; chorus-master, Signor C. Corsi; ballet-master, M. Hansen; and stage manager, Signor Tagliafico. The scenic artists, Messrs. Dayes and Caney, have maintained their high reputation, and the splendour of the stage effects has been as great as heretofore. The ballet department has again included the skilful dancing of Mdlle. Girod and the Mdlles. Reuters, besides that of Mdlle. Zucchi, a new appearance. Signori Vianesi and Bevignani have, in alternation, displayed the same ability in conducting the performances as during past seasons.

Covent Garden Theatre will reopen on Aug. 3 for a series of Promenade Concerts, as before, under the direction of Messrs. Gatti. The arrangements include the engagement of a fine orchestra of about eighty performers, of many of the principal English vocalists, and of Mdlle. Marie Krebs, Miss Josephine Lawrence, and Madame D'Remury as solo pianists; M. Paul Viardot as solo violinist, and Mr. H. Reynolds as solo cornet. Dr. Arthur Sullivan is to be the conductor, and Mr. A. Burnett the leading violinist.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

We have already given a summary of the regular season of this establishment, which closed on Saturday week. The series of farewell performances, which began on the following Monday with "Il Flauto Magico," will terminate this (Saturday) evening with "Lucia di Lammermoor," for the benefit of Madame Gerster, a repetition of "Carmen" having been announced for the previous evening for the benefit of Mdlle. Minnie Hauk. The other operas given during the interval have been repetitions of works mostly cast as recently noticed. Of the concluding performances we must speak next week.

Mr. Mapleson's benefit took place at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, when the programme included an afternoon concert and an evening performance in the theatre of "Don Giovanni." The concert consisted of familiar materials, and was conducted by Sir Michael Costa, the vocalists having been Madame Etelka Gerster, Mdlles. Minnie Hauk, Pappenheim, Alwina Valleria, and Tremolli; Signori Fancelli, Del Puente, and Galassi, and M. Thierry—with occasional co-operation of the chorus of her Majesty's Theatre, the band of which, in association with that of the Crystal Palace, played the overtures to "Masaniello" and "Zampa." The cast of the opera included Madame Hélène Crosmond as Donna Anna, Mdlle. Valleria as Elvira, Madame Trebelli as Zerlina, Signor Del Puente as Don Giovanni, and M. Thierry as Leporello.

Special concerts are to take place this (Saturday) afternoon at the Alexandra Palace and the Crystal Palace. The festival in aid of the Tonic Sol-Fa College will be held at the former place, the programme including performances by 3000 certificated singers. At the Muswell Hill building a Mendelssohn Festival will be given, the first part of the concert consisting of compositions by that composer.

The performance of Suppé's operetta "Galatea and Pygmalion" and a concert are announced to take place this (Saturday) evening, at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, under the auspices of the London Academy of Music.

ALERT AND DISCOVERY EXPEDITION.

Experts alone are competent to decide how much of success was accomplished and how much of failure was incurred by the expedition whose story is recorded, with a fulness of detail which would be wearisome if it were not so instructive and so useful, in the two volumes entitled Narrative of a Voyage to the Polar Sea, by Captain Sir G. S. Nares, R.N., K.C.B., F.R.S. (Sampson Low and Co.) But anybody, expert or not, is competent to testify to the exceeding interest of the narrative, the sailor-like vigour and smartness of its style, the manly frankness and modesty of its tone and spirit. The expedition, to speak bluntly and briefly, neither accomplished the north-west passage nor reached the North Pole; but, for all that, it need not be regarded as a failure. It may be credited with so much success, at least, as is freely allowed to the aspirant who aims at the pigeon and hits the crow, even if the gallant members of the expedition do not, as they well might, console themselves with the reflection that by deserving success they have done more than is generally done by those who win it. What was it, then, somebody may ask, that the expedition accomplished? The answer may be given in a very few words, so far as the main purpose of the voyage is concerned. It proved conclusively, in the opinion of many high authorities, that, if the North Pole is ever to be reached at all, the attempt must not be made by way of Smith's Sound. And how not to do it is, when the ways of proceeding are limited in number, a sort of guide in the direction of how to do it. "The Pole," it is roundly asserted by one authority, "must be sought by ship alone, and by the only track which has not yet been found impossible for steam to penetrate—by the sea of Spitzbergen." However this may be, the problem is pretty clearly one of which it cannot be said "solvitur ambulando;" but it is not impossible, however improbable, that the solution may in good time be provided by means of some new invention connected with locomotion, and that men will be found to have vexed themselves fruitlessly about the question of routes. It needs a machine which will transport men and provisions and whatever else is necessary, in a reasonable time, over 360 miles, on more or less impracticable ice.

It was on May 29, 1875, that the expedition started from Portsmouth, if not with the "favouring gales" of the poet, still with an inspiriting telegram from the Queen. On July 4 they crossed the Arctic Circle, and from that time until Sept. 3 they "experienced perpetual day." On Oct. 4, 1876, they recrossed the Arctic Circle, after "fifteen months' unnatural division of light and darkness." The record of what took place during those fifteen months is the history of gallant efforts only half-rewarded, great sufferings nobly borne, long trials patiently met, monotonous existence cheerfully accepted, various dangers courageously encountered and overcome, a terrible disaster to crown the whole. That disaster, it will be remembered, was a dire, unexpected, inexplicable visitation of scurvy—a disaster which is fully described in the volumes under consideration, with the addition of written opinions whence the reader may be able to form an independent judgment as to the controversy not yet at rest about the probable causes of the disheartening outbreak. The expedition, as everybody knows, consisted of two vessels, the "Discovery" and the "Alert"—the former under the command of Captain Stephenson, and the latter under the command of Captain Nares, who had both ships under his general orders. Both ships crossed Smith Sound on July 29, 1875, and on the 31st their struggles with the obstructive ice may be said to have fairly commenced. On Aug. 25 a suitable harbour was discovered, northward of Lady Franklin Sound; and there the Discovery was left in winter quarters from that day until about Aug. 20, 1876. Meantime, that the honours of the expedition might be shared as fairly as possible between the two ships, a sledge crew, under an officer from the Discovery, was taken on in the Alert, which on Sept. 1 reached the spot at which she was destined, but by no means intended, to pass the winter, under the protection of her very enemy the ice, and threatened, for eleven dreary months, with a catastrophe, should she experience "a gale blowing towards the shore." Henceforth, until the expedition prepared to return, the tale is, so far as the main purpose of the gallant explorers was concerned, a tissue of disappointments and misfortunes; and the only way properly to appreciate it is to take the map and follow the courses of the several sledge parties during the autumn of 1875 and the spring of 1876. To summarise the story here, with such omissions as limits of space would necessitate, might bewilder rather than enlighten the reader, who would find himself in latitudes too high for his attainment and among Capes and Points of which he had never so much as heard the names. Suffice it to remark that the exertions of Commander Markham, Lieutenant Aldrich, and other gallant officers and men were attended, during the autumn, with some very serious consequences in the way of frost-bite, to say nothing of dogs in fits and other unpleasant occurrences, but that the results of the sledge-journeys were, on the whole, satisfactory and encouraging. They are thus summed up by Sir George Nares:—"The advance of a large dépôt of provisions in the following spring; an invaluable additional experience in Arctic travelling; and further, by our greater good fortune in finding continuous land over or near which to travel, we succeeded in wresting from Sir Edward Parry and his companions their gallantly achieved distinction of having advanced the British flag to the highest northern latitude."

When, however, they set to work in that spring, for which they had so carefully and energetically prepared, the hopes aroused were doomed to disappointment. General Frost-Bite was reinforced by General Scurvy, and both made war upon the dauntless sailors who had invaded the land of ice: already, during the autumn the frost-bitten had been obliged to submit to amputation; and now the scurvy-stricken were to be disabled, and in some cases to die. Moreover, when anxiety touching the safety of the several sledge-parties, whether commanded by Markham, or Aldrich, or another, was relieved, the relief was to be purchased at the cost of knowing that the object of the expedition was unattainable. It was agreed on all hands that the North Pole is not to be reached by the route which was adopted, not even with a lighter equipment and with better fortune in the important matter of health.

In the meantime the winter had been passed, and how that wearisome period was whiled away is the theme of many pages, which are the most agreeable and not the least interesting, although they are of course among the least important, of the two volumes. Of snow-houses, of ventilation, of Arctic clothing, of astronomical observations, of auroral phenomena; of the way in which Guy Fawkes is treated by Arctic explorers, of performances at the "Royal Arctic Theatre," and the manner in which Lieutenant Aldrich did with his piano supply the place of a whole band of musicians; of parasalenæ, three mock moons at once, prismatic colours and natural fireworks, of a "ladies' mile" marked out and so christened on the frozen Arctic snow, of a splendid Christmas Day at a "temperature of minus 34 deg.," and of other accompaniments of an Arctic winter, the author discourses in a style that rivets the attention, enlists the sympathies, gratifies the curiosity, and, in the case of the young and adventurous, is calculated to excite emulation.

In an ample but not voluminous appendix will be found a great deal of scientific information, based upon notes taken or edited by Captain H. W. Feilden, R.A., naturalist to the expedition, and divided under the heads of ethnology, mammalia, ornithology, ichthyology, and so on. When it is added that there are two useful maps, many admirable illustrations, and the desirable index; that the two volumes are got up, as regards the paper, type, and binding, after a fashion which is simply excellent; and that the narrative is most conveniently arranged so as to give, as it were, a monthly report of the whole proceedings, readers will surely understand that, whether in point of intrinsic interest and value or of extrinsic form and features, the work is one which has an exceptional claim to their notice and regard.

Another book upon this subject is The Great Frozen Sea: A Personal Narrative of the Voyage of the Alert, by Captain Albert Hastings Markham, R.N. (Daldy, Isbister, and Co.). He had, before taking the command of that vessel in the expedition of 1875 and 1876, proved his talents for this kind of authorship by his narratives of the "Cruise of the Rosario" in the West Pacific, and of a "Whaling Cruise in Baffin's Bay." His merits as a courageous, skilful, and persevering leader of Arctic research, as well as a naval officer of high professional ability, have been generally acknowledged. In conducting, as he did, the memorable sledge journey over the northward tract of perpetual ice-fields and ice-hills, which may perhaps be regarded as a continent of ice, and in thus advancing farther towards the North Pole than any other party has ever done, Captain Markham has earned a conspicuous rank among Arctic explorers. This volume tells the story in a very interesting manner, and will probably find acceptance with a larger circle of readers than the officially authentic and complete account of the whole expedition prepared by Captain Sir George Nares. All the details of sledge travelling, halting and encamping, provisioning, cooking, clothing, and the carrying of weights, are minutely described. The volume is furnished with maps and illustrations which help the understanding of its subject.

A handsome folio, published by Mr. Marcus Ward, of Chandos-street, and entitled Shores of the Polar Sea, contains sixteen fine chromo-lithographs and many engravings, from drawings by Dr. Edward L. Moss, one of the medical officers of this expedition on board her Majesty's ship Alert. Dr. Moss has written a very entertaining and sufficient commentary, narrative and descriptive, to accompany these striking views of Arctic scenery and pictures of the various positions of the ships, the sledges, and the crews or detached parties of men, which form a vivid representation of all the outward aspects most worthy to be remembered in their experience of that wonderful region. This volume would make an appropriate gift for Christmas, when even the mild English winter is apt to remind us of what we have heard and read concerning the Arctic world, and there may be some additional relish of home comforts at the snug fireside in contemplating such adventures or scenes of so wild and stern a nature as we see here depicted.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

The subject of our Illustration this week is the interior of the brilliant saloon of prismatic glass—the ceiling and walls being entirely covered with decorations in that material—which has been constructed for the Shah of Persia, in the Pavilion erected for his Majesty's accommodation, on the Passy side of the Trocadéro Park. The exterior of the building is not remarkable, except for the green colour of its walls and the heraldic Golden Lion, armed with a scymetar, which adorns its front; but the vestibule, which occupies all the ground floor, has its pillars and sides ornamented with porcelain of Oriental design; and a fountain and vases filled with flowers give it a very pleasing aspect. The saloon above, which is shown in our Engraving, is carpeted and furnished with luxurious divans and tables covered with the finest gold-embroidered cloth, or the textile fabrics of Cashmere, than which nothing can be more sumptuous and splendid. A peculiar decorative effect is produced by the use of glass, whether cut into innumerable diamond facets, as in the ceiling, to refract the rays of light, or worked in a variety of geometrical patterns, on the walls, with a sort of damask, bright and black surfaces relieved against each other. This style of ornament is likely to be imitated by some of the cafés and restaurants of Paris.

The joint committee of her Majesty's Commissioners and of the Society of Arts for Promoting Visits of Selected Artisan Reporters to the Paris Exhibition have completed the arrangements under which artisans will be sent to Paris. Each artisan is expected to devote from eight to fourteen days to the visit. He will be paid £8, out of which he must pay all charges connected with his trip. Free admission to the Exhibition will be granted. Arrangements have been made with the South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Companies, for the purchase of a return ticket to Paris and back, available for fourteen days, at the price of 20s. Lodgings have been provided at a reduced scale, and arrangements have been made for obtaining meals also at reduced charges. Besides the artisans selected by the joint committee, artisans may be sent at the expense of their employers or local committees. Such artisans will be supplied with the necessary cards and certificates to enable them to take advantage of arrangements and facilities afforded by the joint committee. Employers or local committees subscribing to the fund may select or send out artisans in number to the extent of one for each £10 subscribed, or subscribers to the fund may nominate for consideration and selection by the joint committee such artisans as they may think suitable to represent the special trade or trades of the district or party subscribing. Subscriptions are sought from local committees, individual firms, or employers to enable the joint committee to carry out the undertaking on a complete and successful scale.

IN A WOOD WITH THE WOODBINE.

It is a sultry summer's day, and I am endeavouring to "take it coolly," with a leisurely stroll along the wide pathway—or "Riding," as we term it—of a wood. The wood is so large, and the Riding is so long and straight, that at its farthest end I can only catch the very narrowest peep of the blue sky, at the extremity of the avenue of trees. The path of this Riding has grassed over since I saw the horses of the scarlet-coated Huntsman and Whips trampling it into mud, under the bare boughs of the wintry trees; and now, on this hot day, to stroll down this green avenue, is to pace the aisle of a grand cathedral of Nature, where the pillars and groined arches are supplied by the tree-trunks and interlacing boughs, and where the elaborate traceries are worked out in the rich foliage and diversified creepers. The sun-glow irradiates the trees and makes a lattice-work of shine and shade across my path; there is everywhere a glimmer of light among the dense masses of deep green; and the tall, spreading bracken-ferns not only make a rich under-growth, but also fringe the sides of the Riding with a gracefulness that is peculiarly their own.

It is so green on all sides that we can at once emphatically pronounce this to be the green-wood—the good green wood, the merry green-wood, "Where the mavis and merle are singing." And they are singing, now! The bold thrush, not whispering soft nothings to his plainly-dressed wife, but shouting at the top of his voice, "Sweet bird! sweet bird!" with a delightful iteration of rapturous joy. Here we see to perfection as was said (in his "Hero and Leander") by Thomas Hood, who, in many of his poems, especially in his "Plea of the Midsummer Fairies," has drawn beautiful and truthful pictures of sylvan scenes.

> The pride of Summer, the green prime,
> The many, many leaves all twinkling;

But, although there is in this woodland landscape such a preponderance of green, yet other colours are not lacking to vary the hue, if it were possible for the spectator to see anything monotonous in the eye-refreshing tint. Foxgloves, unfortunately, do not grow here; consequently, I miss their clusters of tall spires hung with fairy-folk bells. But, by the sides of the small brooks and ditches that traverse the wood, I note the reddish purples on the straight stems of the loose-strife; and there are golden buttercups, and pink campions, and dark briony, and the browner nut-bushes, and the pale blossoms of the blackberry, and the delicate yellows and reds of the many flowering grasses, and the large bunches of white bloom on the wayfaring tree, and the lovely blush of the common dog rose, and the white privet blossom with its delicate perfume, and the broad dusty-white discs of the elder, somewhat strong in its scent, were it not counteracted and overpowered by the delicious perfume of the honeysuckle. Delicious, indeed! it has truly been said, that

> No blossom wild
> So rich a scent displays;
> So far, so full, the passing air
> The sweetness of its breath may bear.

Swinging and trailing from tree to tree, in some places, as I note, to a height of twenty feet from the ground, it hangs its chains of blossoms from bough to bough, their prevailing tint being a pale cream, with variations of brighter yellows and crimsons.

> With clasping tendrils it invests the branch,
> Else unadorned, with many a gay festoon
> And fragrant chaplet; recompensing well
> The strength it borrows with the grace it lends.

Here, on either side of this woodland walk, I see thousands of these gay festoons thickly covered with their fragrant chaplets. Surely this delicious plant—beloved by the artists and sculptors of Greece—was never seen to greater luxuriance than in this wood, unvisited as it is at this season of the year, and only patronised in the time of sport, when honeysuckles are not in bloom. Now they are wasting their sweetness, so far as appreciative noses are concerned; and, though no Rimmel or Piesse or Lubin is here, to transfer those perfumes by his magical art, where they can give pleasure to others than myself. Among the guests who, on the authority of Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney, attended Lady Flora's tea-party I remember that there were representatives of the Honeysuckle family.

> The woodbine's honeyed perfumes breathe,

> The sweet Misses Woodbine, from country and town,
> With their brother-in-law, the wild Trumpet, came down.

Very fragrant and lovely are all the members of the Woodbine family. Michael Drayton, Shakspeare's contemporary, in his poem of "The Three Chaplets," says,

> These honeysuckles, then, I'll take,
> Whose sweets shall help their smelling.

In the same poem he had also said,

> Then eglantine I'll next put in,
> The sense with sweetness seizing:

thus properly distinguishing between the woodbine and the eglantine, which is the wild sweetbriar. And this is worth noting, as Milton, in "L'Allegro," wrongly calls the honeysuckle "the twisted Eglantine;" and it is also doubtful to what plant Keats refers as "the pastoral Eglantine," in his "Ode to a Nightingale." Shakspeare, as ever, is perfectly clear on this point, and never confused the woodbine with the eglantine. Where, for example, in "Cymbeline," Arviragus says that fair Fidele's grassy tomb shall not lack the primrose, like her face; the azured harebell, like her veins;

> No; nor
> The leaf of eglantine, whom not to slander,
> Out-sweeten'd not thy breath!

And that famous bank, known to Oberon, where slept Titania, was > Quite over-canopied with lush woodbine,

> With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine.

Here the two plants are mentioned as combining their fragrance. In another passage, in the same fairy play, he gives the two names of the honeysuckle. The enamoured Titania says:—

> Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms!
> . . . So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle,
> Gently entwist.

It is the most luxuriant of our climbing plants, and well deserves its popular name woodbine, from the way in which its bine trails from branch to branch of the trees and climbs up their trunks with lithe flexibility. When Tennyson's Olivia, in her fit of frolic mirth, strove to span the thick waist of the Talking Oak, and the monarch of the forest wished that he might be the fair young beech, that he might have been altogether clasped in her dainty arms, he had this consolation—

> Yet seemed the pressure thrice as sweet
> As woodbine's fragile hold.

Unlike the ritualistic American poplars that bow to the east, the woodbine follows the course of the sun from east to west, and puts out its welcome clusters of green leaves earlier than most of our hedge-row plants. By-the-way, the cottagers use the juices of these green leaves as a potent remedy against the sting of a bee. Charlotte Smith told us how—

> Wound o'er the hedge-rows' oaken boughs,
> The woodbine's tassels float in air.

And as I think of the honeysuckle brightening the hedgerow with its flowers and fragrance, I recall the time, now twenty-eight years ago, when I put down my name for a volume of verse to be published by subscription, by a young pattern-drawer for muslin-work, in Glasgow. The volume was issued—in April, 1853, printed by David Bogue—with the unpretentious titlepage, "Poems, by Alexander Smith;" and in the numerous—some critics said, too numerous—similes of fresh thought and fancy the hero of "A Life-Drama" was made to say,

> I'll write a tale through which my passion runs
> Like honeysuckle through a hedge of June.

It was a simile as true as beautiful; and, although the author died all too young, yet that book of "Poems"—that could not see the light until the expenses of its publication were guaranteed—literally "thrust fame upon him." But, talking of similes in connection with the woodbine, we may remember that when Hero, in Shakspeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," bids Margaret persuade Beatrice to hide in the bower in Leonato's garden, she describes it as > the pleached bower,

> Where honeysuckles, ripen'd by the sun,
> Forbid the sun to enter—like favourites
> Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
> Against the power that bred it.

A most appropriate plant is the woodbine for a "bower," even if it were the bower of Eve herself, in Eden, where everything

> With what to sight or smell was sweet; and, we may remember that, on the eve of May Day, the May Queen told her mother that

> The honeysuckle round the porch has wov'n its wavy bowers.

Tennyson is too correct an observer of Nature to represent the woodbine in blossom on the last day of April; but by that date the forward green leaves of the plant make a goodly show.

My stroll down this green pathway of the wood has brought me to the hand-gate that opens on to a field of heather-like, many-coloured clover; and I find that I have come to the end of my walk in the "Riding." By-the-way, "Walks in Ridings" would be no bad theme, were it not for the fear that the reader would expect to peruse an account of a pedestrian tour in the Ridings of Yorkshire. Well, it is time for me to leave the wood; so I will gather some of its woodbine, and, backing up these delicately-tinted and deliciously-perfumed flowers with some smaller sprays of the bracken fern, I shall carry home a bouquet that is not only good to the sight, but pleasant to the smell—according to the good old English word, a veritable "nosegay." CUTHBERT BEDE.

ART IN PARIS.

THE UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.—SCANDINAVIA.

(From our Correspondent.)

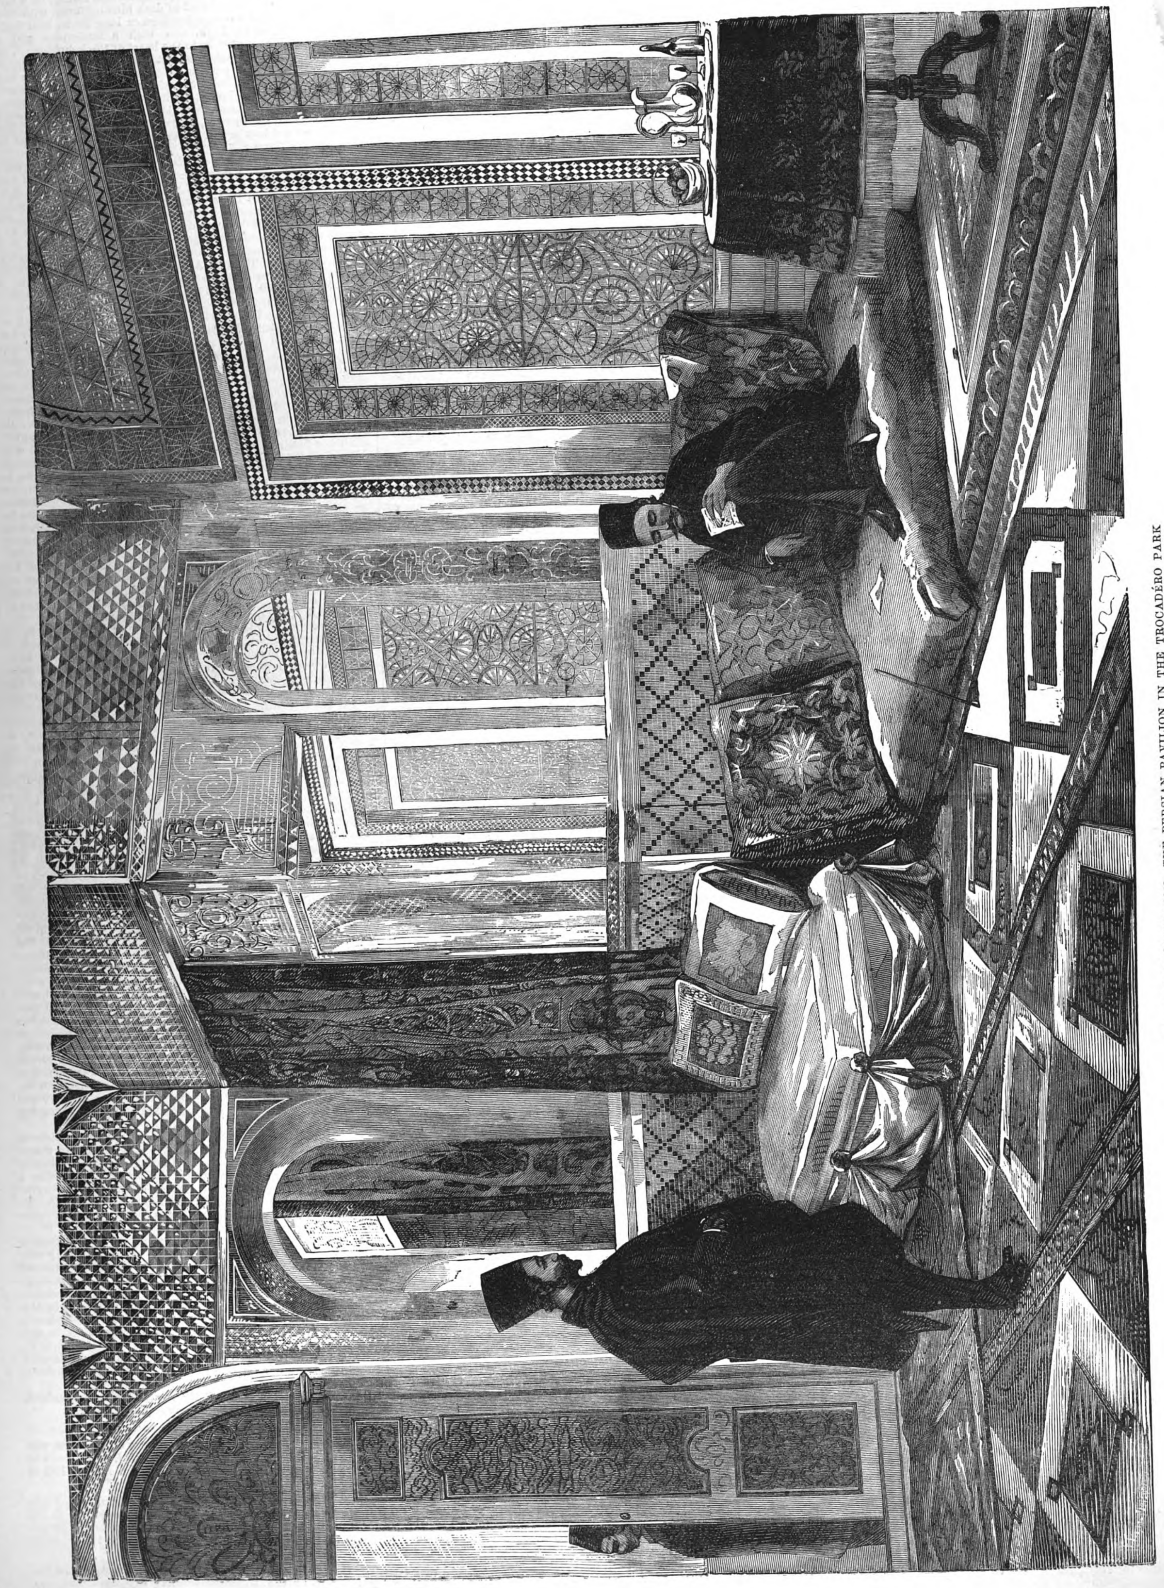
In the present article we propose glancing at a few of the more characteristic pictures belonging to those countries which, in an art-sense at least, may be termed the Minor States. Three of such we include under the general name of Scandinavia. This glance must necessarily be cursory, as the limit allotted to these papers has already been reached.

Beginning with Sweden and Norway, we find, as a general rule, that the artists of these countries devote themselves to sea-pieces and landscapes, and that with no ordinary amount of success. A. Wahlberg, of Sweden, for example, has several fine landscapes, two especially—one with a moonlight effect on a seaside village, with shipping; and another showing a similar effect on the open sea and on some craft by a jetty in the foreground, with a lighthouse in the distance. In the pictures in which foliage is introduced, Wahlberg shows much of the lightness and delicacy of Corot, with greater solidity of workmanship and liveliness of colour. Another excellent landscapist is Oscar Törna. His Haymaking in a marshy meadow near a wooded village is very charming; but the style as well as the scene is French, and the nationality of a painter's works can never be asserted if he persists in going for inspiration to other lands. B. Nordenberg wields a more patriotic pencil, and shows us a young man brought home on a sledge with what appears to his anxious family, who crowd round him, a mortal hurt. It is but sorry consolation to them that the bear whose claws had wrought these terrible wounds is being borne in dead, suspended from a pole resting on the brawny shoulders of two peasants. The story is altogether very effectively told, and has about it a characteristic smack of the north. N. Forsberg is another Swedish artist whose technical qualities are of an undeniable order; and his professional tumbling boys, whose agile contortions are being watched by a rich Jew-looking showman, with the object of striking a bargain with their trainer, is in workmanship and colour all that one could possibly wish, only one regrets that such admirable talent is wasted on subjects not germane to the artist's native land. Count G. Von Rosen's lover buying for his sweetheart a bunch of roses in a crowded flower market in front of a Gothic façade is a bright, joyous picture, without being so slavishly French as some of its neighbours. Hugo Salmson, for example, in his two Picardy pictures—especially in the one showing a young peasant girl leaning on her hoe, as with her creel she rests on a green bank and looks towards the distant village—illustrates this. He does not altogether throw off his individuality, any more than do the others: only, like them, he submits himself too entirely to Parisian example and practice. One of the finest samples of this French influence will be found in A. Hagborg's Breton fisher-woman, with a flaxen-haired child in her arms, standing bare-footed at the end of a jetty, looking anxiously over the troubled sea. The figures are life-size, and that of the woman, in her scant attire, as she fronts unheedingly the storm, is striking in no ordinary degree. Jules Breton himself, we should imagine, would be proud to have painted this "Souvenir de Bretagne." H. P. Birger is French in another way. His proclivities lead him to depict the manners and customs of "Society" and of fashionable life; and C. Larsson again gives to his classic mythology a touch of modern French cynicism, and much more than a touch of modern French art. His "Amor-Mercurius," whom we see with a purse in one hand and a bow in the other, alighting undraped, with golden wings, before a golden curtain, is a very delightful conceit, and embodies all that the Academy can teach him either in form or colour. Mr. Larsson does here with yellow what Gainsborough did with blue, and what Mr. Whistler does with grey—he gives us what might be termed a "gloria in gold."

But Swedish artists are not all swallowed up by French methods and French themes. There is one at least among them who remembers that his country has a history, and that is Baron G. O. Cederström, brother, we presume, to Baron T. Cederström, who has a couple of clever genre pictures on the same wall as that which is adorned by the noble work which represents the officers of Charles XII. of Sweden bearing the dead body of their warrior King across the Norwegian frontier. The funeral procession winds grimly round a great rock which looms up against the snowstorm, and, as it passes, an old peasant and a boy with large ptarmigans slung from his back, stand awed and uncovered. The King, booted and gloved as in life, lies extended on the bier, his bare head resting on a soft white pillow. The officers, all in dark blue uniforms with dun yellow linings, and wearing leggings or long boots, bear their sad burden shoulder high, and with a tenderness and a solemnity which go at once to the heart of the beholder. The long train of the procession is lost in the distant windings of the stormy pass; the path is beset with danger, yet we feel that these war-worn veterans will never leave their sacred charge till they have laid it in its appointed Swedish grave. This picture atones for whatever lack of nationality is discoverable in works of lesser note, and will recall to the mind of the Swedish patriot how grand a part his country once played in the affairs of Europe.

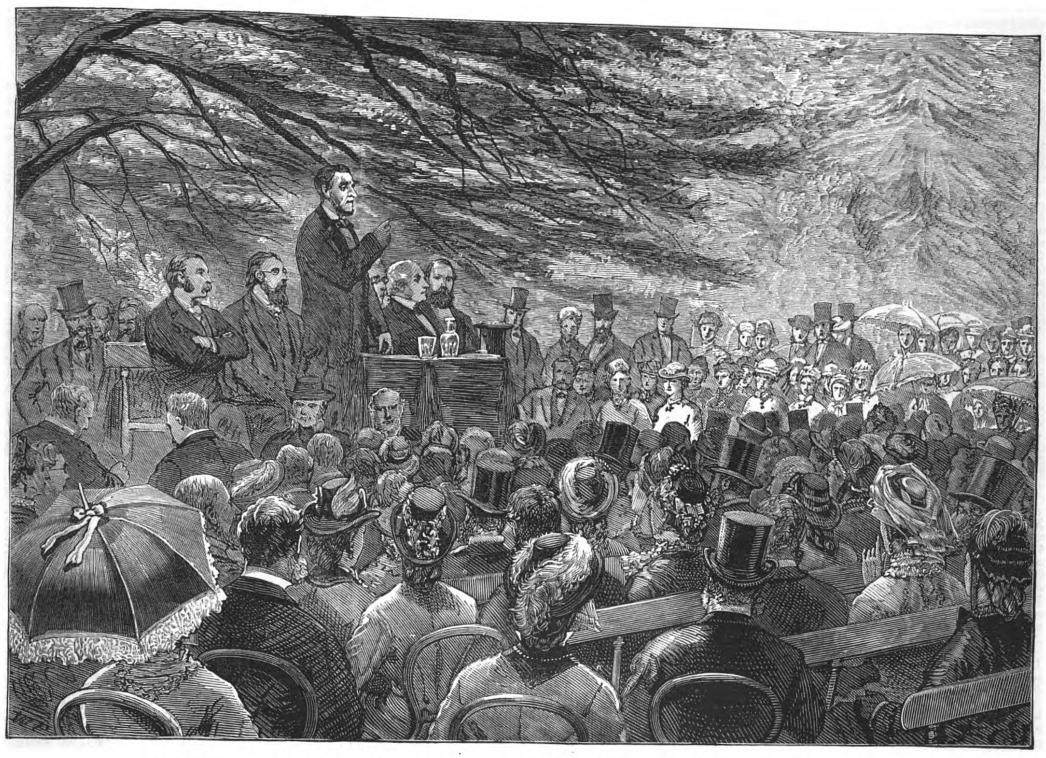
The Norwegians have no historic work of importance sufficient to warrant its being accepted as a pendant to the one we have just described; and yet it can scarcely be said that they are inferior to their Swedish brethren in art excellence. P. N. Arbo's Norwegian legend of the "Asgaardreid," whom we see on their black steeds dashing impetuously through the air above the moonlit mountains, accompanied by ravens and owls, is a fine imaginative work of art of which any country might be proud. Then in A. Askevold we have an artist who knows well how to combine figures with landscape and give a realistic character to both. "Evening at the Châlet," showing two milkmaids chatting with a young huntsman seated on a log of wood, and the cattle, to the amusement of a crowd of boys and peasants, being ferried over a lake en route for their mountain pasturage, are both of them pleasing exemplifications of our remark. Another landscapist of high character is W. Gegerfelt. His girl and child gathering sticks by a rushy, pollard-reflecting lake, on which a man plies a boat, and which is bounded in the distance by a rising ground which is made important by its windmill, is splendid in composition and noble every way. N. B. Möller's "View of the Sea," as it dashes over the rocks which environ a fisher village has a fine grey quality in it which will delight all true colourists. For this tone H. Gude substitutes a yellowish green; and in his "Scotch Landscape" he is rather mechanical in his wave drawing; otherwise, the ruined castle on the hill, the distant mountains, and the cloud forms are all excellent. H. Dahl shows a nice sense of humour in the way in which he has depicted for us the astonishment of the young peasant who was ready to pitch a load of new-mown hay into what he thought the waiting-boat, but which now, to the yielding oar of the laughing young boatman and his sweetheart, moves quietly away from the stepping-stone on which the good-natured bumpkin stands, still weighted with his load of hay. The green translucency under the boat is excellent, but the distant lake is conventional.

L. Munthe, who is a host in himself and has two pictures in the present Exhibition, finds in the delineation of winter scenery a by no means unworthy rival in F. Smith-Hald. This painter's work represents travellers on a snow-covered quay coming from a steamer. His atmosphere is clearer and his touch crisper than M. Munthe's; and from his preferring bright frosty weather to the snowy slush in which his rival delights it is quite possible he may yet become the more popular man of the two. J. Schive's row of pollards by a frozen stream shows the influence of Munthe. M. Müller is at home in a pine forest. His brushwork may be rough, but this matters little to one who understands so well the treatment of light. Among genre subjects, V. S. Lerche's "Refectory," in which three priests sit round a well-appointed table and tell each other stories of questionable edification, deserves special notice. Notable also are the portraits of E. Pettersen and O. Rusten; the landscapes of F. Borgen, J. M. Grimelund, S. Jacobsen and F. Thaulow; and the two figure-subjects by C. M. Ross, representing a handsome young lady violinist before and after her début, are certainly, in knowledge and execution, above the ordinary level. The most ambitious picture in the Norwegian gallery is unquestionably "The Expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise," by H. Heyerdahl; and, had the artist been fortunate in his male model, it would also have been the most successful. But Adam is of a forbidding countenance and of insignificant stature. He looks back and clenches his fist almost revengefully. Eve, on the other hand, is lovely enough in form, so far as that form goes; but neither he nor she realises those heroic proportions with which we mentally endow our grand progenitors. She droops her head and buries her hands and face in the abundance of her dishevelled hair, and thus we behold the disinherited pair wending their way into the gathering storm. In the sculpture department we were much struck with the fine classic feeling C. D. Magelasen has thrown into the helmeted figure of "Méléagre," whose sword rests on the head of the mighty boar of Calydon. The figure is nobly and sympathetically conceived, and modelled with all the learning of the schools.



To Denmark we can give but small space, as there is little on the walls to differentiate her work from that of her two Scandinavian sisters. C. Bloch is the leading historical painter, and his "Captivity of Christian II. of Denmark" furnishes a fair example of his manner, which is tender and sympathetic; and the principal marine-painter is C. F. Sörensen, who is represented by three important pictures. O. Bache, J. Exner, H. Hansen, C. Neumann, P. C. Skovgaard, and J. V. Sonne are all members of the Danish Academy, and all well represented; but there is scarcely sufficient individuality in any one of them to call for any special mention. The late V. Marstrand, director of the Academy, has his genius illustrated by four works of a highly respectable character, and this respectability—a word unknown in the æsthetic vocabulary—runs through the whole of Danish art. We must not at the same time omit to mention that, in the works of such sculptors as the two Bissens, C. C. Peters, A. V. Saaby, C. Smith, T. Stein, and L. Hasselriis, we were repeatedly reminded that we were among the creations of the countrymen of Thorvaldsen.

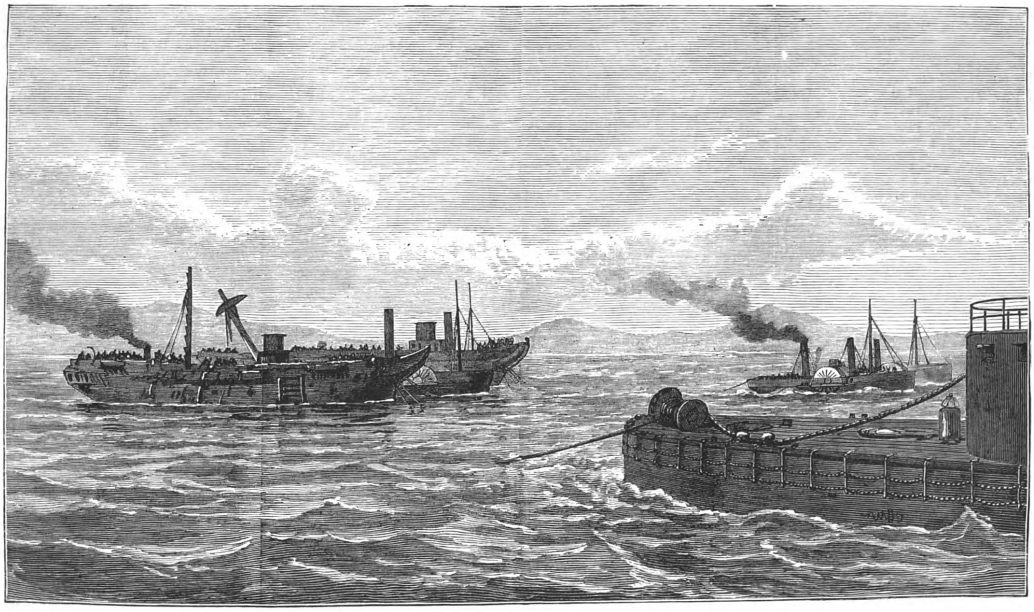
Denmark's total art-contributions number one hundred, Sweden's a hundred and two, and Norway's sixty-eight.



A new wet dock at Ayr, having an area of six acres, was opened on the 18th inst. by Mr. William Baird, of Elie. The works were begun in 1874, and the memorial stone was laid in 1876 by Sir James Fergusson, Bart.

Mr. F. N. Menzies, secretary of the Highland and Agricultural Society has been presented with a cheque for £1225 and a silver tankard, as tokens of the high appreciation by the members of the society of his labours during the twelve years he has held his position.

The Coroner's inquiry into the cause of the death of the miners killed by the Haydock Colliery explosion was concluded yesterday week, when the jury returned a verdict that the accident was caused by an outburst of gas, or fall of roof, but that there was no evidence to show by whom the gas was ignited.



THE PARIS EXHIBITION: THE PERSIAN PAVILION IN THE TROCADÉRO PARK

MEETING OF THE UNITED COMMITTEE FOR SPECIAL SERVICES, AT THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE'S VILLA, CHISWICK.

A CHISWICK GARDEN MEETING.

The novelty of a garden meeting for the business of a religious home missionary association has been chosen for the subject of one of our Illustrations. The religious services held throughout London for the benefit of such people of the working classes as are not accustomed to resort to churches and chapels are directed by an influential "United Committee" of ministers and members of different communions. On Tuesday week a large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled, by permission of the Duke of Devonshire, at Chiswick House, to hear an account from the United Committee of the work done during the year. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided at the meeting, which was held in the beautiful grounds of Chiswick House. Amongst the company were Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., Mr. Haldane, the Lord Provost of Glasgow, the Revs. S. Hebditch, Dr. Fleming, Nevison Loraine, J. Cohen, and Newman Hall. After a short opening service, Mr. Lloyd Harris made a statement, in which he said that the services commenced about nineteen years ago, had proved very successful, but had lately suffered for want of adequate public interest and support. The object of that great assemblage was to create new interest for so useful a work. There were between forty and fifty mission rooms and halls in different parts of the metropolis. Mr. Morley, M.P., dwelt upon the growing indifference of the people to public worship, as showing the necessity for continuing an agency of that kind. He contended that it would be well if Belgravia knew more of what was going on in Bethnal-green, and if the upper classes generally endeavoured to bring influence to bear upon the minds of the people in the poorest parts of London. He testified, from personal knowledge, to the great value of the services carried on, and strongly desired to see the work extended. Addresses of a similar character were delivered by the Rev. J. Cohen, who was fifteen years Rector of Whitechapel; the Rev. N. Loraine, the Rev. N. Sherbrook, and others. The Earl of Shaftesbury addressed the meeting. He made an earnest appeal on behalf of the work and the improvement of the lower classes of society. Votes of thanks to his Grace the Duke of Devonshire for his kindness in placing his grounds at the disposal of the committee, and to Lord Shaftesbury for presiding, terminated the proceedings.

RAISING H.M.S. EURYDICE IN THE CHANNEL, OFF THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

RAISING OF H.M.S. EURYDICE.

After repeated failures in the attempts to raise the wreck of the Eurydice, which capsized and sank two miles and a half off Dunnose on the afternoon of Sunday, March 24, the public began to doubt the probability of a successful issue of further operations. The authorities at Portsmouth Dockyard, who have had the assistance of the Master Attendant and Mr. Saunders, the Chief Constructor at Chatham, have been engaged, meanwhile, in preparations for another effort, which achieved a satisfactory movement on Tuesday week. Admiral Superintendent the Hon. F. A. C. Foley was actively at work on the wreck during both the day and night previous, having willing and able coadjutors in Captains Polkinghorne, Dathan, Batt, and Moss, Mr. W. B. Robinson, chief constructor at Portsmouth, and Mr. J. Purkis, dockyard foreman. Wire alterations of the former plan were few and simple. Wire hawsers had been substituted for the chains previously tried. The sterns of the Wave and the Swan, two smaller vessels which lay with their beams across the Eurydice, pointed towards Culver Cliff; while the larger vessels, the Pearl and the Rinaldo, stood alongside of them on the outside, pointing in the opposite direction. The two smaller vessels were each attached to the wreck by means of two toggles, the Rinaldo by two toggles and two jewel-ropes, and the Pearl by four jewel-ropes, all crossed in such a manner as to give the utmost resisting power. The wire hawsers used upon the Wave and the Swan were of seven-inch diameter; those on the Rinaldo and the Pearl were two of seven-inch and two of eight-inch. The lifting vessels—the Pearl, Rinaldo, Wave, and Swan—with the Popoff air-bag, which was calculated to have a raising power of about fifty tons, were got into position near the wreck on the Monday, and at one o'clock next morning operations were resumed. Previous examination by the divers had shown that the hull of the Eurydice was embedded to the extent of about 11½ ft., and when the work was resumed, with every prospect of a continuance of favourable weather, the chief officials were sanguine that, barring unforeseen accidents, the wreck would be removed from its cradle. At one o'clock in the morning, the tide being about flood, the work of letting water ballast into the craft, which had been pinned down in order to submerge them the registered depth, was commenced: 924 tons of water were pumped into the Pearl, until, with a depth in her hold of 10 ft., she was sunk 5 ft. 6 in. The Rinaldo was made to hold 600 tons, with an internal depth of 9 ft. and external 5 ft.; while the Wave and the Swan were immersed 3 ft. 6 in. by means of 190 tons of water in each. By the time this was finished there was rather less than an hour to spare before it was dead low-water, and, everything being made secure, by half-past five all was waiting for an indication of the turn of the tide. When it had fairly turned, the steam fire-engines on board the Pearl and the Rinaldo were set vigorously to work, and with the aid of the double hose were pumping the water very fairly, so that a steam-tug was sent alongside each of these two vessels, each with double hose to assist. This had been going on for about half an hour, when a tug was sent in between the Wave and the Swan in order to pump them. The wreck lay in 60 ft. of water, and having by this time accumulated so much dead-weight, to lift her at once to the surface would have been simply impracticable. The scheme of rescue was to raise her 10 ft. by means of a 10-ft. tide, plus whatever could be gained by the creation of buoyancy and bringing to bear additional lifting power. Therefore, supposing her to be lifted 10 ft. by the tide and 5 ft. by the buoyancy created by pumping the water out of the vessels, and so lifting her with them, there would be a lift of 15 ft.—only 3½ ft. more than the depth of the hole in which she was imbedded. It was agreed that the only practicable method would be by a series of lifts, taking advantage of every tide; and by repeating the experiment it was thus hoped that in eight or nine days she would be brought into water sufficiently shallow to permit of her being towed into Portsmouth Harbour.

Before the lifting operations fairly commenced the divers made another inspection with the special object of ascertaining whether the Popoff air-bag was in its place and secure. Having reported favourably, the pumping operations were watched with great interest, more especially as the wreck's mast came up at first, simultaneously with the lighters, and ultimately began to gain on them considerably. By eight o'clock the green seaweed on the wreck's mast had gradually become more conspicuous, and showed evident signs of her increasing buoyancy, and by half past nine the water had been pumped from all the lighters, and the Eurydice shook her mast occasionally. It was then determined to let well alone for the time, and wait for an improvement in the tide, seeing that the rising water was lifting the sunken craft so steadily and so well. The Thunderer was at hand waiting for her opportunity. Unfortunately she swept across the tide, and lost her cables and gear. This necessitated some delay, inasmuch as it took up valuable time in creeping for the hawsers. One was speedily recovered, but it required the work of a diver to find the other. The second, however, was to have been dispensed with, and a rope hawser substituted; but as the Thunderer was about steaming towards the scene of operations her capstan fell overboard, carrying the line.

Meanwhile experiments had been going on to test the buoyancy of the wreck. The hawsers facing Culver Cliff were drawn up taut, and those at the stern were slackened. This operation was continued some time, under difficulties, it being almost impossible to draw in the bow ropes in consequence of what appeared to be the immovability of the wreck. But suddenly the capstans on all the vessels worked easily, the wreck was seen to move, and the tars cheered lustily. The Thunderer having now become useless for all practical purposes for the day, the experiment with the hawsers was continued until it was deemed advisable to send down divers to report the state of affairs. They reappeared with the report that the Eurydice had been shifted out of the hole and moved from 150 to 180 feet, and that she rested on a solid foundation. Admiral Fanshawe, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, and Lord Elphinstone, representing the Lords of the Admiralty, with a number of naval officers, were spectators of the operation, upon the success of which Lord Elphinstone congratulated all concerned.

The moving of the vessel has been continued daily, when the tide was favourable; she was brought 900 ft. nearer to the shore on the second day; and she lay, at the end of last week, in a depth of 49 ft. of water at low tide; the vertical depth of her own hull, from gunwale to keel, being 30 ft. The most critical part of the operation, however, remained to be performed, if the weather and the state of the sea permitted, at the rise of yesterday's tide.

The State apartments in Windsor Castle are open for public inspection on the usual weekdays during the absence of the Queen at Osborne.

The grand jury of the county of Donegal have found true bills against three of the persons arrested for the murder of the Earl of Leitrim and his clerk and driver. But the trial has been postponed to the next assizes.

THE WIMBLEDON MEETING.

PRESENTATION OF PRIZES.

In the presence of many thousands of interested spectators, and under a tropical sun, the Nineteenth Annual Meeting of the National Rifle Association was on Saturday last brought to a conclusion. Saturday's proceedings formed a fitting sequel to the brilliant shooting of the previous fortnight. In the earlier years of the existence of the Association visitors were attracted to Wimbledon-common by a review on the second Saturday, the prizes being presented at the same time. From the limited space at disposal, and the necessarily restricted nature of any operations partaking of the character of a sham fight, it gradually sank, however, in the estimation both of the volunteers and the sight-seeing public, until, in 1876, it was superseded by a series of military athletic sports, which proved sufficiently attractive to warrant them being made a standing item in the concluding day's work of the Wimbledon Meeting.

The real business of the day was of course the distribution of the principal prizes to the fortunate winners by the Duke of Connaught. His Royal Highness drove up to the dais which had been prepared for him in front of the grand stand at about half-past-six o'clock in the afternoon, being accompanied by the Earl and Countess of Wharncliffe. He was received with a general salute by the guard of honour of the Queen's Westminsters, and the Royal standard was at once hoisted amid general cheering. Some 170 prize-winners were entitled to have their prizes publicly presented to them, but only a few availed themselves of the privilege. Conspicuous among the receivers of the higher class of prizes was Private Humphry, of the Cambridge University Rifles, who carried off the Queen's Prize some years ago. He now received the Canada Challenge Trophy for the "grand aggregate" score, which was accompanied by a money prize of £50, a money prize of £20 for the best score in the "Curtis and Harvey" competition for "any" rifle, one of £25 for the Halford "Ne Plus Ultra" at 1000 yards, another of £11 5s. in the Whiteley competition, and another of £30 in the first stage of the "Albert." Of course, each time Mr. Humphry came up to receive a prize he was loudly cheered. Another of the most successful competitors during the meeting was Major Young, of the 30th Middlesex, who received the following prizes:—£100 for having made the best score in the second stage of the "Albert," £20 for the third best score in the first stage of the competition, the £50 given by the Duke of Cambridge, £11 5s. for his score in the Glen Albyn, and £5 1s. 8d. for making the highest possible score in the Rifle St. Leger. Private Evans, of the Inns of Court, received the sum of £50 for winning, after shooting off a tie, the "Bass" Prize, and £21, the prize given by the Armourers' Company. Corporal King, of the London Scottish, was presented with the Snider Association Cup; and Sergeant-Major Smith, of the 6th Lancashire Militia, with the Any Rifle Association Cup. Hood, an A.B. in the Royal Navy, accompanied by several sailors, came up to receive the Army and Navy Challenge Cup, and £10 money prize. His Royal Highness, in presenting this very handsome prize, expressed his pleasure at seeing that the Navy had been so well represented at Wimbledon, and congratulated the recipient upon his well-deserved success. The "Mappin Brothers'" Challenge Cup and Goblets for the largest score made by squads of infantry volunteers over the Loyd-Lindsay course on Friday were received by the representative team of the 1st Administrative Battalion, Surrey, and the Belgian Challenge Cup and £30 for the best volley firing by those of the 1st Berks. The China Challenge Cup and £25 in money was carried off by the 1st Devon. The Volunteer Cadet Corps Match Trophy was presented to the representatives of Charterhouse. His Royal Highness complimented the boys who had won it on the good beginning they had made. The Eton boys, who had won the Ashburton Challenge Shield in the Public Schools Match, were loudly cheered when they came up dressed in their grey and light blue uniform; and his Royal Highness, in presenting the shield, expressed the pleasure he felt that Eton was keeping up its reputation for shooting. The Spencer Cup, won in the second stage of the same competition, was presented to Private Montgomery, of Glenalmond. The Chancellor's Challenge Plate, contended for by the Oxford and Cambridge Universities, was received by the representatives of Cambridge, and the Rajah of Kolapore's Cup by the home team. In presenting to the Canadian team the prizes, to the value of £80, which they have won during the meeting, his Royal Highness expressed the great pleasure he felt at meeting the representatives of the Canadian Dominion upon that occasion, and stated that he had been especially desired by the Prince of Wales to say that he much regretted having been prevented from carrying out his intention of visiting their camp during the meeting, and from personally congratulating them upon their success. Private Gratwicke, of the 1st Devon, received the St. George's Challenge Vase, the Dragon Cup, the gold jewel, and the sum of £30. The representatives of Ireland, who have again succeeded in carrying off the Elcho Shield, were warmly received on coming up to take the trophy won by their extraordinary skill with the rifle. Earl Waldegrave attended to receive the Viziamagram Challenge Cup, which was won by the Lords in the "Lords and Commons" match this year, his Royal Highness complimenting the former on their victory. Corporal Larway, of the Bristol Engineers, received the sum of £100 given by the Prince of Wales, and the National Rifle Association's Prince's Badge. Private Lowe, of the Queen's, Westminster, was loudly applauded when he came to receive the National Rifle Association silver medal and silver badge and £60 for making the highest score after shooting off a tie in the first stage of the Queen's. The great event of the day was the presentation of the Queen's Prize of £250 and the gold medal and badge of the National Rifle Association to Private Rae, of the 11th Stirling. When he came to the dais to receive the prize a ringing cheer was given, the band of the Victorias playing "See, the conquering hero comes." His Royal Highness, in handing the purse containing the prize to the fortunate recipient, congratulated him on his admirable shooting, and expressed a hope that when he returned to Scotland he would remember with pride the success he had obtained at the Wimbledon Meeting of 1878. This bringing the proceedings to a termination, his Royal Highness re-entered his carriage and drove off, being loudly cheered as he left the ground.

The athletic sports, which had been suspended while the ceremony of the distribution was going forward, were then resumed, and were not concluded till about eight o'clock, when Lady Wharncliffe presented the handsome trophies to the winners. The programme was of a most voluminous character, and contained forty-six events, which were carried out in an excellent manner by a committee acting under the superintendence of Mr. William Waddell, of the London Athletic Club. Some of the contests were exceedingly keen, especially the tent-pegging and lemon-slicing, in which great proficiency was shown by the competitors.

The concert at Stafford House last week produced £300 for the hospitals at Gallipoli and the lines of Bulair.

PARIS AT THE CAFÉ.—NO. IV.

Having in our last paper come a good deal north of the Latin district, with which we began, let us ascend a little farther, to the "grand" Boulevards, on the grandest of which—the Italiens—is to be found the famous Tortoni's, better known to the non-literary than either the Procope or the Régence. It is, as Baedeker tells us, "a restaurant of the highest class;" and has been for very many years the resort of the chief Parisian "dandies," "bucks," or "swells"—as our English slang would successively have called them. Here we are still shown Talleyrand's "little blue room"—though it has, like most things, changed colour since his time, probably more than once. "Either came at noon" very often, though very long ago, "either came at noon" very often, though very long ago, that most perfect type of the fine gentleman, the Comte d'Orsay, whom we English have almost got into the habit of considering our own; and here were sometimes seen—one fifty, the other hardly more than a dozen years ago—two great rival statesmen, neither of whom has maintained the character of a Parisian boulevard-haunter. Yet there was once no more perfect little "beau" (quoiqu' il n'eût jamais la beauté) than M. Thiers, the great statesman and indefatigable worker whose loss France has not ceased to mourn. Hear this description of him in times past, from the pen of M. Rude—to whom I owe so many pleasant reminiscences. "There alights at the door of Tortoni's, from his horse—a white one—a little man, still very young, lively and bustling, in a tight frock-coat, light trousers with broad straps, and boots perfectly blacked, flicking his boots and trousers with his whip: he eats an ice, and is off again." And such was once the future "Saviour of France!" His rival can never have resembled this: yet in 1865 among the frequenters of Tortoni's there was to be seen the Count von Bismarck.

From the Boulevard des Italiens it is but one step eastward to the Boulevard Montmartre: it is not a very far cry from the great café of "swelldom" to that of the theatres, the Café des Variétés. Here in the olden time, when Plancus was yet Consul, the actors from the neighbouring theatre used, between the acts, to come—the salon up stairs communicating with the "green-room"—and take their cup of coffee in the most affable way, all the while habited in the royal robes of the stage. But these relics of the days of High Jinks have long passed away; and, though you may still make sure of seeing half a dozen actors at the Variétés, they are all dressed in the decent black of French middle-class life. You may meet there, perhaps, Lassouche, the recognised "droll" of the Palais Royal, with his oddly-shaped little head, and his look of (real or assumed) stupidity; or may be Dupuis—large, stolid, yet merry—whose name will always be best remembered in connection with the "Grande Duchesse;" he was born to play Fritz, and Fritz was created for him. The Grand Duchess herself—the redoubtable Schneider—has left her café days behind; but her successors may often be seen, before rehearsal or performance, lunching or dining—pretty, piquant, and quite willing to be stared at—in the Café des Variétés.

And hither, once upon a time, came very regularly that strange historian of the romance of Paris student-life already spoken of, Henri Mürger, with his round, boyish face, his wild, irregular poet's life, his poverty, his short prosperity. The Bohemia he described—on the whole, so faithfully—hardly exists now; it is sad that it should ever have existed; yet it is sad that it has gone. Vulgarity, rich and rampant, has taken its place; Musette, Lisette, have no successors, or worse than none; Dumas fils and Sardou follow Mürger.

Another frequenter of the Variétés, Baudelaire, has given us other pictures of Parisian life; but the gems are hardly worthy of their polished and artistic setting. Still, when one sits outside a café to watch the beautiful sunset, one cannot help noticing the mal-odours of the gutter at one's feet; and some artists, feeling bound to tell the whole truth about everything, do not like to omit the gutter. Only, why do they so frequently forget the sunset?

Catulle Mendès, Banville, Monselet, these also are names that the Variétés brings to mind; and still another, even more familiar to English ears, is Rochefort—whose Lanterne was once talked about a very great deal more than it deserved. He was seen regularly at his table at the back of the room when only a few people had heard of the struggling playwright; and he still was true to his old haunt when the Charivari had extended his fame a little. Then came the Lanterne and notoriety; but only exile could make him unfaithful to the Variétés!

It must not be supposed that, because the cafés hitherto mentioned have been chiefly those frequented by men "about town," by Bohemians, and by students, these classes monopolise—or even very greatly preponderate at—the Parisian cafés. All classes and all ages, as I have said, live this non-domestic life—among bachelors it is almost universal, and among married men very common. If one finds less to say about the representative bourgeois cafés, it is because there are in them less variety, less picturesqueness, fewer interesting memories than those which haunt the places which are to some extent a part of the literature of the time. Still, a word about them is due to the wise who wish to study the actual life of the respectable, middle-aged, middle-class Frenchmen of to-day.

I will take two examples, besides the steady-going literary cafés of Voltaire and Tabourey already mentioned. More distinctively bourgeois than these are two cafés, one on the Boulevard Montmartre, the other near the "Great Western" Terminus of Paris, on the Boulevard Montparnasse. The former, though surrounded by theatres and by noisy restaurants, is a thoroughly quiet and pleasant house, and inclosos a pretty little garden, in which one can sit and smoke or drink one's coffee. It is called the Café de Mulhouse, and is one of the chief resorts in Paris of players of that old-fashioned, mildly-exciting game, dominoes: is perhaps looked up to by them with a veneration like that of chessplayers for the Régence, of draught-players for the Manoury. Billiards and bezique—an odd combination—are also popular at the Café de Mulhouse; but the domino is undisputed king.

For the southern café of respectability—the Café Lavenue—I can hardly recommend an English visitor to make a pilgrimage to the Boulevard Montparnasse especially to see it; but if, when he has gone to Versailles by the railway of the Rive Droite, he will vary his return journey, and pass through some exquisite scenery, remembering that his ticket is available also for the Rive Gauche (or "Surrey side" of the river): or if, during his stay in Paris, he spends sixpence-halfpenny in making the complete tour of the town by rail—which it is exceedingly well worth his while to do—he can descend at the Gare Montparnasse, spend half an hour at the Café Lavenue, and resume his journey. Of course, he will see nothing but a set of respectable people eating, chatting, or growing drowsy over their cigars; but national differences ought to make such a sight interesting to any student of human nature—indeed, who cannot amuse himself now and then by watching his own countrymen at their meals, "let alone" foreigners? One little thing which one always remarks at such a place is the exceeding and petty selfishness of the French; and it is a quality which, in spite of all their good points, gives one a certain contempt for them. Enough of Parisian respectability at its cafés. We will take a turn next week to the breezier atmosphere of Parisian art.

OBITUARY.

SIR GEORGE BIDDLECOMBE, R.N.

Captain Sir George Biddlecombe, R.N., C.B., died recently, at the age of seventy. Sir George entered the Navy in 1828, having previously been in the mercantile service and taken part as second officer of an East India transport in the Burmese war of 1825-6. After entering the Navy he served as second master at the siege of Oporto, in 1832-3, and as master in the Syrian campaign of 1840. He surveyed and made a chart of the Bay of Acre, previous to the bombardment of the city, and was present at its capture. He was afterwards employed on numerous survey services, and, as master of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, went with the Queen and Prince Albert to Ireland in 1849. He acted as master of the Baltic fleet in 1854, surveyed the anchorage of Sweaborg and the coast of Bomarsund, and was present at the capture of the latter place. He was appointed assistant-master attendant at Keyham Dockyard in 1855, master-attendant of Woolwich Dockyard in 1864, and retired as Captain in 1867. He was the author of works on "Naval Tactics," "Steam Fleet Tactics," and many other books on naval subjects. He was appointed a C.B. in 1867, and a Knight Bachelor in 1873.

THE DEAN OF PETERBOROUGH.

The Very Rev. Augustus Page Saunders, D.D., who died on the 21st inst. at Peterborough, after having been for a long time out of health, was appointed Dean of Peterborough in 1853 by Mr. Gladstone, whose tutor he had been at Oxford, where he took a double first class at Christ Church. The deceased was best known as Head Master of the Charterhouse; but, unlike many schoolmaster Deans, he was by no means an inactive dignitary. When he went to Peterborough there was little life in the cathedral, and to him are mainly due the successful choral festivals in the cathedral and the Sunday evening services in the nave, as well as the throwing open of the building to the public. He was much interested in the "Quiet Day" in the cathedral on Thursday, the 18th inst., when Professor Westcott addressed a large number of clergy, who spent the day in devotion. He was a strong Liberal, and was offered by Mr. Gladstone the deanery of Winchester in 1874, which he declined.

DR. OLDHAM.

Dr. Thomas Oldham, who was at the head of the Geological Survey of India from its origination in 1850 till 1876, died at Rugby on the 17th inst. He was born in Dublin in May, 1816; was educated at Trinity College, Dublin; became in 1839 chief geological assistant to Major-General Portlock, then at the head of the survey of Ireland; and after being for a while curator and assistant secretary of the Geological Society of Dublin, held for a year the professorship of engineering; and in 1845 succeeded the late Professor John Phillips as Professor of Geology. He was then appointed Local Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland; and in 1850 he was appointed to organise the geological survey of India. While in India he became a member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal, and was four times president. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1848, and received the Royal medal of the society in 1875.

MR. PEGGE-BURNELL.

Edward Valentine Pegge-Burnell, Esq., of Winkburn Hall, Notts, and Beauchieff Abbey, in the county of Derby, M.A., a country gentleman of ancient lineage and extensive estates, died at Winkburn Hall, on the 15th inst., aged seventy-three. He was the son of Broughton Benjamin Pegge-Burnell, Esq., J.P. and D.L., of Beauchieff Abbey, and represented in the male line the old Yorkshire family of Steade: the names of Pegge and Burnell were assumed in consequence of the inheritance of property in Derbyshire and Notts. Mr. Pegge-Burnell, whose death we record, was a J.P. for Derbyshire and a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for Notts, of which county he was High Sheriff in 1860. He married, in 1833, Harriet, second daughter of Hugh Parker, Esq., of Woodthorpe, Yorkshire, and had, with other issue, an eldest son, Edward Strelley Pegge-Burnell, Esq., Lieutenant-Colonel Coldstream Guards, now of Winkburn Hall.

The deaths have also been announced of—

Major J. St. John Munro, H.B.M. Consul at Montevideo, on the 18th ult.

Major-General W. S. Row, late Bengal Staff Corps, on the 16th inst., at Brighton, aged fifty-four.

William Foster White, Esq., J.P. and D.L. for Middlesex, and formerly treasurer of St. Bartholomew's and Christ's Hospitals, on the 20th inst.

Colonel John Leonard Miller, formerly on the staff, son of the late Major James Miller, who for more than forty years held the post of Fort Major of Jersey, on the 1st inst.

Lieutenant-Colonel Hungerford Deedes Jackson, R.A., on the 9th ult., at Srinugui, Cashmir, aged forty-five. Colonel Jackson had a medal and clasp for Delhi, and a medal with clasp for the Bhootan campaign.

Mrs. Julia Cecilia Stretton, the well-known authoress of the charming novels "Margaret and her Bridesmaids," "The Valley of a Hundred Fires," and other works, aged sixty-five. She was a constant contributor to many of our periodicals.

Mr. William Wyke Smith, the solicitor to the Metropolitan Board of Works, at his residence, near Hampton Court, on the 21st inst., from heart disease. Mr. Smith was a solicitor under the old Commission, and was reappointed under the new régime in 1861.

The Rev. W. Braden, the successor to Dr. Binney at the Weigh-House Chapel, Fish-street-hill. Mr. Braden, who was only thirty-seven years of age, came to London from Huddersfield, and soon made for himself a fair position among the Nonconformist ministers of the metropolis.

Edward Hamilton Hoskins, Esq., of Hoddesdon, Herts, J.P., on the 13th inst., by being gored by a bull. He was in his sixtieth year, and was the elder son of the late Thomas Hoskins, Esq., of Topsham, Devon, Commander R.N., by Anna, his wife, eldest daughter of William Leishman, Esq., of Alnwick, Northumberland.

William Francis Carruthers, Esq., of Dormont, Dumfriesshire, J.P. and D.L., and Convener of the County, on the 16th inst., at Park-street, Grosvenor-square, aged fifty-four. He was the only son of the late William J. Carruthers, Esq., of Dormont, by Ellen, his wife, daughter of the late Donald Maclachlan, of Castle Lachlan, and was formerly in the Scots Greys. Carruthers of Dormont is a branch of the old and loyal family of Carruthers of Holmaine.

A noble institution in Sheffield, named the Jessop Hospital for Women, which has been built at a cost of £30,000 by Mr. Thomas Jessop, was opened on Monday.

Alexander Ross, one of the 42nd Highlanders, who passed though the Peninsular campaign, and took part in the Battle of Waterloo, died at Dundee last Saturday, at the age of eight-four years.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

E T (Bath).—The game is very acceptable, and it shall have due honours. It is announced that all the games in the Paris Tourney will be published in a volume. We believe many London players have signified their intention of taking part in the Counties Chess Association tourneys.

W G (Whitby).—Please examine the effect of 1. Kt to Q 7th. If Black play 1. K to B 3rd, White continues with 2. Kt to Kt 8th (ch); and if 1. K to B 5th, B takes Kt (ch) seems to be a good answer.

A R G (Clement's Inn).—In the last Paris Tourney the prizes were gained by Messrs. Kolisch, Winawer, and Steinitz, in the order named. Mr. Blackburne did not play.

R A (Leamington).—We are very glad to hear from an old and valued correspondent. The problem shall receive our best and earliest attention.

W H S (Hanley).—The problem seems to be well constructed. You shall have an early report upon it.

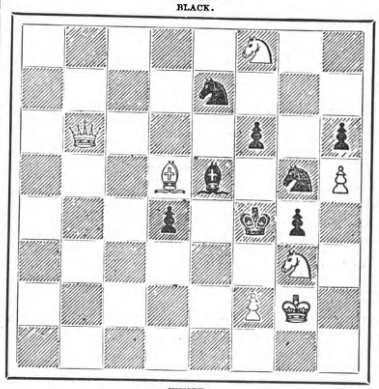
H E B (Paris).—Many thanks for your letter, and the games inclosed. We shall communicate with you fully through the post. The letter referred to never came to hand.

W F N (Paris).—All received in good time, and we are obliged for your courteous attention. We shall refer to the matter mentioned next week, by which time the tourney will have been brought to a conclusion.

L (Truro).—The tourneys of the Counties Chess Association are open to members only, we believe; but the subscription is merely nominal—five shillings per annum.

N B (Hull).—The games show promise, but are not up to publication standard. We shall be glad to examine games or problems for you or any other correspondents.

PROBLEM No. 1795.—A number of correspondents have forwarded proposed solutions of this Problem, beginning with 1. Kt to B 4th and 1. B to K 4th. Neither line of play will answer, as a careful examination of the defences at Black's disposal should show.



SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1794.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to B 4th	B to K 3rd*	3. Q or R mates accordingly.
2. P to Q 4th	Any move

* If Black plays 1. K takes R, White's answer is 2. Q to B 8th; if 1. Q to B sq, or B takes R, then Q takes R B P (ch); if 1. Q to Kt sq or P to B 4th, then 2. R to Q 7th (ch); and if Pawn is promoted to a Knight, then 2. Q takes K B (ch), mating in every case on the following move.

PROBLEM No. 1797.
By H. E. KIDSON.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

THE PARIS TOURNEY.

The following is the first Game in the fifth round between Mr. J. H. BLACKBURNE, of London, and Mr. MACKENZIE, of New York.—(Scotch Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)	WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	24. B to K 2nd	P to R 3rd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	25. Kt to K B 3rd	Q to Q 2nd
3. P to Q 4th	P takes P	26. Kt to K 5th	P to K R 4th
4. Kt takes P	B to B 4th	27. P to R 5th	B to R 2nd
5. B to K 3rd	Q to B 3rd	28. R to Q B sq	R to R 2nd
6. P to Q B 3rd	K Kt to K 2nd	29. P to Q Kt 4th	P to Q B 3rd
7. B to Q B 4th	P to Q 3rd

The usual move here is 7. Kt to K 4th; but the move in the text, which liberates the Q B, appears to be quite as good, to say the least of it.

8. P to K B 4th	B to Q Kt 3rd	30. B to K 3rd	K to Kt sq
9. Castles	Q to Kt 3rd	31. R to K B sq
10. Kt to Q 2nd	P to B 3rd
11. R to B 3rd

Since winning the exchange Mr. Mackenzie has developed his game with the nicest skill and judgment, contenting himself with defeating one after another the numerous devices of his ingenious adversary.

We can see no objection to 11. P to B 3th, whereas the move made results in the loss of the exchange.

As White intends to bring the Q B round to B 3rd, he should have played the R to Q sq at once.

11.	Kt takes Kt	31.	R to K B sq
12. P takes Kt	P to B 4th	32. B to Q B sq	B to K 5th
13. B to K 2nd	P takes P	33. P to Kt 5th	R P takes P
14. R to Kt 3rd	Q to B 2nd	34. R to Q sq
15. Kt takes P	Kt to B 4th
16. Kt to Kt 5th	Q to K 2nd
17. B to B 2nd	Kt takes R	34	P to Kt 5th
18. P takes Kt	P to Q 4th	35. Q to Kt 2nd	P to R 5th
19. Q to B 2nd	P to Kt 3rd	36 P to R 6th	R P takes P
20. B to Kt 5th (ch)	K to B sq	37. P takes P	P to Kt 4th,
21. R to K sq	Q to B 3rd
22. Q to B 3rd	B to K B 4th
23. P to R 4th	P to Q R 3rd

If he had now played the B to R 3rd, as we suspect he purposed, Black's answer is B takes P (ch), &c.

and White resigned, because, should he now take P with P, then follows 37. Q takes Kt, and, if anything else, Black plays 37. Q to R 3rd, winning easily.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

We had hoped to announce this week the close of the Paris international tourney, the final round of which was, according to general expectation, to have been completed on Tuesday last. As we go to press, however, we have received advices from Paris informing us that, in consequence of the first games in this round between Messrs. Blackburne and Winawer and Messrs Mackenzie and Pitschell having been prolonged into the second day, the last games between these pairs were postponed, and are being played to-day (Wednesday). The final result of the play in the eleven rounds will probably be found in another part of this Issue; and meanwhile we continue our narrative of the struggle from the point to which it was brought last week. The tenth round was played on the 18th and 19th inst., when Zukertort won one and drew one with Andersen; Mackenzie v. Bird, each scored one game; Blackburne won two games of Clere; Mason won two of Gifford; Pitschell won one game and lost one with Englisch; and Winawer defeated Rosenthal in both games. The eleventh round, as we have already stated, has not been brought to a conclusion so far as two of the pairs are concerned; but the completed scores are—Rosenthal won one and drew one with Andersen, Bird won two games of Mason, Englisch won two of Gifford, and Zukertort won two of Clere. The first game between Blackburne and Winawer was drawn, and that between Mackenzie and Pitschell was won by the former. The following table shows the score, the drawn games counting half a point:—

	Won.	Drawn.	Lost.	Score.
Zukertort	... 14 ...	... 5 ...	... 3 ...	... 16½
Winawer	... 14 ...	... 4 ...	... 3 ...	... 16

THE COUNTIES CHESS ASSOCIATION.—At a meeting of the London committee of the Counties Chess Association it has been determined that the "Mephisto Prize" of £5, given by Mr. Gumpel, shall be added to the first prize of the general handicap, open to all players, at an entrance fee of five shillings; and, in order to meet the convenience of London players who may have business engagements during the day, play in the handicap shall be arranged to take place in the evening, beginning at seven. Entrances can be made to J. I. Minchin, Esq., honorary London secretary, to Saturday, July 27, at Palace Chambers, 20, King-street, St. James's.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated May 18, 1878) of Mr. George Ashwell, late of St. Albans, Herts, who did on May 18 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by Charles Drage, M.D., and Frederick Searle Parker, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator makes up the income of his wife to £500 per annum. There are bequests in favour of his sons, Edward and Stephen, and his daughter Mrs. Helen Edwards; and some legacies to servants. The residue of his property he leaves upon trust for his daughter Mrs. Ann Gibson, for life, and then for all her children.

The will (dated Nov. 11, 1876) with a codicil (dated April 16, 1877) of the Rev. Henry Jenkyns, D.D., one of the Canons of the cathedral church of Durham, who died on April 2 last, at Bexley Hill, Bishops Waltham, Southampton, was proved on the 4th inst. by Sir Arthur Hobhouse, K.C.S.I., Henry Jenkyns, the son, and William Phelps, the executors; the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator gives legacies to his executor, Mr. Phelps, and to his unmarried daughters, and makes up the portions of his three younger sons, Richard, John, and Arthur, to £12,000 each. All his real estate and the residue of his personalty he leaves to his eldest son, Henry.

The will (dated Feb. 20, 1878, with a codicil bearing the same date, and another dated April 6 following) of Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Francis Hobday, late of No. 2, Talbot-square Paddington, who died on the 3rd ult., was proved on the 1st inst. by Mrs. Louisa Elizabeth Hobday, the widow, William Henry Buttanshaw, the nephew, Richard Salisbury Simpson, and George Newbolt, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £500, also £50 to be distributed by her amongst charities, of which £10 is to go to St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington; to his executors, £50 each; to his sister, Miss Henrietta Nott Hobday, an annuity of £100; to his three sons, Thomas Francis, James Ramsay, and Edmund Arthur Ponsonby, annuities of £150 each; and the residue of his property upon trust for his wife for life or until she shall marry again, and on the happening of either event then for his said sons.

The will (dated May 11, 1870) with two codicils (the first without date, but the last dated April 15, 1872) of the Rev. Charles Campbell, late of Wesenham, who died on May 20 last, was proved on the 15th inst. by the Rev. Straton Charles Campbell, the son, and George Thomas Jenkins, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. With the exception of some memorial gifts to his two sons-in-law and to a friend, the only legatees under the will are testator's children.

The will (dated Oct. 2, 1869) with two codicils (dated Aug. 19, 1871, and Oct. 10, 1874) of Mr. Frederick Faulkner, late of Bath, banker, who died on May 2 last, has been proved at the Bristol District Registry by John Whittington and Thomas Frederic Inman, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000.

The will (dated May 22, 1875) of Sir Henry Conyngham Montgomery, Bart., formerly of Burnham-grove, Berks, but late of No. 5, Manchester-square, who died on the 24th ult., was proved on the 17th inst. by Dame Leonora Montgomery, the widow, and Admiral Sir Alexander Leslie Montgomery and Alfred Montgomery, the brothers, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000.

The Glasgow Herald is informed that the late Mr. Samuel King has left the residue of his estate, which will amount to £20,000, to the Merchants' House.

The hundred and thirty-fifth Wesleyan Conference was opened at Bradford on Tuesday, when the Rev. Dr. Rigg, Principal of the Westminster Normal Institution, was elected President, and the Rev. Marmaduke Osborn, secretary.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1878.

A formal discussion of what has already become history, however rich it may be in lessons for the future, can never be very lively. Retrospection is a mental process, not very well adapted in itself to stir the feelings. So it has proved with the debate of the week. The questions before the House of Commons related chiefly to things that have been done and that cannot be altered. Only indirectly and remotely could the most telling of arguments, or the most commanding eloquence, shape for future use the facts which were brought under consideration. We are not at all surprised, therefore, at the general heaviness of the Debate, notwithstanding the extraordinary ability which it here and there called forth. The interest which it would have otherwise excited was past. The situation about which it occupied itself was fixed and unchangeable. Judgment on it may be characterised as foregone. It was, therefore, devoid of that animation and sparkle which are more commonly infused into discussion as to what is to be done. But it was not the less useful for all that, nor will it be in the end less practical in its results. It will serve to educate the people of these realms on many political points on which they have been comparatively ignorant. It will illustrate to their minds recondite principles of the Constitution under which they live, and in the maintenance of which they have grave duties to perform. It will, in some respects, neutralise, and thereby destroy, political illusions which are but too apt to captivate their imagination, but which, when allowed to have full force, tend to mischief. Its very dulness may help to bring about a salutary sobriety of political temper, and, perhaps we may be permitted to hope, will chasten into moderation the sharpness of party spirit which of late has been but too prevalent.

It would be out of place here to sketch, even in barest outline, the course of the debate, or to review in comparison one with another even the more important speeches which have adorned it. We shall merely take note of some of those points upon which, after a careful study of all that may be said of them, the mind of the country, we should say, has been made up. As to the substance of the Berlin Treaty, there seems to be no great difference of opinion. On the whole, it roughly corresponds with what moderate politicians of all parties really desired. Of course, as we have intimated more than once, it comprehends some details which this or that statesman, according to his special sympathies and proclivities, must greatly regret. But none can deny, we think, that it has very largely widened the area of political liberty in European Turkey. It has given a chance of self-development, such as they never before possessed, to not less perhaps than twelve millions of the subjects of the Porte, and among these it has conferred independence upon something approaching to one half. In accomplishing this result it was inevitable that a main instrument available, as between the several Powers represented at the Congress, should be compromise. If each of the Plenipotentiaries had insisted upon all that he thought right there would have been no peace. Each, therefore, had to be guided in some degree by his knowledge of what would be insisted upon by others, and to give up in some items what was conceded to him in others. It is obvious, therefore, that a Treaty arrived at under such conditions would be open to adverse criticism in several of its details from those who look at them simply from the standpoint of what is theoretically most consonant with the dictates of abstract justice. If our Plenipotentiaries could have done as they liked they would, doubtless, have brought home a different document, and, perhaps, one much more worthy of approval, than that which has been under discussion in the Houses of Parliament. We think that in all fairness this ought to be taken into consideration. We are of opinion that, to some extent, this has been done, and, so far as the judgment of the country goes, we believe that it appreciates the service which has been rendered to it by the labours and anxieties of the statesmen who represented it at Berlin.

Unfortunately, preceding circumstances have been such as to prevent the delivery of a clear judgment upon the substance of the Berlin Treaty. It has had to be taken into consideration in conjunction with the Anglo-Turkish Convention. The natural and necessary connection between the two instruments has been the main point of dispute in the House of Commons, and throws into dubiety the opinion of the country. On the one hand, it is contended that the Convention is the proper complement of the Treaty; on the other hand, it is declared to be a perfectly gratuitous and dangerously reckless extension of the obligations of the British Empire. As to the manner in which it was framed and finally ratified, there is certainly plausible ground for complaint. It was kept a profound secret, not only from the European Powers who might or might not object to it for international reasons, but also from Parliament, who will have to find the means of carrying it into execution. Doubtful as is the policy which it involves, it is even more dangerous as a precedent. It has opened one of the gravest and most delicate constitutional questions which the country can be invited to determine. It may (though we should hope it will not) issue in very embarrassing, not to say disastrous, results. It has constituted, as might have been expected, the great theme of the debate. Nothing can be done in regard to it now. It is a fait accompli, and all that can be said of it too closely resembles Mercutio's description of his wound—"'Tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve." Of course it is not pretended that it will necessarily lead to ruin. It will not even finally establish as a constitutional practice the principle which it theoretically involves, but it can hardly be a matter of surprise that it should be stoutly challenged in the House of Commons, and we think it may be pretty safely concluded that the challenge thus solemnly made will operate as a bar to any further experiments in that direction.

We look not to any immediate results of the week's discussion in the Commons. It constitutes a chapter of political history the graver lessons of which will require some time to filter into the public mind and conscience. What will be its proximate influence upon the constituencies we shall not attempt even to guess. That it will exercise an important bearing upon their judgment in the future can hardly be doubted. Otherwise, regret might be felt that, whilst so great a press of public business is urging its claim to consideration at the close of a Session of unprecedented length, a week should have been given to a debate upon matters the main features of which have been indelibly stamped upon the history of England. Somehow or other, however, the most threatening appearances are often dispersed by the progress of events. Let us hope this may be the case in the present instance; and that what has been done, though partially objectionable, both in substance and in manner, may be so assimilated by the body politic as to lose some of its deleterious properties.

THE COURT.

The Queen entertained at dinner on Saturday last at Osborne House Lord Sandon, the Dean of Westminster, and Miss Victoria Baillie, and General the Right Hon. Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph.

Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Dean of Westminster.

The Queen invested the Marquis of Salisbury with the Order of the Garter on Tuesday; Princess Beatrice was present during the ceremony; after which the Marquis of Salisbury kissed hands. Previous to the investiture Lord Arthur Russell delivered up to her Majesty the ribbon and badge of the Garter worn by the late Earl Russell. Her Majesty afterwards held a private investiture of the Order of the Bath, at which the Queen invested General Sir John Lintorn Arabin Simmons with the ribbon and badge of the Military Division of the First Class, and delivered to him the star of his dignity in the order. The following Knights Commanders were knighted and invested by her Majesty with the Second Class of the order:—Lieutenant-General Sir Arnold Burrowes Kemball (Military) and Lord Tenterden, C.B. (Civil). After the investiture, Mr. Edward Hertslet, C.P. (the Librarian and Keeper of the Papers at the Foreign Office) was knighted by the Queen; and Mr. Blyden, the Minister for Liberia; Sir Augustus Paget, Ambassador at Rome; Mr. W. Taylour Thomson, Minister in Persia; and Mr. Locock, Minister in Guatemala, were introduced to audiences of her Majesty. Subsequently the Queen, with Princess Beatrice, was present for a short time at a cricket-match played at Osborne between the Royal Household and officers of the Royal Yacht. Prince Albert Victor and Prince George, and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales arrived at Osborne on a visit to the Queen. The Dean of Westminster and Miss Victoria Baillie left Osborne. Her Majesty's dinner party included Princess Beatrice, Lady Waterpark, the Marquis and Marchioness of Salisbury, the Hon. Amy Lambart, Vice-Admiral Lord Frederic Kerr, and General the Right Hon. Sir Thomas Biddulph.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, has driven to Ryde, Newport, and Cowes, and has walked daily in the Royal demesne.

Her Majesty will review the "special service" fleet of armoured ships before its dispersion at Portsmouth on Aug. 12. The Dreadnought will be included in the fleet.

The Queen has appointed Prince Frederic Charles Nicolas of Prussia to be an Honorary Member of the Military Division of the First Class, or Knights Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath; and Mr. Montagu Corry and Mr. Philip Currie to be Companions of the Civil Division of the Order of the Bath.

Her Majesty has appointed Lady Southampton to be one of her Ladies of the Bedchamber in Ordinary, in the room of the Countess of Caledon, resigned; and the Countess of Caledon to be an Extra Lady of the Bedchamber to her Majesty. Lord Frederick Kerr has succeeded Major Phipps as Groom in Waiting to the Queen.

Prince Leopold's knee continues to improve.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by Prince Louis of Battenberg, dined with Lord Carlingford and Countess Frances Waldegrave at Strawberry Hill on Thursday week, and were present at a ball which was given there afterwards. The Grand Duke and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz dined with the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House yesterday week. The Prince and Princess, accompanied by Princes Albert Victor and George, the Duke of Connaught, and Prince Louis of Battenberg, went to Her Majesty's Theatre. The Prince, accompanied by the Duke of Connaught and Prince Louis of Battenberg, was present on Saturday last at the marriage of Captain Arthur Paget, Scots Guards, with Miss Stevens. The Grand Duke of Hesse and the Duke of Connaught visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House. Their Royal Highnesses, with Princes Albert Victor and George and the Duke of Connaught, went to the Opéra Comique in the evening to see "H.M.S. Pinafore." The Prince presided on Monday at Marlborough House over a meeting of her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851. Prince Christian was present. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz and Prince and Princess Christian visited their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House, and remained to luncheon. The Prince and Princess left London in the afternoon on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Richmond and Gordon at Goodwood House for the race week.

The Prince and Princess have inspected Mr. M'Lachlan's picture of the "Royal Family," at Messrs. Agnew and Co.'s gallery in New Bond-street.

A gracefully designed screen, the work of Mr. Sidney Gibbs, of Hart-street, has been honoured with a place in the Princess's boudoir.

The Grand Duke of Hesse, attended by Major von Herft, left London on Saturday last for Darmstadt.

The Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz left St. James's Palace on Monday for the Continent.

Princesses Victoria, Sophie, and Margaret, and Prince Waldemar, of Germany, who have been staying at the Cavendish Hotel, Eastbourne, for two months, have left for Homburg.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck have been on a visit to Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Countess Dornberg at Motcomb House, Goodwood, during the race week.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

Captain Arthur Henry Paget (Scots Guards), eldest son of Lieutenant-General Lord Alfred Paget, and Miss Mary Stevens, daughter of the late Mr. P. Stevens, of New York, U.S.A., were married by special license on Saturday last, at half-past three o'clock, at St. Peter's, Eaton-square. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, and Prince Louis of Battenberg were present. The bride, who was given away by her brother, wore a gown of white satin, trimmed with point d'Alençon, and, over a wreath of orange-blossoms, a lace veil, the wreath being attached to her train by five diamond stars, the gift of the bridegroom. The other jewels worn were a diamond necklace, the gift of her brother on her marriage; a sapphire and diamond bracelet, a present from the Prince and Princess of Wales; and diamond earrings, the gift of her mother. The bridesmaids were the Hon. Miss Gerard, the Hon. Miss Harbord, Miss Cadogan, and Miss Violet Paget. They wore costumes of white satin and striped Pekin Louis XIV. jackets over mousseline de l'Inde skirts, trimmed with Valenciennes lace, and tulle veils, and each carried a bouquet of red roses. The diamond arrow brooches, the gift of the bridegroom, had the initials "M. A." in pearls and wreathed round with black and white pearls. Lord Marcus Beresford was the best man. The ceremony was performed by the Dean of Windsor, assisted by the Rev. Maxwell Lyte. The registration of the marriage was attested by the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Connaught. After the déjeûner at Lord and Lady Alfred Paget's residence, Captain Paget and his bride left for Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Paget's residence near Windsor. The Prince of Wales presented the bridegroom with a Louis XVI. cuivre and marble clock and candelabrum; the Princess of Wales's gift was a bracelet set with sapphires and diamonds; Princess Louise's present to the bride and bridegroom consisted of a silver coffee-pot and stand; and Prince Leopold gave a serpent bracelet set with rubies and diamonds.

Mr. George Onslow Newton, of Croxton Park, Cambridgeshire, was married to Lady Alice Cochrane, second daughter of the Earl of Dundonald, on Saturday last, at St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square. The bridesmaids were Lady Elizabeth and Lady Esther Cochrane, Miss Florence Newton, Miss S. Mackinnon, Miss Constance and Miss Florence Cochrane, Miss Cooper, Miss Ethel Cooper, and Miss Sybil Drummond. The bride's dress was of ivory satin, trimmed with old point de Bruxelles, a wreath of real flowers, of orange-blossoms, white heather and myrtle, and a tulle veil. The bridesmaids' dresses were white silk, trimmed with Indian muslin, old lace, and light blue silk; Gainsborough hats, with light blue feathers. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. Robinson Duckworth, Canon of Westminster, assisted by the Rev. Lobeck Cooper, Rector of Croxton. Mr. Charles Newton was best man. The bridal party adjourned to the Earl and Countess of Dundonald's residence for breakfast, after which the bride and bridegroom left for Folkestone, en route for the Continent.

The marriage of Mr. James Stuart Trotter, son of the late Mr. Archibald Trotter, of Dreghorn, N.B., with Lady Coutts-Lindsay, youngest daughter of the late Sir Henry Lindsay Bethune, Bart., of Kilconquhar, took place on the 25th ult., at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. The bridesmaids were Miss Mary Trotter (sister of the bridegroom), the Ladies Mary and Elizabeth Toler, Miss Campbell, and Miss E. Campbell (nieces of the bride). The bride was given away by her brother, the Earl of Lindsay. Captain Philip Trotter, 93rd Highlanders, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The service was performed by the Hon. and Rev. R. Liddell. The wedding breakfast was given by the Earl and Countess of Lindsay at Princes-gardens.

The marriage of Walter H. Long, Esq., of Rood, Ashton, Wilts, and Park-lane, Hyde Park, and Lady Honora Janet Boyle, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Cork and Orrery, was celebrated on Thursday at St. George's, Hanover-square. The bride, who was given away by the Earl, was dressed in white satin, trimmed with lace. The breakfast was given at Lord Cork's residence in Grosvenor-square.

The marriage of Mr. Frederick W. Maude, youngest son of Colonel Maude, C.B., Crown Equerry, and Miss Kelk, only daughter of Sir John Kelk, Bart., will take place in October.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S HONOURS.

Our front page Engraving, drawn from precise information given by an eye-witness of the scene, represents her Majesty the Queen at Osborne House, on Monday week, in the act of knighting the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, previous to investing him with the Ribbon and George and presenting him with the Garter, which was held on a cushion by Sir Albert Woods, Garter King-at-Arms. Her Majesty was accompanied by Princess Beatrice, and was attended by Lady Waterpark, General Ponsonby, and Colonel the Hon. H. Byng (Equerry in Waiting), as well as by Sir John Cowell, Master of the Household, who introduced Lord Beaconsfield to the Queen's presence. Mr. Montagu Corry, his Lordship's private secretary, was in attendance on the Prime Minister. On Tuesday last, as reported in our Court news of this week, the Marquis of Salisbury was invested by her Majesty in a similar manner with the Garter lately worn by Earl Russell. As usual in these cases, an Order in Council has been published in the official Gazette, declaring that the Order of the Garter is conferred upon Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury as fully and completely as if all the prescribed formalities and ceremonies had been performed.

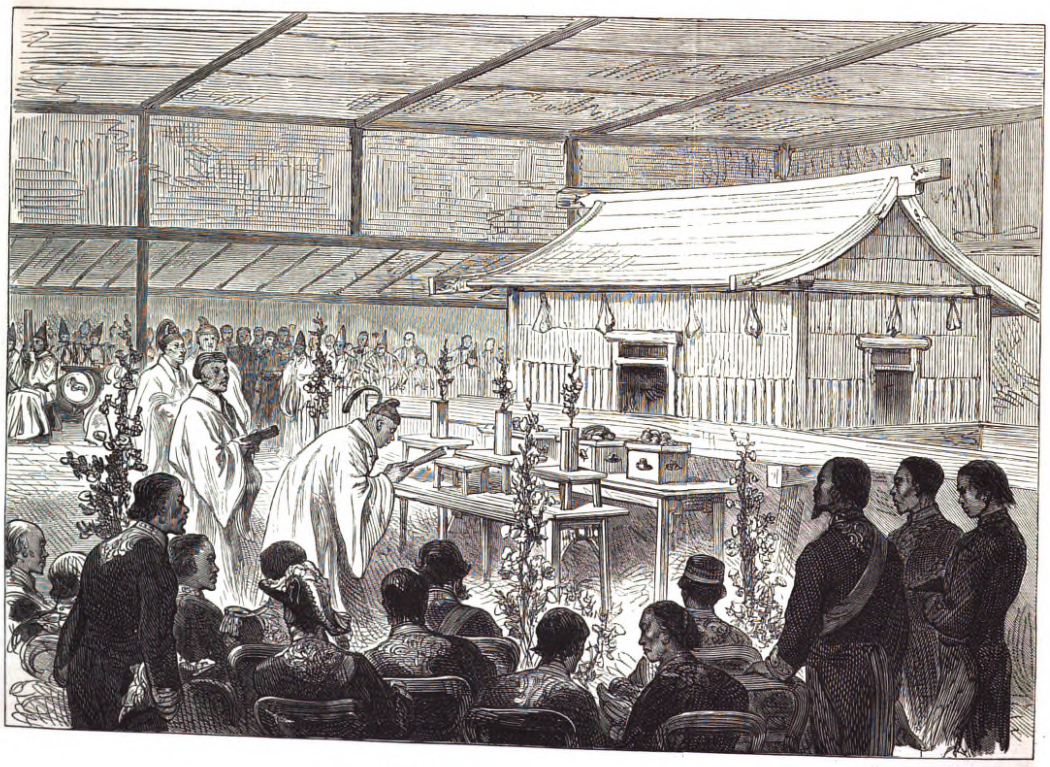
The grand banquet in honour of both their Lordships, to celebrate their return from Berlin and their successful discharge of the task of British Plenipotentiaries at the European Congress, was prepared under the management of the Carlton Club. It took place on Saturday last in the Duke of Wellington's Riding School, at Knightsbridge, which had been decorated for the occasion with garlands and banners, and with mottoes of Conservative policy, the most conspicuous being "Peace with Honour." The chair was occupied by the Duke of Buccleuch, who sat with Lord Beaconsfield on his right hand, and, next him, Sir Stafford Northcote, the Duke of Northumberland, Mr. Cross (Home Secretary), the Duke of Abercorn, Lord Cranbrook, and Lord Sandon. The chairman had Lord Salisbury on his left hand, beyond whom sat in order the Lord Chancellor, Colonel Stanley (Secretary for War), the Duke of Beaufort, Mr. W. H. Smith (First Lord of the Admiralty), and other members of the Administration or of the Conservative party. The company numbered altogether more than five hundred, most of whom were members of one or the other House of Parliament. The health of Lord Beaconsfield was proposed immediately after the loyal toasts, and was drunk with loud and prolonged cheering, the whole company standing up, as shown in our Illustration, while "Rule Britannia" was played by the Grenadier Guards' band. Lord Beaconsfield, who wore the blue ribbon of the Garter, returned thanks in a speech which replied by anticipation to some of the charges he expected would be brought in the House of Commons against the policy of his Government, not only in the Congress of Berlin, but in the special Convention with Turkey for the protection of Asia Minor. He resented the epithet of "insane" applied to that Convention, and stigmatised Mr. Gladstone, in turn, as a "sophistical rhetorician, inebriated with the exuberance of his own verbosity, and gifted with an egotistical imagination that can, at all times, command an interminable and inconsistent series of arguments, to malign an opponent and to glorify himself." Lord Malmesbury next proposed the health of the Marquis of Salisbury, which was equally honoured by the company, and to which the Foreign Secretary spoke in reply. Other toasts of a political character were afterwards proposed and accepted.

CRETE AND CYPRUS.

The fine natural harbour of Suda Bay, on the north-west shore of the island of Crete, has been frequently resorted to by H.M.S. Minotaur and other ships of our Mediterranean squadron, engaged in watching the desultory warfare between the Greek insurgents and the Turks, which has been carried on in that district as well as in some other parts of Crete. We are indebted to an English naval officer for the sketch of Suda Bay which we have engraved, and in which several Turkish ships of war are shown lying at anchor.

The island of Cyprus, now in British possession, will continue for some time, probably, to furnish subjects for our Illustrations. We give this week a panoramic view of the chain of Mount Olympus, in this island, as seen from the village of Kato Dicomo, comprising the summits of Stavro Vouni, or the Holy Cross, Machera, Adelphi, and Troodos, which are here enumerated in the order they appear, from the left hand to the right hand of this view. The whole mountain range, from east to west, almost filling up the southern portion of the island, is generally designated by modern geographers as Mount Olympus, though that name appears to have been applied by the ancients only to one particular peak. The highest summit is known at the present day as Mount Troödos, and attains an elevation of 6590 feet. It sends down subordinate ranges or spurs of considerable altitude on all sides, one of which extends to Cape Arnauti (the ancient Acamas), which forms the north-west extremity of the island; while others descend on both sides quite to the northern and southern coasts. The main range is continued eastwards by the lofty summits known as Mount Adelphi and Mount Machera (both of them, however, considerably inferior to Troödes) until it ends in the somewhat isolated peak called Stavro Vouni, or Hill of the Holy Cross. This mountain, which is evidently the one designated by Strabo as Mount Olympus, is only 2300 ft. high, but is a conspicuous object from Larnaca, from which it is only twelve miles distant, and is well known from being frequented as a place of pilgrimage. We have already presented a separate view of Stavro Vouni.

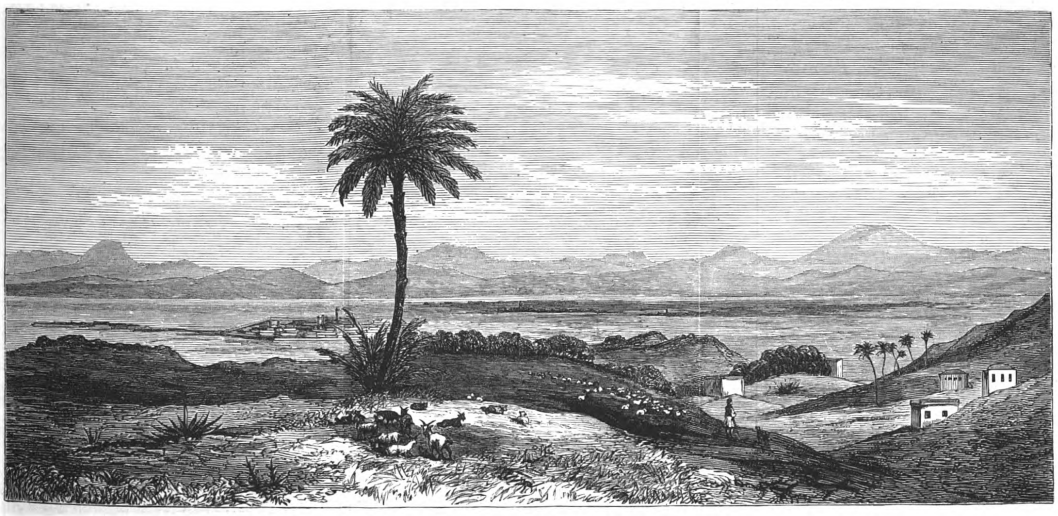
The London Gazette has this week published despatches received at the Admiralty from Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, giving an account of the transfer of the government of the island of Cyprus to the British Crown and the hoisting of the British flag. When the announcement of the change which had taken place was made to the people the only word that seemed to be understood was "Victoria," which was echoed by the multitude amidst general cheering. We learn further that Sir Garnet Wolseley, with his civil and military staff, arrived on Tuesday last at Nicosia, the capital of the island, where he was met by Mr. Walter Baring, of the Foreign Office, with Captain Rawson, R.N., and by the Turkish and Greek notables of Cyprus. These leading citizens, as well as the officials lately serving under the Turkish Government, and the Greek priests and Bishops, have given the new British High Commissioner a friendly and loyal reception. The Indian troops remain at Larnaca in their encampment, awaiting further orders. A Special Artist of this Journal has been sent to Cyprus.



FUNERAL OF A JAPANESE STATESMAN.

The late Japanese Minister of the Interior, Okubo Toshimichi, was assassinated on May 14, while going in his carriage to the Mikado's palace in the capital. Though only forty-two years of age, this eminent statesman had performed many great services to his country. He was one of the most active leaders of the movement in 1868, by which the usurped rule of the Tycoon or Shiogoon was taken away, and the Mikado's Imperial Government was restored. The great reforms of the last few years have been effected chiefly by the administration of Okubo, being often either contrived or brought forward by him. He lately showed remarkable decision and energy in putting down the formidable rebellion in Satsuma, his native province, led by his former colleague, General Saigo. The assassination was perpetrated by six armed men from that province, who are proved to have been in a conspiracy with the partisans of the late rebellion. The state funeral of Okubo, which is the subject of one of our Illustrations, was attended with more than ordinary solemnities. A procession from his house went about two miles, along the outer moat of the city wall, to the cemetery of Akasaka, near the Imperia Palace. It was escorted by a large body of infantry. Th priests of the Shintoo religion, attired in loose white robes, and holding green branches of a plant with bright flowers, walked in front of the bier, or rather shrine, containing the body of the deceased statesman. It was a sort of ark, being constructed to imitate the shape of a Shintoo temple, with two side gates and an arched roof, all made of white wood, and resting on poles, borne on the shoulders of thirty men of the priesthood. A number of priests followed, carrying small banners, red and white alternately. They entered a bamboo and straw temporary building, in the cemetery, which was the chapel for the funeral rites. The shrine or coffin was placed on the platform at one end, with tables before it to receive the pious offerings; the green and flowering branches were arranged on one side, and the banners on the other. Among the congregation were Princes, Ministers of State, foreign Ambassadors, and other persons of rank. The ceremonial was that prescribed by an ancient native code of religious observances. Three of the priests offered different kinds of food upon trays before the shrine, with chanted prayers and anthems, or rather incantations, accompanied with prostrations and other gestures or postures. Meanwhile there was the doleful music of the "sho," a small hand-organ with bellows blown by the mouth, the flute, and the muffled drum. Branches of the "sakaki," or sacred tree, were presented by the priests, the relatives of Okubo, and the persons of rank in the assembly. They made a farewell sign of reverence and affection, bowing and clapping their hands; and then took their leave, when the body was carried to its tomb.

The annual exhibition of horses, cattle, sheep, &c., under the auspices of the Leicestershire Agricultural Society, was opened at Leicester on Wednesday. The prizes amount to £1000.



SUDA BAY, CRETE.

THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH, CHAIRMAN OF THE BANQUET IN HONOUR OF LORDS BEACONSFIELD AND SALISBURY.

THE CHAIN OF MOUNT OLYMPUS, CYPRUS.

THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH.

The Duke of Buccleuch, who was chairman at the Beaconsfield banquet, and whose portrait we engrave, is one of the most influential persons in the Scottish aristocracy. His Grace, Sir Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott, is fifth Duke of Buccleuch and seventh Duke of Queensberry, Marquis of Dumfries, Earl of Drumlanrig, Buccleuch, Sanquhar, and Dalkeith, Viscount Nith, Thortholwold, and Ross, Baron Douglas of Kinmount, Middlebie, Dornock, and Scott of Whitchester and Eskdale, all in the peerage of Scotland; and Earl of Doncaster and Baron Tynedale, in the peerage of England. The great Border clan of the Scotts, who held nearly all Teviotdale and Ettrick in the feudal age of their country's history, defending the middle and western marches of its disputed frontier against incessant English attacks, have been amply celebrated in narrative, poetry, and romance, as well as in authentic records of the past. Sir Walter himself, the author of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and of so many other delightful stories in prose and verse, the subjects of which belong to that region and its memories of warlike adventure, was one of a family, the Scotts of Harden, distantly connected with the noble House of Buccleuch, whose ducal title is derived from an obscure place in Ettrick Forest. Branxholm Castle, on the Teviot, near Hawick, and Newark Tower, at Bowhill, on the Yarrow, near Selkirk, are better known as the ancient abodes of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The first person of much distinction among them was a Sir Richard Le Scot, probably, like Bruce and Wallace, of Norman descent, who played his part in the affairs of Scotland towards the end of the thirteenth century. Three or four Sir Walter Scotts, in succession, were active in the partisan warfare of the Border clans in the sixteenth century. The Scotts were raised to the peerage, by King James VI. of Scotland and I. of England, in the early part of the seventeenth century. The Dukedom of Buccleuch dates from 1673, with the Earldom of Dalkeith; the Dukedom of Queensberry, with other titles of less rank, came by inheritance in 1810. His Grace the present Duke is seventy-one years of age, and succeeded his father in 1819; his eldest son, the Earl of Dalkeith, is M.P. for Mid-Lothian. The Duke possesses several magnificent residences in town and country—Dalkeith Palace, near Edinburgh; Bowhill, in Selkirkshire; and Drumlanrig Castle, in Dumfriesshire; and in England—Boughton and Ditton Parks, a villa at Richmond, and Montagu House, Whitehall.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Marshal MacMahon and the Duchess of Magenta received yesterday week the Swedish and Norwegian students who went to Paris to give concerts at the Exhibition.

Two of the most celebrated choral societies of the North, those of the students at Upsala and Christiania, numbering about 170, gave a concert, consisting of their best national songs, on Saturday. The musical critics, one and all, hail the Scandinavian concert at the Trocadéro as a brilliant success. For the first time the vast Trocadéro Theatre was full, and many hundred applicants for tickets were disappointed.

At the international competition of choirs in connection with the Paris Universal Exhibition at the Trocadéro last week Mr. Henry Leslie's choir gained the first prize (prix unique), a handsome vase of modern Sèvres, and a gold medal, by the unanimous decision of the judges, who consisted of many of the most distinguished French composers and artists, under the presidency of M. Ambroise Thomas.

It was decided at a meeting of the Superior Commission of the Exhibition yesterday week to reduce the value of the gold medals by half, thus allowing the number to be awarded to be doubled without increasing the cost. The total number of "recompenses" of all sorts to be accorded to the exhibitors is fixed at 29,500. They will comprise 2600 gold medals, 6400 silver, 10,000 bronze, and 10,500 honourable mentions. The total number of exhibitors is 53,005.

It is stated by the Paris Temps that the Bank of France, owing to the recent forgeries, has resolved to issue a new description of note, which it believes cannot be imitated.

A monument of Paul Louis Courrier, the William Cobbett of France, was unveiled on Sunday at Veretz, a few miles from Tours, in the presence of a large assemblage of politicians and literary men. Among those present were M. Jules Simon, M. Edmond About, M. Wilson, and M. Ernest Coquelin.

After having sat for some days, the International Congress on the Means of Transport of Merchandise was brought to a close last Saturday. A resolution was passed in favour of establishing an arrangement by which commerce between different countries should be promoted and facilitated.

M. Louis Laussedat, the deputy for Allier, died on Sunday, at the age of sixty-nine. He was a member of the Union Républicaine, over which group he presided.

The chess-match between Zukertort, of Berlin and London, and Winawer, of Russia, to decide the tie between them for the first and second prizes in the chess tournament in Paris, terminated on Wednesday evening in favour of the former.

ITALY.

The King and Queen arrived at Milan on Tuesday afternoon, accompanied by the Prince of Naples and the Duke of Aosta, and attended by Signor Cairoli, Count Corti, and Signori Bruzzo and Baccarini. Their Majesties had an enthusiastic reception. The shops were closed, the houses decorated with flags, and flowers were showered on the Royal carriage as it drove through the streets. On arriving at the palace the King and Queen appeared at the balcony in response to the acclamations of the people.

Cardinal Franchi, the Pontifical Secretary of State, died on Thursday morning.

SWITZERLAND.

On Monday the Federal Assembly met for the discussion chiefly of the question of granting a Government subsidy to aid in the completion of the St. Gothard Railway.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William received at Babelsberg on Sunday all the members of the State Ministry at present in Berlin, and delivered a long address to them, and also gave audience to the President of the Supreme Evangelical Council. The Emperor, accompanied by the Grand Duchess and Princess Victoria of Baden, has gone to Teplitz, in Bohemia.

A letter has been addressed by the Crown Prince of Germany to the Queen thanking her Majesty in the name of the Emperor William for the assistance rendered and the sympathy displayed by the English authorities and people on the occasion of the sinking of the Grosser Kurfürst. The Crown Prince adds that as he himself had the opportunity of witnessing, immediately after the catastrophe, the noble emulation with which the first help was rendered to the wrecked men on English soil, his satisfaction has been all the greater in expressing these sentiments.

The Crown Prince has ratified the Berlin Treaty.

His Imperial Highness started on Monday morning to Hanover, to visit the Trades' Exhibition, proceeding thence to Homburg.

The German elections on Tuesday are stated to have passed off without disturbance. In the working-class districts of Berlin the military were kept in barracks, and detectives in plain clothes watched the proceedings at the polling-places. Some of the telegrams state that never before have people made so general a use of the elective franchise as on this occasion. In five Berlin districts the Social Democrat candidates have been beaten by the United Liberals. In the sixth district a second ballot will be necessary between the Social Democrat candidate, Herr Fritsche, who obtained 20,139 votes, and the Progressist, Herr Zelle, in whose favour 16,747 votes were recorded. Second ballots will be required in several constituencies.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Emperor has ratified the Treaty of Berlin.

As a preliminary to the occupation of Bosnia and the Herzegovina, the Government issued a proclamation to the population stating that the Austrian troops come as friends to restore peace and prosperity to the country. The proclamation states that all will be protected, none oppressed. Established customs and institutions will be respected, the revenues will be applied solely to the wants of the country, and the arrears of taxes for the past year will not be collected.

Early on Monday morning the Austrian troops crossed the Save at Gradiska, the Turkish garrison of that place retiring on their approach. The main body of the troops crossed the Bosnian frontier on the following day. General Philippovich reports to the Government that he entered Turkish Brod on Tuesday, and Derbend on Wednesday morning, and that in both places he was received in the most cordial manner by the Turkish authorities. Some disturbances, due to a Turkish agitator, are reported from Serajevo, where acts of violence, directed against the Ottoman authorities, were committed, and the telegraphic communication was cut. Passive opposition to the Austrian occupation is said to have been manifested at Brod.

The 18th division of the Austrian army crossed the Dalmatian frontier and enter Herzegovida on Thursday.

SERVIA.

It is announced from Belgrade that early next month the Great Council of the Servian Nation, consisting of 600 delegates, will be called together to consider the changes in the Constitution which the recognition of Servia's independence may have rendered necessary. Proposals, it is thought, will then be made for elevating Servia into a kingdom.

Concentrating movements of the Servian troops are reported to be going on, and reinforcements are said to be still being sent to the Army of Observation on the Drina and the Bosnian frontier, while the whole army, numbering 20,000 men, and half the militia and reserves are under arms in various parts of the Principality.

TURKEY.

The Sultan signed the Treaty of Berlin on Sunday.

Osman Pasha, it is stated, gave orders last Saturday to discontinue the works of intrenchment on the lines defending Constantinople, all probability of a conflict with the Russians having disappeared. The Russians have occupied the principal positions around Schumla, and M. Onou has again assured the Porte that the Imperial Guard shall embark for Russia and the other troops begin retiring as soon as Varna is surrendered.

It is announced from Constantinople that the Russian Commissioner objects to the continuance of the inquiry into the Rhodope insurrection, and he has withdrawn from it. He has left his dragoman to represent him on the commission.

A telegram to the Times says the British Embassy has received official reports of continued wanton destruction of Mussulman life and property in the Philippopolis district by Bulgaro-Russians.

Information has been received at Athens that the National Assembly in Crete has sent a note to the British Consul at Canea soliciting the mediation of England to obtain autonomy for the island, in conformity with the desires of the population. Failing to obtain this, the Cretans are stated to be resolved to continue their resistance to Turkish rule.

The despatch of troops to Volo continues. The Hellenic Government has appealed to Prince Bismarck, as President of the Congress, to make representations to Turkey on the subject.

RUSSIA.

Letters from St. Petersburg state that no Russian loan operations are to be looked for within the next few months. The Minister of Finance is firmly determined to devote his entire attention for the present to the task of establishing Russian values on a more solid basis, and, if an improvement is attained in this respect, to proceed then to take measures for obtaining fresh funds. Moreover, it is added, the requirements of the next few months are abundantly provided for.

The Daily News' correspondent at Constantinople says that General Todleben has sent to Admiral Hornby the following explanation of the Dardanelles incident:—"Two English officers from the fleet landed at a spot which it had been agreed the Russians only should occupy. The Russians were distributed along the coast in pickets of five men each. The officers apprehended by the picket were conveyed twelve miles into the interior to the commanding officer, who treated them with great politeness, and recognised the mistake. A boat which was subsequently sent from the fleet to look after the officers, was fired into by a picket, probably in consequence of the stupid interpretation of the Greek dragoman belonging to the boat. General Todleben frankly admits the facts, and expresses deep regret for the unfortunate blundering."

AMERICA.

The Maine Republican Convention, the sittings of which have been attended by Senator Blaine, has voted resolutions advocating the resumption of specie payments and the payment of the debt in accordance with the national obligations. The resolutions are silent respecting President Hayes.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Times states that Colonel Forsyth's cavalry, with a force of friendly Umatillas, struck the hostile Indian camp near the east fork of Birch Creek a few nights ago, and killed seventeen warriors, capturing twenty women and children, with sixty-five head of stock. The Umatillas had previously killed the chief, Egan, and thirteen warriors, and captured 250 cattle.

Yellow fever is stated to be increasing at New Orleans.

CANADA.

The Marquis of Lorne, K.T., M.P., has accepted the post of Governor-General of the Dominion. His Lordship is the eldest son of the Duke of Argyll, and was born at Stafford House in 1845. He was elected in the Liberal interest for Argyleshire in 1868, and from that time until 1874 acted as private secretary to his father, who then held the office of Secretary of State for India. He married Princess Louise, the fourth daughter of the Queen, in 1871, and upon that occasion was invested with the Order of the Thistle. Lord Lorne is the author of several poetical works, the latest of which is a new metrical version of the Psalms. The Canadian papers express most cordial gratification at the appointment and the advent of Princess Louise in the Dominion. They regard the event as drawing Canada nearer to the mother country.

The British Columbian Parliament was opened on Monda last. The Lieutenant-Governor strongly protested against the failure to construct the railway to Vancouver's Island, and declared that the time had arrived in which more decisive steps became necessary.

The prosecutions instituted in consequence of the Orange demonstration at Montreal have been adjourned until Aug. 6, in view of getting up a test case for the English Privy Council.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

Thursday last was appointed a day of thanksgiving for the restoration of peace in the colony of Capetown. Meanwhile news from the Transvaal reports an engagement with Secocoeni's Kaffirs at Magnet Heights, where five of the volunteer force, under Captain Clarke, were killed and eight wounded; and Colonel Lanyon reports from Kimberley that a column of ninety men, under Mr. Ford, advancing from Boetsap in the direction of Kuruman, engaged the natives and dislodged them, but with serious loss on our side. Sub-Lieutenant Paterson, Sergeant Rawstorne, Corporal H. Davis, and Troopers Campbell and H. Williams were killed.

INDIA.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times, telegraphing on Sunday, says that considerable anxiety is felt by the Madras Government in consequence of the destruction caused by locusts. A request has been made to the Government of India for the immediate despatch to Madras of extra famine officers, and furloughs have been completely stopped in Bengal. An important resolution of the Government of India setting forth schemes for relief works to be undertaken, if found necessary, in the North-West Provinces, has been published.

From Cabul a news letter reports that the Chinese have applied to the Russian Governor-General to deliver up the family of the late Yakoob Bey. The Governor has declined, and removed the family for protection to Tashkend.

AUSTRALIA.

A telegram from Adelaide of Tuesday's date says that the Government have presented the Budget to the South Australian Parliament. The revenue is estimated at £1,716,000, and the expenditure at £1,889,000.

A numerously attended meeting has been held at Sydney to express approval of the conduct of the British Government at the Congress, and a resolution (moved by Sir James Martin, the Chief Justice of New South Wales, and seconded by the Hon. John Hay, President of the Legislative Council) was passed congratulating the Earl of Beaconsfield and his colleagues upon the successful termination of their labours in defence of the public law of Europe, and in securing the blessings of peace whilst resolutely maintaining the honour and interests of the Empire. Great enthusiasm was displayed.

Socotra, at the entrance of the Gulf of Aden, has been reccupied by the Indian Government.

During the first series of bull fights at Madrid this year ninety bulls and 143 horses were killed.

Reports circulated in some foreign papers that differences exist among the members of the Committee of Inquiry into Egyptian Revenue, are stated, in telegrams of Tuesday's date from Alexandria, to be devoid of truth.

The committee for the erection of a monument to Spinoza at the Hague has awarded the first prize to the sculptor Hexamer, of Paris, and the second prize to the sculptor Tüshaus, of Düsseldorf.

The horse Ceylon, who won the Grand Prix de Paris for the Duke of Beaufort in 1866, and who was afterwards purchased by the French Government for breeding purposes, recently died at Tarbes, in his sixteenth year.

Letters have been received in Holland from Vardö reporting that everyone on board the Willem Barendez, the schooner of the Dutch Arctic expedition, was in excellent health, and that hitherto the vessel had behaved admirably.

The ship La Hogue, 1331 tons, Captain Wagstaff, chartered by the Agent-General for New South Wales, sailed from Plymouth for Sydney on the 25th ult. with 462 emigrants.—The Agent-General has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship Samuel Plimsoll, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in May last.

The Post Office authorities announce that, having made arrangements for the conveyance of a mail to and from Cyprus weekly, a mail will be made up in London on the evening of Friday next, Aug. 2, and thenceforward on every Friday evening. Mails by the same route will be brought to London with the overland India mails viâ Brindisi. The following rates of postage will be chargeable:—Letters, 2½d. per half ounce; post-cards, 1½d. each; newspapers, 1d. each (not exceeding 4 oz.); books and patterns, 2 oz., 1d.; 2 oz. to 4 oz., 2d.; every additional 2 oz., 1d.; registration fee, 2d.

CIVIL LIST PENSIONS.

The following list was issued on Wednesday of all pensions granted during the year ended June 20, 1878, and charged upon the Civil List:—

Mr. George Macdonald, £100, in consideration of his contributions to literature.

Mrs. Isabella Shilleto, £150, in recognition of the learning and attainments of her late husband, the Rev. Richard Shilleto, of Cambridge, the eminent Greek scholar.

Mrs. Harriet Agnes Wornum, £100, in recognition of the services of her late husband, Mr. Ralph Nicholas Wornum, keeper and secretary of the National Gallery, author of various works of art.

Mrs. Margaret Emmeline Menzies, £50, in recognition of the services rendered to the Crown by her late husband, Mr. William Menzies, deputy surveyor of Windsor Park, especially with reference to the "separate system of drainage," and other sanitary improvements.

Mary Maria, Lady Creasy, £150, in recognition of the literary services of her late husband, Sir Edward Creasy.

Mrs. Eliza Cruikshank, widow of George Cruikshank, the artist, £100, in recognition of her husband's talents, and in consideration of her straitened circumstances.

Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, £100, in recognition of the gallant, long, and meritorious services of her late husband, Colonel Thomas Laurence Smith, C.B., brother of General Sir Harry Smith, G.C.B.

Miss Harriet Monica Chisholm, £50, in recognition of the services rendered by her mother, Mrs. Caroline Chisholm, "The Emigrant's Friend."

Mr. Joseph Nash (painter in water colours), £100, in consideration of his services to art.

The Rev. James Graves (Incumbent of Inisnag, in the county of Kilkenny), £100, in consideration of the services he has rendered to archæology and antiquarian research.

Dr. James Prescott Joule, F.R.S., £200, in recognition of his eminent scientific achievements and valuable discoveries, including the application of the principle of the "mechanical equivalent of heat."

Total, £1200.

The Duke of Cambridge has issued a general order, by the Queen's command, conveying her Majesty's approbation of the cheerfulness and alacrity with which the Reserves responded to the call, and the manner in which they have performed their duties, and expressing the hope that employers of labour will gladly avail themselves of the opportunity of giving them employment.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Between Encyclopædias and Dictionaries Lord Granville seems to be having a hard time of it. Decidedly the schoolmaster has need to be abroad in politics. "The charge is," said his Lordship in an admirable speech in the Peers on Monday, "that we have dealt exclusively with innuendo. What is an innuendo? Your Lordships will, perhaps, be surprised to hear that the word is not in any of five English dictionaries which I have consulted. But I have an idea, as all your Lordships have, of what constitutes an innuendo." Lord Granville was not fortunate in the choice of his lexicons. Had he looked in Bailey's "Universal Etymological Dictionary," edited by J. N. Scott, M.D., 1772, he would have found innuendo derived from the Latin innuo, to beckon or nod with the head, and defined as an oblique hint, and a word frequently used in writs, declarations, and pleadings to declare a person or thing that was mentioned before, but obscurely, and left doubtful. In Worcester's Edition of Webster's Dictionary (Routledge, 1875) "innuendo" is set down as an indirect allusion, an oblique hint, an intimation, an insinuation. In the "Library Dictionary" (Collins, Glasgow, 1875) the derivation is that given by Bailey, the definition that of Webster and Worcester. In Roget's "Thesaurus"—a wonderfully copious and discriminative repertory of phraseology—the equivalents of innuendo are hint, suggestion, wrinkle, wink, glance, leer, nod, shrug, gesture, whisper, and implication. In slang "innuendo" is not by any means the "straight tip." It is rather "the office." "He was going to peach; but I gave him the office and he kept his potato-trap shut."

Mem: Burton has "innuent" in the sense of significant; but "innuendo" cannot claim to be a very classical word. Bailey can give no better authority for its use than Sir Roger L'Estrange, who speaks of "a libellous innuendo against all the great men." Dryden and Swift seem to have used it now and then; but it is, in strict fact, a law term, not a literary one; and its strictly legal meaning is given by the judicious Phillips in his "New World of Words," London, 1696, without any reference to an insinuation, an implication, or a hint. Innuendo clearly came into our language through the Inns of Court. In the thirteenth edition (Carey's) of Morell's Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary "an innuendo" is defined as "interpretatio ex ipsâ oratione conjecta." See also Dr. Cowel's Law Dictionary, article "innuendo."

I read in the report of a speech made not long since by Mr. J. C. Parkinson, at a public meeting at Newport, South Wales, held for the purpose of promoting a new railway line from the Rhondda Valley to Newport, this portentous passage:—"You are all familiar with the groans of Cardiff." I confess that I never heard of Cardiff as a place remarkable for its suspiria de profundis; but it appears that Cardiff has been groaning these many years past for more dock accommodation, and the want of a fair waterway; while her sister port, Newport, has been as piteously sighing because no available means existed for getting the enormous output of coal from the Rhondda Valley to her new and magnificent Alexandra Docks. But all these groans and sighs will be abrogated, it is to be hoped, by the Parliamentary sanction which has just been given to the construction of the Pontypridd, Caerphilly, and Newport Railway—a line only five miles long—which will bring Newport as close to the great coal-districts as Cardiff, and make her prosperous and great. Mr. Parkinson quoted Dr. Johnson when, as executor to Mr. Thrale, he was selling the brewery at Bankside to the firm afterwards to be known as Barclay and Perkins. "We are not here to sell a parcel of boilers and vats, but the potentiality of growing rich beyond the dreams of avarice." An audacious but a remarkably verified prophecy. So, teste Mr. Parkinson, the five-miles line of railway will develop into gigantic issues which will lift Newport into "immense importance, and make its name famous as a shipping place throughout the world." I hope so, with all my heart!

Phenomenal prices were realised by some of the rare books in the library of the late M. Firmin-Didot, recently sold at the Hôtel Drouot, Paris. An edition of the works of "Maitre Pierre Pathelin," circa 1500, brought 5100f.; a copy of a single play by Molière, "L'Amour Médecin" (the original edition of 1666), was knocked down at 1430f.; and another play of the same illustrious author, "Les Plaisirs de l'Isle Enchantée," with Colbert's arms on the cover, fetched 4500f. The first Aldine edition of Petrarch commanded 8000f. This was sold in 1861 for 3350f.; but the gros lot of the Firmin Didot rarities was the "Théâtre de P. Corneille," Rouen, 1664-6, which was adjudicated for no less than 14,400f. These figures set me pondering. It strikes me that bibliophiles collect for two purposes (I know that I do)—first, to satisfy a genuine love of books; and next, in the hope that their libraries will fetch a good round sum after they are dead. Books, prints, and "curios" generally are pretty nearly all that a working man of letters can expect to leave behind him; but I am rapidly arriving at the conviction that the quest after rare and precious English books in England is becoming a hopeless one. The Americans (who have little else to do when they come hither) wander about the book-stalls, and, lynx-eyed, keen-scented, and long-pursed as they are, snap up nearly everything that is old and curious of a printed nature. Public libraries, moreover, are multiplying not only in our colonies and the United States, but in British provincial towns; and when a rare book gets into a public library it may be considered as lost to the private collector. But there are yet trouvailles to be found on London stalls in the way of foreign literature. Keep your eyes, then, I would counsel you, on the "sixpenny" and even the "fourpenny box." Keep them very wide open for any old French, Italian, and Spanish plays, nouvelles, and chap-books, with an ultimate view of a consignment to the Hôtel Drouot.

Mem: From a "sixpenny box" at a stall "over the water" I rescued not long ago a copy of Tasso's "Gerusalemme Liberata," Venice, 1585, which from a certain cognizance emblazoned on the covers I have the strongest reason to believe once belonged to Queen Elizabeth.

"Read the Duc d'Aumale's 'Les Zouaves et les Chasseurs d'Afrique,'" said to me, many years ago, Mr. Thackeray. "It is a Xenophontic little book," he added. It has lately been my privilege to read a thoroughly "Xenophontic little book," printed "for private circulation only," from the pen of Colonel Basil Jackson, who served under Sir William De Lancey, Chief of the Staff in the Waterloo Campaign, and who, as an officer in the Royal Staff Corps, was stationed at St. Helena during the captivity of Napoleon. Colonel Jackson's modest, manly, observant little work (the gallant veteran must be close on eighty years of age) has to me a double value. It not only gives a most concise and picturesque résumé of the Waterloo campaign, and of what the author terms "St. Helena matters," but it also amplifies with irrefutable facts and arguments Mr. Forsyth's historical vindication of the character of that valiant, accomplished, upright, and shamefully maligned and ill-used officer, Lieutenant-General Sir Hudson Lowe.

I may (with permission) be enabled to recur to Colonel Basil Jackson's book; but here is one good story about the Prussians at Waterloo which I cannot help epitomising. It may not be generally known that, but for a terrible rage into which the Duke of Wellington was constrained to fall, we should not have had one French gun wherewith to furnish the metal for the statue of Achilles in Hyde Park. Three days after the great victory the Duke, meeting Sir George Wood, who commanded the artillery, asked what steps had been taken to collect the captured French cannon. Sir George replied that hitherto he had not given the matter a thought, but that he would see to it forthwith. Accordingly, parties of artillerymen were dispatched to search for the guns—but all had disappeared. "The Duke, ordinarily so calm, flew into a towering passion, frightening poor Sir George out of his wits;" and ended by swearing a sonorous oath that the missing pieces must be found. Meanwhile a report had come in that our good friends and allies the Prussians, on the allied armies marching off, had gone over the ground, and in a surprisingly short time carried away all the French guns to Gemappe. An English officer of artillery was sent to see what could be done towards recovering our legitimate spoil; and, in the end, he succeeded in persuading the Prussian commander to give up one hundred and thirty-three pieces of ordnance—precisely one half of the number lost by the French at Waterloo. "The "Prussians," sententiously adds Colonel Jackson, "were sad rogues in those days, both wholesale and retail, àpropos of horses as well as cannon."

Numbers of my readers may have marked the obvious clerical error through which in a paragraph in last week's "Echoes" relative to the proposed decoration in mosaic of the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral the name of Mr. J. E. Millais, R.A., was substituted for that of Mr. Frederick Leighton, R.A. Thackeray used to tell a story of a good fellow named "Crockey" Doyle, who was continually and intentionally offending people in order that he might gracefully apologise to them afterwards. I am not a graceful apologist; but I can assure my readers that no malice prepense prompted the commission of my blunder about one of the distinguished artists who are to prepare the cartoons for the mosaic work. I had just been writing a leading article "in another place" on the selfsame subject; and the name of Leighton must in that article have fallen full a dozen times from my pen. But every clerical error has its direct and generally simple cause. There was such a cause, I have not the slightest doubt, for the appearance in Sir Archibald Alison's "History of Europe" as a mourner at a public funeral in Westminster Abbey of one "Sir Peregrine Pickle." Possibly Sir Peregrine Maitland was meant; and the compositor's thoughts when he set up the name were running, perchance, on the pickles on which he may have partaken at dinner. It happens that just before I penned that unlucky paragraph in the "Echoes" I had had occasion to turn up Cruden's Concordance, and my eyes had lighted upon the words "Mount Hor." Why were they so attracted by the words? Because I have sometimes seen "Hor" spelt "Hur." Straightway, by some unconscious process of association, my thoughts must have reverted to Mr. Millais's grand picture of "Moses, Aaron, and Eleazar on Mount Hur," exhibited at the Academy some years ago; and then, collaterally, it must have occurred to me that the very best way in which to decorate St. Paul's would be by oil paintings of Scriptural subjects by the first English masters of the day. Thus, for the moment, Mr. Millais was master of the situation in my mind; and I blunderingly brought his name into my paragraph instead of that of Mr. Leighton.

Earl Cowper has pressed on the attention of the Earl of Beaconsfield the expediency of establishing at the Imperial expense a museum of plaster casts from the antique, with a view to furthering the study of "Ancient Art" among the British youth; and to the same intent the masters of the principal public schools in the metropolis have memorialised the Treasury. The Prime Minister promises to consider the matter during the recess, and holds out hopes that something may be done next Session. "What! Hamlet—Hamlet the Dane!—that's much!" Such was Garrick's stereotyped reply (while shaving) to youthful postulants for dramatic fame, and who almost invariably wanted to play Hamlet as a début. The study of "ancient art" through a Museum of Casts! That's much! I may say, par aphrasing Hamlet. To the studious British youth I would add—first read very attentively all that has been written on the subject of "ancient art" by Montfaucon, Winckelman, Flaxman, Payne Knight, Cumberland, Charles Blane, Dr. Wilhelm Lübke, the Herren Guhl and Köner, and Mr. Anthony Rich. After that, I shall be happy to lend the S. B. Y. (if he will promise to return it) a fear ful folio of four hundred pages, "De Pictura Veterum," by Franciscus Junius, printed at Rotterdam, in the seventeenth century. It is in the Latin tongue, and is dedicated to Johannes à Julsinga, Lord of Tackenborg, Garmewolde, Ten Burr, and Tessinge. In this tremendous tome the studious one will learn some deeply edifying things about Dexiphanes and Emoplates, the architects; Demoplun, the goldsmith; Doryclidas, Menestratus, Theocles, the sculptors, "and many more." F. Junius's catalogue raisonné of ancient artists alone fills one hundred and fifty pages in double columns.

I advocate very strongly the establishment of a National Museum of Casts; first, because the priceless antique sculpture at the British Museum is, for lack of space, very badly arranged; and, next, because at the Crystal Palace the attention of the visitor is diverted from the exquisite examples of statuary at Sydenham by a number of jarringly-heterogeneous objects. But the head masters of our public schools will, if they are wise, desist from the attempt to instil into their pupils that which can only be the merest smattering of a knowledge of Ancient Art:—a study which, properly pursued, should be the purpose of a lifetime. Schoolmasters have, I take it, two great things to do before they think of cramming their scholars with matter too grave for their young brains to carry. First let them have all their boys taught practical geometry and drawing, instruction in which has just been made obligatory in all French schools above the primary grade. Next, let all English public schoolboys be forthwith taught to speak and write colloquially a certain copious and sonorous language called Romaic, or Modern Greek, and to pronounce it as the Greeks of Greece and Turkey pronounce it, and not according to the canons of the Dutchman Erasmus and the Englishman Sir John Cheke, deceased. For further particulars apply to Dr. Schliemann and to Professor Blackie.

P.S.—Madam, if the great scheme for the political and social regeneration of Asia Minor comes to anything, hundreds upon hundreds of intelligent young men will be wanted to fill vice-consular and commercially residential appointments in the East. But to fill these appointments they must be able to speak Modern Greek fluently. Madam, if you will insist that your bright young son, now growing up, shall have a Modern Greek instead of an Ancient Greek tutor, you will be materially aiding his prospects in life. Nor would instruction in Romaic do your daughter any harm. It is as easy to learn as Italian, and would be much more useful—to young ladies. At least, my experience leads me to believe that it is not imperatively necessary that a young lady should be able to understand Italian in order to sing an Italian song; and the "books of the words" at the Opera-Houses are printed in the English as well as the Tuscan tongue. And such English, too! No, no, young ladies; learn Greek, as a preliminary to becoming blooming Levantine brides.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The battalion prize-meeting of the London Irish took place last Saturday at Milton, with the following results:—1st series: Challenge Cup and £12, Colour-Sergeant Watts; £9, Captain Inglis; £6, Captain H. Roberts; £5 each, Sergeant O'Neill and Private Guthrie. Other smaller prizes were taken. The Danbency Challenge Cup, A (Captain H. Roberts's) company; the Regimental Challenge Cup for volley-firing teams, F (Captain Hardy's) company.

The annual drill competition of the 26th Middlesex (Customs and Docks) was held in the evening in the Tower Moat. Only two companies—D and M—put in an appearance. The drill was a long and exhaustive one, and the umpire, Lieutenant Stafford, Grenadier Guards, awarded the victory to the former.

The 29th (North) Middlesex underwent their annual inspection at the hands of Colonel Logan, commanding the 49th and 50th sub-districts. The regiment mustered in good strength at Albany Barracks, and marched in eight companies of thirty-six files, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Brown, to Regent's Park, where they were drawn up in line to receive the inspecting officer. After the usual inspection of the ranks, Colonel Logan took post at the saluting-base, and the regiment marched past in a very steady manner, considering the strength of the companies, in column and quarter-column in quick time, and in close column at the "double." Major Le Mottee then took command for the manual and firing exercise, this being followed by two captains drilling the battalion. Colonel Brown then put the corps through a short series of ordinary battalion movements, concluding with some drill in the new attack formation. Colonel Logan expressed himself exceedingly pleased at the appearance and steadiness of the men, and at the intelligence displayed.

The annual official inspection of the Tower Hamlets Engineers by Colonel Gordon, the Commanding Royal Engineer of the Home District, took place on Saturday. The first portion of the work was in Victoria Park, where the corps paraded in six good companies, under Lieutenant-Colonel Comyn, the total number present being 378 of all ranks, out of an enrolled strength of 400, the absentees all having leave of absence. The inspecting officer made a close inspection of the ranks preparatory to the march-past in the customary three formations. Major Evans then put the corps through the manual and firing exercise, this being followed by a short series of battalion movements, under the commanding officer, at the close of which a march was made to the head-quarters in Victoria Park-square. Here each company was told off to the rear of works on which it had been lately engaged. Colonel Gordon minutely inspected each work, and asked a number of questions of various men who had been engaged in their construction, the answers, as a rule, being given promptly. At the close of the inspection the gallant Colonel made a short address, in which he said he was glad to be able to speak to them in terms of praise, as there was a great improvement from last year and a rectification of the faults of which he had then complained.

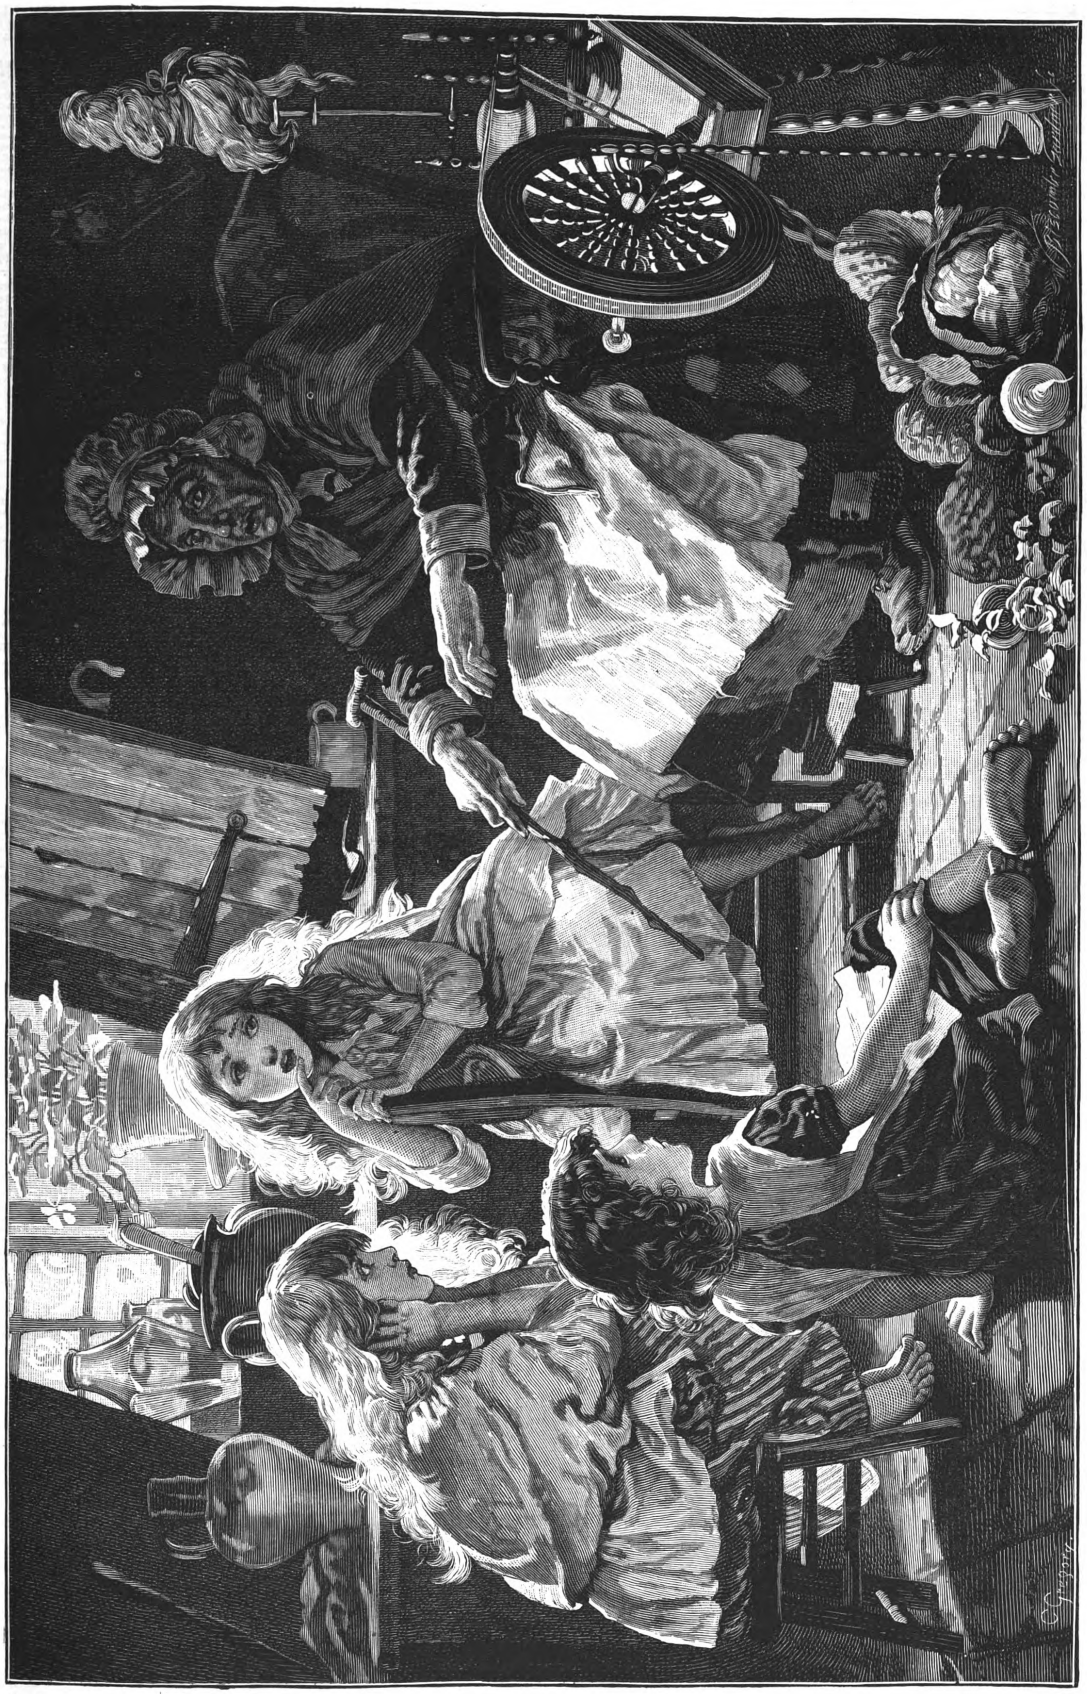
The three provisional battalions of volunteers that did duty for eight days at the camp of exercise at Aldershott returned to their respective head-quarters last Saturday, their places being taken by other three provisional battalions, and the 1st Berks Rifles, who sent the splendid number of 620 men, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay.

Last Saturday the Eton College rifle volunteers were inspected. The corps, consisting of four companies, a total of about 250, marched to the Playing Fields, taking ground opposite the wall. Colonel G. E. Baynes, commanding the forty-second sub-district, was the inspecting officer; and, after his duties had been performed, he complimented the commandant upon the bearing of the regiment.

The Engineer Volunteers who were at the camp of instruction at Chatham during the past fortnight were last Saturday morning inspected by Major-General H. Newdegate, the commandant of the garrison, and the volunteers afterwards left for their homes. Although the men were subject to the Mutiny Act, only one man had to be punished with anything like severity. Their conduct on the whole was remarkably good.

Lord Carlingford and Frances Countess Waldegrave distributed at Chelmsford on Wednesday the prizes won at the annual shooting competition of the Essex Rifle Association. The Essex Challenge Shield, value £100, presented by Major Coope, M.P., was carried off by the 3rd Essex Battalion (Ilford), the ten men representing that battalion scoring 1036 in the three competitions appointed, against 1002 by the 1st battalion (Chelmsford) and 879 by the 5th battalion (Plaistow). Sergeant Elkington, who stood so well for the Queen's Prize at Wimbledon, maintained his reputation, taking, among other honours, the chief ladies' prize, and the medal and £5 in the grand aggregate with 117 points. The medal carries with it the right to compete for the Prince of Wales's Prize at Wimbledon next year. Captain Copland, of the 4th Essex, took the Association Cup, and Sergeant Clarke, 9th Essex, the first prize in the president's series. The Countess offered a new annual prize of 10 guineas.

The meeting of the Jersey National Rifle Association ended on the 25th ult., after a four-days' competition, held on Gorey-common. The Grand Challenge Match, between the Rifle Clubs of Jersey and Guernsey, was won by the latter, who scored 242 against Jersey's 240. The teams were formed of eight a side, and ten shots each were fired at 500 and 200 yards ranges. Lady Norcott, wife of the Lieutenant-Governor, distributed the prizes.



The Southampton Corporation has resolved to present an address of welcome to the Prince and Princess of Wales on their visit to the town on the 12th inst. for the purpose of laying the foundation-stone of the Wilberforce memorial church.

Captain Twyford, who has had considerable experience in the management of prisons and convict settlements, and who served in the Crimean War and during the Indian Mutiny, has been appointed to the governorship of York Castle.

The First Lord of the Admiralty has conferred the good-service pension of £100 a year, vacant by the death of Inspector-General John Rees, M.D., C.B., upon Inspector-General James L. Donnet, M.D.; and her Majesty has conferred on Lieutenant-General Raines, C.B., a pension of £100 for "distinguished and meritorious service extending over a period of thirty-six years."

THE CARLTON CLUB BANQUET AT THE RIDING-SCHOOL, KNIGHTSBRIDGE: DRINKING LORD BEACONSFIELD'S HEALTH.

"FOLK-LORE." BY C. GREGORY. IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

"FOLK-LORE."

The picture, by Mr. C. Gregory, tells its own tale most emphatically, as it so vividly represents the delightful terror of three little girls listening to the ghost story which the old woman is telling them. Perhaps it is a witch story, and they may almost fancy her a witch, looking so wild and grim, and wielding her crutched stick with such fierce energy, as though she were about to draw a magic circle on the cottage floor, and change them into mice or kittens, by waving the potent wand thrice above their heads, and pronouncing a fatal spell. All this kind of imaginative foolery belongs to the department of "folk-lore," or vulgar fable, which many learned scholars of national literature have industriously collected and edited for the critical instruction of an unbelieving age. We by no means commend the practice of entertaining children with these pernicious falsehoods, and we feel quite sure that much more wholesome pleasure can be afforded by revealing the wondrous truths of natural science, or by narrating some innocent and not improbable tale of fiction, based on the real conditions of human life.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

If Lord Beaconsfield has cause for complaining that the Leader of the Opposition in the Upper Chamber will not unsheathe his sword, his Lordship cannot say that Earl Granville does not rattle his blade in its scabbard enough. Yesterday week Lord Granville was at the Prime Minister again about Batoum, and read a letter from Hobart Pasha to the effect that it was a very safe though small harbour. Which "bears out the statement of the Royal hydrographer," rejoined the Earl of Beaconsfield. "But not that of the noble Lord," quickly retorted Earl Granville. A few minor matters having been disposed of, the "High Policy" of the Government was brought on the carpet, and playfully toyed with by the Earl of Rosebery. The noble Earl threw up the Salisbury-Schouvaloff Agreement, caught it in his mouth, and shook it with the frolicsomeness of a kitten. His comparison of the behaviour of the Ministry to the shallow make-believe of Bottom in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" tickled the House exceedingly. But the Marquis of Salisbury was ready with an emphatic reason why he had called the Globe summary of the Agreement unauthentic. The Foreign Secretary insisted that he had rightly described it, inasmuch as the epitome gave an untrue account of the essential point claimed by the Government—namely, that the Sultan should retain military power over the new province south of the Balkans. Dissatisfaction was not, however, to be thus easily smothered. Further complaints arose from both sides the House. The Earl of Carnarvon repeated Lord Derby's weighty objections against the Anglo-Turkish Convention for the acquisition of Cyprus and the guaranteeing English aid to Turkey in case of any future invasion of Armenia by Russia. Lord Morley also adversely criticised the system of contracting secret treaties, and the Marquis of Bath, Lord Hammond, and Earl Granville followed in the same strain, the last-named noble Lord complaining that both the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary had not remained in their places to hear the arguments advanced in opposition to their policy.

Lord Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury were once more put on their defence when the House reassembled on Monday. Availing himself of the motion by Lord Stratheden and Campbell for further papers on Eastern Affairs, Earl Granville replied with some warmth to the challenge thrown down by the Prime Minister on Saturday at the Knightsbridge dinner. The noble Earl virtually said the Opposition did not unsheathe their swords, but remained content with making feints, because they did but follow the policy of Lord Beaconsfield when he was in a minority. So far from dealing, however, in innuendo, as alleged (a word which the noble Earl had vainly searched five dictionaries to find!) Lord Granville pointed out that the speeches of Lord Selborne and Lord Kimberley, to say nothing of those of Lords Derby and Carnarvon, the Duke of Rutland, and the Marquis of Bath, had not been answered. Finally, the noble Earl animadverted on the personal attack made by the Prime Minister on Mr. Gladstone last Saturday. Lord Beaconsfield was not slow to reply. He surmised that the object of the noble Earl's criticisms was to disturb the digestion of Saturday's dinner. He briskly proceeded to justify the answer he had made to Mr. Gladstone's allegation that the Anglo-Turkish Treaty was "an insane" Convention. Did not "that speaker" on several occasions make the most personal allusions to him? At Oxford, said the noble Earl, "he described me as a dangerous and even a devilish man." His Lordship, therefore, thought he was entitled to use the expressions he did on the occasion referred to. If it is thought, however, concluded his Lordship, "we have entered into an 'insane Convention' . . . I think it is their duty to ask the opinion of this House of Parliament on that subject." The conversation, lessening in acerbity, was continued by Lord Napier and Ettrick, the Marquis of Ripon, the Marquis of Salisbury (who maintained that "the people of this country will never allow Russian influence to be supreme in the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris," and that, therefore, the Anglo-Turkish Convention had been rendered a matter of necessity), Lords Cardwell, Cranbrook, Aberdare, and Hammond. A few measures were then advanced a stage; and the Earl of Beaconsfield assured Earl Cowper that every effort would be made to establish an historical gallery of casts from the antique.

"Your money or your life!" is still demanded by armed men on Blackheath, according to Lord Truro, who on Tuesday cast reflections on the metropolitan police system, which was stoutly defended, however, by Earl Beauchamp. The Marriage Preliminaries (Scotland) Bill, the Corrib (Galway) River Bill, the Metropolitan Board of Works (Money) Bill, and the Freshwater Fish Protection Bill were read the third time and passed.

On Thursday there was a little brush between the Premier and the late Colonial Secretary, which at one time wore a very threatening appearance. The following summary of the circumstance will no doubt be read with interest. The Earl of Carnarvon drew attention to a passage in the speech of the Prime Minister on Monday night, when he said:—"As long as those two noblemen remained in the Cabinet we adhered to the policy which they had accepted, and on which we understood they were to act; but when the time came they shrank from the responsibility of carrying it into effect." Those words, he said, were calculated to give a very false impression. It was true they were somewhat ambiguous; but, if the noble Earl meant that, after agreeing to particular measures of policy, when the moment of difficulty and danger arrived he (Lord Carnarvon) flinched from that to which he had pledged himself with a clear perception of the end and means in view, he must give that statement a courteous but unqualified contradiction. Never once while a member of the Cabinet had he advocated or consented to any particular policy, and then shirked the responsibility of that act. Such a course would be unworthy, cowardly, dishonest, and untrue, both in act and word. If, therefore, that was what the noble Earl intended to convey, he felt bound to give the statement an unqualified and absolute contradiction. The Earl of Beaconsfield: I understand that the noble Earl, complains that I stated that he supported a certain policy in the Cabinet, and when called upon to carry that policy into effect he declined to carry the opinions he had sanctioned into action. Well, my Lords, I believe you are perfectly aware of what was the declared policy of the Cabinet during the two years in which those events occurred. That policy was described in a despatch which was on the table of your Lordships, and therefore I am not betraying any Cabinet secrets in referring to that policy. The Government of her Majesty declined to enter into the quarrel between Turkey and Russia unless British interests were in danger. The principal point of that policy was the non-alteration in the possession of Constantinople, and everybody understood what was the policy of that day. If Constantinople were in danger, British interests would be considered endangered. Very shortly after that the armies of Russia were arriving at the very gates of Constantinople, I may say; and, if I remember rightly, it was the opinion of the Cabinet that we ought to carry our policy into effect, and the Cabinet determined to act accordingly. The Reserves, if I recollect rightly, were not called out for a considerable time after the noble Earl left the Cabinet, but the act which we carried out was a natural act of our policy. It was our policy to defend British interests involved in the possible capture of Constantinople, and had been for a long time, and therefore had been sanctioned by the noble Earl; but when the time came that we felt it our duty to carry it into effect, the noble Earl said it was inconsistent with his views to act with us, and he quitted the Cabinet. That, I think, is quite in accordance with the statement which I made the other night.

The subject then dropped.

COMMONS.

What may in all likelihood be the last great debate of the Session monopolizes the attention of hon. members as we write. But a few lines may be allowed to gather up the dropped threads of the past week's speeches. Dallying with the matter as though it were dessert, the House lingered yet again over the Cattle Plague Bill, spending the afternoon of yesterday week with Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson in disputing about fresh clauses in Committee, and even then not giving the finishing touch to the measure which at first bade fair to make dear meat still dearer. The evening sitting was devoted to the discussion of a Natal motion in a manner which exhibited the deliberative capacity of the House in its best light. Each hon. member who joined in the debate initiated by Mr. Alderman M'Arthur had something useful and encouraging to say of our South African colonies. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach amply justified his appointment to the Colonial Office by his conciliatory yet firm speech on behalf of the Ministry. The right hon. Baronet's eulogium of Sir Bartle Frere, and his expression of confidence in him, met with the cordial indorsement of Mr. W. E. Forster, who thought they might rely on Sir Bartle to introduce into Natal the reforms referred to in Mr. Alderman M'Arthur's resolution.

The Marquis of Hartington, greeted with the customary chorus of "Hear, hear, hear!" from the Opposition benches as he relieved himself of his white hat and approached the table, on Monday moved—

That, whilst this House has learned with satisfaction that the troubles which have arisen in the East of Europe have been terminated by the Treaty of Berlin without a further recourse to arms, and rejoices in the extension of the liberty and self-government of some of the populations of European Turkey, this House regrets

That it has not been found practicable to deal in a satisfactory manner with the claims of the kingdom of Greece and of the Greek subjects of the Porte;

That, by the assumption under the Anglo-Turkish Convention of a sole guarantee of the integrity of the remaining territories of Turkey in Asia, the military liabilities of this country have been unnecessarily extended;

That the undefined engagements entered into by her Majesty's Government in respect of the better administration of those provinces have imposed heavy responsibilities on the State, whilst no sufficient means have been indicated for securing their fulfillment;

And that such engagements have been entered into, and responsibilities incurred, without the previous knowledge of Parliament.

With characteristic gravity and solidity did the Leader of the Opposition acquit himself of his task. In the main, he argued, the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin were not repugnant to the views expressed on his side the House, inasmuch as self-government was to a great extent given to the races lately subject to Turkey. But he could not approve the conduct of the Government towards Greece; and he thought the result of that policy would be that in future Greece would do as Servia and Montenegro had done, and seek the liberation of her occupied territories by force. Referring to the secret agreement signed by the Marquis of Salisbury and Count Schouvaloff, and to the Anglo-Turkish Convention, the noble Marquis said these private transactions had been arranged in a spirit directly opposed to that which the Government declared ought to animate international arrangements. In the spring it was loudly proclaimed that the Treaty of San Stefano was objectionable because it was secretly negotiated. How could the secret Convention with the Sultan, then, be regarded as consistent with our obligations towards Europe? The occupation of Cyprus, too, was objected to, as it had not been accomplished in an internationally legal manner, and as no adequate reason had been given for its acquisition. Dealing with the non-necessity of guaranteeing to protect Turkey in Asia from further Russian attack, the Marquis of Hartington certainly seemed somewhat burdened by the lesson he had set himself; but he warmed up when he came to any salient point. Thus Liberal cheers followed his remark that the British Navy would be found, in case of need, in the Persian Gulf to resist any Russian approach to India. Again, he met with encouragement from his supporters when he deprecated the use by the Prime Minister of the Scriptural words, "Thus far shalt thou go, but no farther!" The result of this Convention would be that, if a war should break out between England and Russia, it would give Russia an incalculable advantage, inasmuch as our actual base of operations would be at least a thousand miles away, whereas her resources would be close at hand. If such a Convention was not rightly described as "insane," he would like to know what name should be given to it. Lord Beaconsfield's retort on Mr. Gladstone for the use of this term "insane" he thought was not un-Parliamentary; but, said the noble Marquis, with marked impressiveness—

when the noble Lord thought it worthy of himself to go on to describe my right hon. friend as a "sophistical rhetorician (laughter from the Ministerial benches) inebriated by the exuberance of his own verbosity, and gifted with an egotistical imagination which could at all times command an interminable and inconsistent series of arguments to malign his opponents and glorify himself"—when the noble Lord went on to describe my right hon. friend in that way, I think he was rather insulting to the Sovereign to whom my right hon. friend had been for no inconsiderable time the chief adviser ("Hear, hear," from the Opposition benches), to the Privy Council, of which my right hon. friend is still a member (hear, hear), to this House, which my right hon. friend has led, and to the people of this country, whose confidence at one time (cheers from the Ministerial benches) my right hon. friend possessed, and the confidence of a large portion of whom he still possesses (Loud Opposition cheers).

Mr. Gladstone bore himself with the resignation of a Christian martyr whilst the peculiar language of Lord Beaconsfield was being read; and the Marquis of Hartington not long after brought his speech to a close, amid renewed cheers from the Opposition. Mr. D. Plunket is usually so fluent and ready a debater that it was something of a disappointment to find the hon. member (troubled with a cold) hesitating in his delivery, and ancient as to his matter in moving the amendment on behalf of the Government:—

As an amendment to the Marquis of Hartington's proposed resolutions, to leave out from the first word "That" to the end of the question, in order to insert the words, "an humble Address be presented to her Majesty, thanking her Majesty for communicating to this House the Treaty of Berlin, the Protocols of the Congress of Berlin, and the Convention between Great Britain and Turkey; assuring her Majesty that this House has learnt with deep satisfaction the termination of the late unhappy war, and the conclusion of a Treaty between the Great Powers of Europe; and expressing an earnest hope that the arrangements made and sanctioned by her Majesty's Government may, under the blessing of Providence, avail to preserve peace, to ameliorate the condition of large populations in the East, and to maintain the interest of this Empire."

Mr. Plunket did but repeat for the most part the arguments used by the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary in "another place;" but, in referring to the "insane" episode, the hon. member made a gallant effort to explain away Lord Beaconsfield's expression as being more of a jocular than a serious nature. It was but too evident, however, that Mr. Plunket spoke from a brief with regard to which he had received few or no instructions. His reply, accordingly, missed fire. Sir Charles Dilke, on the other hand, displayed his usual ability and readiness in debate, and made good the omissions of Lord Hartington in a telling speech in favour of the resolutions, listened to with attention on both sides of the House. The ball was kept rolling by Mr. B. Cochrane, Mr. E. Ashley, Mr. R. Plunket, Mr. G. Duff, Mr. Bourke, who might take a lesson in elocution from Mr. H. Vivian, who vigorously protested against Parliament being treated as a mere register office.

Lord Sandon resumed the debate on Tuesday in a speech framed to cast a saint-like nimbus round the head of each of her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries who signed the Treaty of Berlin. The noble Lord (whose first speech of mark this was since he has entered the Cabinet) recapitulated with as much sincerity as if they were his own the stock arguments which are apparently kept docketed in Downing-street in readiness for any Minister in need of a justification for the policy of the Government. His Lordship was succeeded by Mr. Gladstone, who delivered a long and eloquent address, unsurpassable for its comprehensive grasp of the subject, its lucidity, point, and the high tone which animated it throughout. Curiosity existed at the outset as to how the right hon. gentleman would treat the post-prandial language used towards him, and the accusations brought against him by Lord Beaconsfield. Mr. Gladstone referred to them but briefly. He read a letter (beginning "Dear Lord Beaconsfield") which he had sent to the Prime Minister to ask for chapter and verse of the alleged offensive references to the noble Earl. As for the oft-quoted passage from the Premier's after-dinner speech, the right hon. gentleman lightly said of that, "when I read it, I reflected with considerable pleasure and comfort upon the fact that it gave a much better account of me than was given in a speech delivered by the same noble Lord at Aylesbury about two years ago." So far from desiring to abridge the liberty of speech, Mr. Gladstone asserted that "if you forbid members of this House to denounce when they see cause the policy of any Government as dishonouring the country, you may as well shut the doors of the House." Coming to the broad question under consideration, he acknowledged that we ought to be thankful that the Congress had brought about peace, but he could not be grateful to the Government for that, as the only obstacles in the way of peace for many months past had been created by her Majesty's Government. The work of the Congress was then succinctly summarised. Eleven millions and a half out of seventeen millions had been freed in European Turkey; and yet it was said that Turkey was but concentrated. "Yes, Sir; it is concentrated as a man's body is concentrated when his limbs have been hacked to pieces." Significant allusion was then made to the fact that an article of the Berlin Treaty makes all the Powers responsible for the good government of the arrangements for the ensued some minute criticism of the arrangements for the better management of Eastern Roumelia. Her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries were severely taken to task for not making themselves the champions of freedom when the cases of Greece, Bulgaria, Montenegro, and Bessarabia came before the Congress, a saving sentence being interpolated in praise of Lord Beaconsfield's courage in insisting upon the emancipation of the Jews. As a rule, the voice of England's representative was that of Metternich rather than that of Mr. Canning or Lord Palmerston, or Lord Russell. The secret agreement between Lord Salisbury and Count Schouvaloff did not escape censure. But Mr. Gladstone reserved his strongest denunciation for the Anglo-Turkish Convention, drawing a powerful picture of the possible results of this step in the dark, and emphatically declaring that neither the Duke of Wellington nor Sir Robert Peel, Lord Aberdeen, nor Sir James Graham, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Palmerston, Lord Clarendon, nor Lord Russell "would for one moment have looked on such a scheme as has been concocted in the dark by the members of her Majesty's Ministry." Of those who followed Mr. Gladstone (whose remarkable discourse held the attention of the House for about two hours and a half) the most noticeable were Mr. Osborne Morgan, Mr. Stansfeld, and Mr. Cross. The speech of the Home Secretary was undoubtedly an able defence of the Government. Justifying the part taken by the English representatives at the Congress, Mr. Cross said, in the absence of any other reasonable solution of the Constantinople difficulty, it was resolved to maintain the sovereign power of the Sultan there, and to retain for him a considerable though diminished dominion in Europe. As for Bessarabia, our Plenipotentiaries did object to it; but the country would be with them in not going to war to prevent the retrocession. The cause of Greece was strenuously advocated by the Marquis of Salisbury. Justification for the Anglo-Russian Agreement would be found in the fact that it led to a peaceful issue of the Congress. What was there unreasonable in the Anglo-Turkish Convention? Without it the various tribes in Armenia would gravitate towards Russia. With it, Turkey, guaranteed by England protection from Russian attack, would reform her provinces in Asia Minor. Mr. Cross further stated explicitly that the Government had taken steps to secure good government for these provinces, so that English and European capital might flow into those fair parts of the earth. As for the charge of secrecy in the matter, the Home Secretary reminded the House that the Tripartite Treaty of 1856 was made, signed, and ratified before Parliament knew one single word about it. Mr. Lowe having moved the adjournment of the debate, the Chancellor of the Exchequer had to endure a little lumbering pleasantry from Sir William Harcourt as to the Globe Memorandum.

The Duke of Connaught's Dowry Bill was on Wednesday read the third time after a lively debate, 151 to 13 voting for it in the face of the objections urged by Mr. Plimsoll, Mr. Burt, Mr. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Mr. E. Jenkins, and Sir Charles Dilke. Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson had at length the satisfaction of seeing the Cattle Plague Bill passed through Committee; and Mr. J. Cowen initiated a resultless debate on the Bishoprics Bill.

We have now arrived at Aug. 1, nevertheless there is no sign of a proximate close of the Session, which has been already unusually protracted. There yet remains an amount of business to be disposed of which would involve a period of at least five or six weeks to get through unless there was a more wholesale "massacre of the innocents" than has been perpetrated in previous Sessions. The statement made by the Government leader of the House on Thursday will give some idea of the state of public affairs in the British Parliament. In reply to Mr. Briggs, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that he could not at present fix a day for the India Budget. Owing to the interruption which had taken place in the public business this week, it would be necessary to proceed at once with the remaining votes in Supply. He proposed to take the Education Estimates on Monday, in order to avoid having to apply for another vote on account, and the Supplementary Army Estimates on Tuesday. In answer to a question from Mr. Childers, Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson said that there would be some further Supplementary Civil Service and Revenue Estimates, but they would not exceed £80,000. Mr. Meldon being dissatisfied with a reply of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to the effect that he could not at present fix a day for the third reading of the Irish Sunday Closing Bill, gave notice that, on the motion for going into Committee of Supply on Monday, he would move that the House refuse to proceed with Supply until the bill in question was disposed of. The debate on the motion of Lord Hartington's resolution was resumed by Mr. Lowe, who said they had heard a good deal as to the position of Turkey which had been denied by Lord Beaconsfield, but the fact remained that the dominion of Turkey which had been disposed of by the treaty had been divided amongst seven different Powers. He denied that the Government had succeeded in erecting a complete autonomy for the provinces south of the Balkans; and, with regard to Greece, he grieved as an Englishman to say that that country had lost what she might otherwise have gained had she not listened to the advice of England. Turning to the question of secret treaties, the right hon. gentleman pointed out that England had gone into the Congress with two secret treaties in her pocket—one with Russia and the other with Turkey; and, from what had transpired that morning, it looked as if there were a third secret treaty in existence. With regard to the question of Batoum and the despatch to Lord Odo Russell on that subject, he remarked that it seemed as if there were an attempt to find out how many falsehoods could be put together. Here the right hon. gentleman was interrupted by an appeal to order from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who gravely objected to the use of the word "falsehoods" as applied to the Government. The Speaker having interposed, Mr. Lowe withdrew the expression, remarking that Russia had obtained Batoum. In regard to Cyprus, he proceeded to argue that the acquisition of that island was useless and burdensome to us, as we shall be obliged to maintain therein an armed force, to be ready for any emergency. He condemned the policy of the Government in regard to Asia Minor, and insisted that it had a right to consult the House of Commons before it entered into those engagements with the Porte and with Russia, which involved this country in the most serious obligations. For the first time in English history, he said, an enormous scheme of innovating policy, utterly new and utterly uncalled for, had been carried out by her Majesty's Government. Lord John Manners replied to Mr. Lowe. The debate was continued to a late hour.

WILL OF THE LATE MR. BOLCKOW, M.P.

The will (dated Oct. 18, 1872) of Mr. H.W. F. Bolckow, M.P., of Marton Hall, Yorkshire, and 33, Prince's-gate, was proved in the district registry at York on July 27, by Mr. Isaac Wilson, M.P., Mr. Isaac Lowthian Bell, M.P., Mr. Thomas George Robinson, and Mr. C. F. H. Bolckow (nephew of the deceased), the personal effects being sworn under £800,000. The testator confirms the settlement made upon his marriage, and gives to his wife a legacy of £1000. He also bequeaths to his wife for her life his dwelling-house, 33, Princes-gate, and its contents; whilst his Marton estate and other estates in Yorkshire are devised to the use of his nephew, Mr. C. F. H. Bolckow, and his heirs in strict settlement. The library, pictures, china, and plate are annexed to Marton Hall as heirlooms, subject to the enjoyment of such as are at Prince's-gate by Mrs. Bolckow during her life. An annuity of £4000 is bequeathed to Mrs. Bolckow, and also an annuity to testator's brother, Frederick Bolckow. The residuary real and personal estate is bequeathed to his trustees in trust to pay charitable and other legacies, amongst which are legacies of £1000 each to his executors, £5000 to the North Riding Infirmary; legacies of £2000 each to certain schools in Middlesborough and Marton, £1000 to the Newcastle Infirmary, £500 to the Durham County Infirmary, £200 each to the Deaf and Dumb Institution at Newcastle, the Yorkshire Blind School, the Castle Howard Reformatory, the Coatham Convalescent Home, and the Cottage Hospital at North Ormesby. £5000 is also bequeathed for charitable purposes in Mecklenburg-Schwerin. The will also contains bequests to servants and others; and gives £30,000 to testator's nephew Max Bolckow, £5000 to his nephew Castell Hopkins, £5000 to other children of his late sister Mrs. Hopkins, £10,000 to his sister Mrs. Martens and her children, £5000 to his sister Mrs. Eckermann and her children; £10,000 to his sister Mrs. Kofahl and her children, £2000 to his sister Miss Bolckow, £2000 to his niece Mrs. Dummer, and £2000 to his niece Miss Kofahl, besides annuities to his brothers-in-law and others. To his nephew C. F. Bolckow the testator gives a legacy of £50,000, and a further legacy of £50,000 payable out of his residuary estate; and the residue of his real and personal estate is directed to be invested in the purchase of freehold estates to be added to and held with his Marton estate.

The Town Council of Blackburn have sanctioned the payment of bills in connection with the late riots amounting to £3358.

The first turf of a new wet dock at Greenock was cut on Thursday by Provost Lyle. It will be called the James Watt Dock, the estimated cost being about £400,000.

Lord Carlingford presided on Monday over a county gathering at the Townhall, Colchester, to initiate an effort to raise the sum of £5000 for improvements and alterations in the Essex and Colchester Hospital. The sum received and promised at the close of the meeting was £1976.

The Royal Archæological Institute is holding its annual congress at Northampton; and the thirty-fifth congress of the British Archæological Association will be held at Wisbeach, beginning on the 19th inst. The annual meeting of the Kent Archæological Society was held at Bromley on Wednesday.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Last week there seemed every reason to fear that the ground at Goodwood would be terribly hard, but the rain which has fallen within the last few days quite removed these apprehensions, and the course was in very fair order. While on the subject of water, we note with thankfulness that the authorities have at last turned their attention to the fearful state of the roads from Drayton and Chichester to the Park, and their efforts have been crowned with such success that the usual clouds of dust are seen no more, and a beautiful drive is as enjoyable as it ought to be. The first race of much interest on Tuesday was the Stewards' Cup, for which only twenty ran, a smaller number than has turned out for this event for many years. Lollypop (8 st. 13 lb.) was generally selected by the public as the best handicapped horse in the race; but the weight of money behind Cagliostro (6 st. 4 lb.) caused him to start with a slight call of any of the others. The Duke of Hamilton declared to win with Midlothian (7 st. 2 lb.), in preference to Lollypop, still this seemed to have no effect upon the positions of the pair in the betting. Before they had gone more than half a mile it was clear that Lollypop had the race at his mercy; but as Midlothian was evidently able to beat everything else, Custance, of course, eased the heavy weight, and allowed Midlothian to win by four lengths, finishing second himself, a head in front of Twine the Plaiden (7 st. 4 lb.). We were not surprised that backers grumbled loudly at this result, but were certainly astonished to find them supported by one or two of our contemporaries, who must be lamentably ignorant of the laws and customs of racing. The policy of the Duke of Hamilton was perfectly straightforward and justifiable. He announced in an open manner that it suited him best to win with Midlothian, and that he should do so if he could. Backers chose to disregard this warning, and to express, by backing Lollypop, their disbelief that Midlothian was capable of beating the rest of the field, and then, when they discovered that the owner's estimate was correct, and theirs was wrong, there was a melancholy wail. Could anything be more unreasonable? The Richmond Stakes, though only established last year, when Jannette won it for Lord Falmouth, has already taken rank as one of the most important two-year-old events of the season. It was imagined that the ever popular magpie colours would be carried by Leap Year, who had incurred a 6 lb. penalty for her Chesterfield Stakes victory; so when it became known that the "dark" Wheel of Fortune was superior to her stable companion at level weights, the race was regarded as a foregone conclusion. The result proved that no mistake had been made in the trial, for Archer was in front all the way with the favourite, and won very cleverly by two lengths from Peter and the Cremorne—Chance colt, who has been named Cadogan. Wheel of Fortune is by Adventurer from Queen Bertha, and is therefore a half sister to Queen's Messenger, Paladin, and other good winners; she is a small, racing-like filly, though by no means so grand-looking as others that have been seen out this season.

The Drawing-Room Stakes on Wednesday disposed of the slight Leger pretensions of Queen of Pearls; and as Inval had some little trouble in beating the wretched Priscillian, his Doncaster prospects were not improved. Though the Sussex Stakes at one time promised to rank among the chief attractions of the meeting, and was worth nearly £2000, it was at last, owing to accident and various other causes, reduced to a match between the two French horses, Insulaire and Clocher. At first almost any odds were laid upon the former; but when it oozed out that he had been taking a well-earned rest for some little time past, the ring fielded stanchly, and were rewarded by seeing Clocher win cleverly, though so little was thought of Insulaire's defeat that he did not recede even a point in the St. Leger quotations. Count Lagrange was more fortunate in the Lavant Stakes, which fell to Rayon d'Or, a magnificent half brother to Chamant, by Flageolet—Araucaria; and, as he is still very far from fit, he ought to do great things in the future. Fourteen runners was a very fair complement for the Goodwood Stakes, and the respective partisans of Norwich (7 st. 3 lb.) and Hampton (9 st.) seemed almost equally confident of success, though the former was actually first favourite when the flag fell. A fair start was effected at the first attempt, and Shillelagh (6 st. 11 lb.) soon took the lead, and brought them along at a capital pace. Though temporarily deprived of the command by Roubigant (5 st. 7 lb.), Shillelagh soon resumed it, and looked very much like winning until he was simultaneously challenged at the distance by Hampton, Strathmore (7 st. 6 st.), and Norwich. He was then in trouble, and swerved right on to Norwich, almost knocking him off his legs. Had a less talented jockey been on the favourite this mishap would have probably proved fatal to his chance, but Fordham steadied him as coolly as possible, and, bringing him up with a rare rush on the outside, beat Hampton cleverly by a length, the latter being only a neck in advance of Strathmore. Thus the first race finished in exact accordance with the betting, and, with the exception of Shillelagh, who was a very good fourth, nothing else got within hail of them. Mr. Crawfurd is having a capital year of it, the City and Suburban and Derby being his chief previous successes; and such a fine supporter of the turf well deserves a turn of luck. Cadogan again ran badly in the Findon Stakes; and the ready success of Lord Clive over Clémentine wound up a rather poor day's sport.

We can merely record, without comment, the racing on Thursday, which was as follows:—For the Twenty-sixth Bentinck Biennial Memorial Stakes, Rylstone walked over. For the Twenty-seventh Bentinck Memorial, Eau de Vie beat Priscillian. For the Chichester Stakes nine ran: Lollypop, 1; Faïsan, 2; Strathavon, 3. For the Goodwood Cup three ran: Kinesem, 1: Pageant, 2; Lady Golightly, 3. For the Selling Stakes five ran: Blonde, 1; Princess Catherine, 2; Ryegrass, 3. For the Visitors' Plate four ran: Quarau, 1; Singleton, 2; Ambergris, 3. For the Molecombe Stakes nine ran: Honey Bee colt, 1; Radiancy, 2; Friar Rush, 3. For the Last Bentinck Memorial three ran: a dead-heat between Muley Edris and Jessie Agnes; Eagle, 3; Muley Edris and Jessie Agnes divided the stakes. For the Singleton Stakes five ran: Trappist, 1; Dalham, 2; Lollypop, 3.

Cricket is carried on in all parts of the country with unabated vigour. A Twenty-Two of Crewe and district, and an Eighteen of Keighley and district have both fallen easy victims to the indefatigable Australians, the bowling of Boyle appearing to mow down the local men almost as fast as they could come in. Thanks to the fine batting of Mr. L. A. Shuter (47 and 43) and Humphrey (not out, 41 and 47), Surrey made a capital fight with Yorkshire, and was only beaten by 75 runs. Lancashire v. Gloucestershire attracted an immense crowd of spectators, and ended in a draw. Messrs. F. Hornby (100) and W. S. Patterson (50) did most of the scoring for the northern county, for which Mr. A. G. Steel bowled as well as ever; and Mr. W. G. Grace (not out, 58) headed the Gloucestershire total. The match between Kent and Surrey was remarkable for the splendid batting of Mr. F. Penn, who put together 160, the highest score yet made this season, thanks to which his county won by ten wickets. The meeting of Yorkshire and Gloucestershire for the benefit of T. Emmett proved a great success in every way. In the first innings of each side only Hall (45) and Mr. W. G. Grace (62) did much to distinguish themselves; but when Yorkshire went in again Ulyett (109) and Lockwood (107) batted grandly, and as only Mr. W. G. Grace could do anything with Bates's bowling—he took seven wickets for 38 runs—Yorkshire won by no less than 244 runs. In the annual contest between Rugby and Marlborough Mr. C. F. H. Leslie made 88 by some of the hardest and cleverest hitting ever seen in a public-school match, and enabled Rugby to win in one innings, with 24 runs to spare.

Yesterday week the annual meeting of the Grand National Archery Society was concluded on the Tombridge Wells-common. The winners for the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh gross scores have been as follows:—Ladies: Mrs. Marshall, Mrs. Horniblow, Mrs. Piers Legh, Mrs. Pinckley, Miss Piers Legh, Miss Hollins, and Mrs. Ainsworth. Gentlemen: Messrs. Palairet, O. Leigh Clare, Rimington, Everett, Fisher, Betham, and Hussey. Mrs. Thomson made ten golds, and took the ladies' prize; and Mr. Piers Legh, seventeen. The ladies' transferable silver Braces and Badge were taken by Mrs. Marshall; while the Champion Gold Medal was awarded to Mr. Palairet.

A walking-match at the Agricultural Hall for the Twenty-six Hours' Champion Belt, presented by Mr. R. Lewis, has resulted in the success of H. Vaughan, of Chester, who, in addition to the belt, takes £150 that had been staked.

The challenge cup offered by the proprietors of the Sportsmen for the sculling championship has attracted an entry comprising the names of Higgins, Elliott, Blackman, Boyd, and Nicholson; so the race—which will take place, we believe, in October—promises to be of unusual interest.

Singularly enough, the result of the swimming race for the Lords and Commons' prize, which took place on Monday last, was exactly the same as last year, H. Davenport, G. Fearn, and G. Spong being again respectively first, second, and fourth. The course is from Putney to Westminster, a distance of about five and a half miles; and Davenport reached the goal in 1h. 16m. 10 sec., beating Fearn by nearly a minute, while he was a long way in front of E. Danels.

At the Hereford Regatta the West of England Challenge Vase, value one hundred guineas, with a presentation prize of thirty guineas for four oars, was won by two boats' length by Bath, who defeated crews from Hereford, Shrewsbury, and Tewkesbury. The Wye Challenge Vase, value fifty guineas, with four presentation gold medals, for four oars, was carried off by the Evesham representative.

On Monday the Royal Dorset Yacht Club held their annual regatta in Weymouth Bay, and the event brought together a capital array of craft of all rigs.

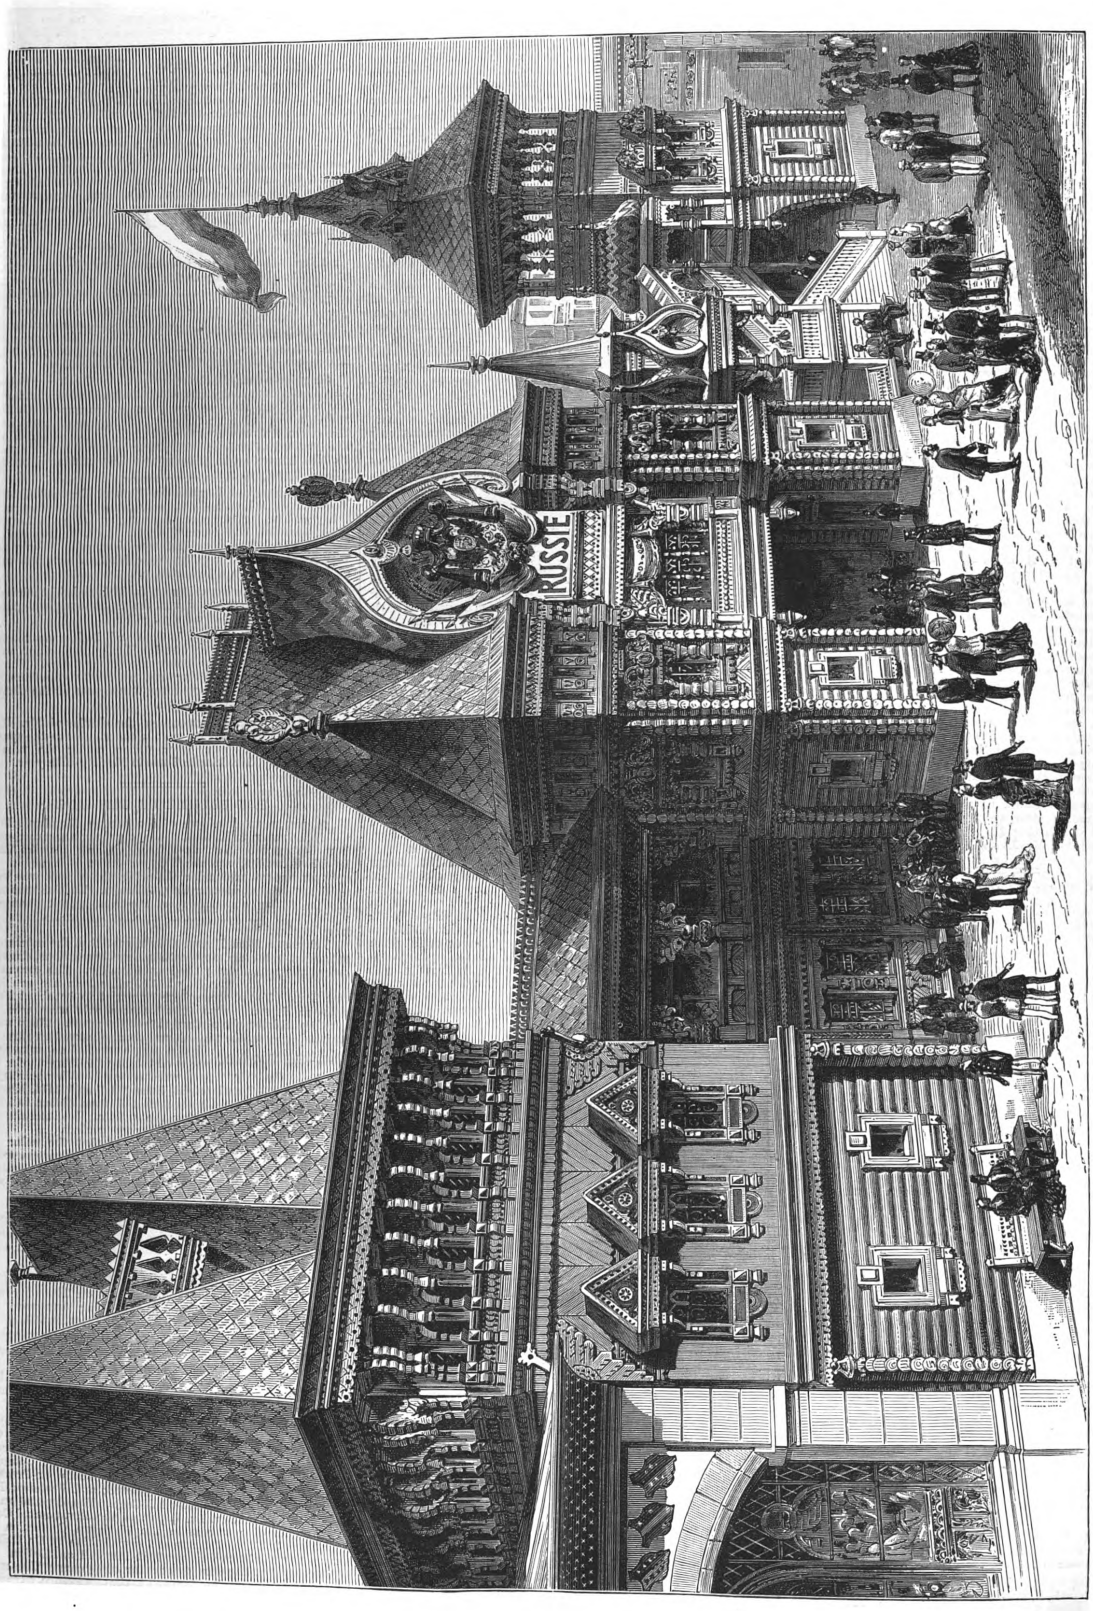
The match for Doggett's Coat and Badge was rowed on Thursday afternoon from London Bridge to Chelsea, and, as usual, attracted a large concourse of spectators. The race was won by Taylor, of Wapping, by six lengths from Hart, of Bankside, after a fine race for three parts of the distance. Cassidy, of Shadwell, was third.

The Morning Post announces the death of Mr. Henry Marshall, for many years past a contributor to the sporting columns of that and other papers under the name of "Harkaway." Mr. Marshall was in his fifty-fifth year.

THE ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.

There was a total eclipse of the sun on Monday. It was visible, however, in its total phase only along a track extending from Eastern Siberia across Behring's Straits, athwart Alaska, British Columbia, and the Western States of America. The only convenient region for observing the eclipse was in the neighbourhood of Denver City, Colorado. To this spot many of the leading astronomers of America betook themselves, while Messrs. Ranyard, Lockyer, Penrose, and others went from England.

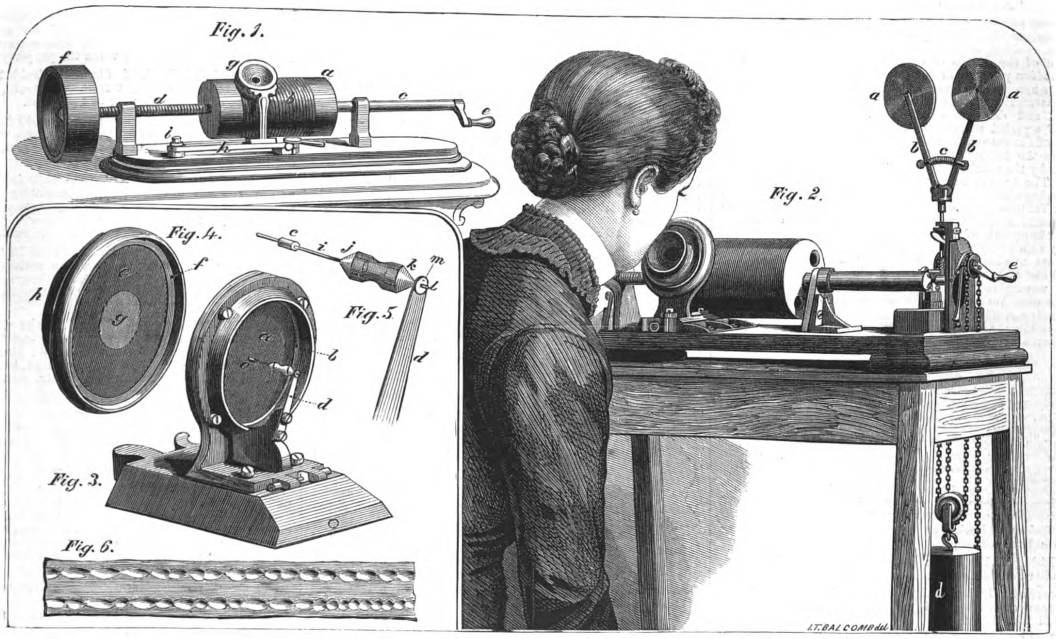
Telegrams from Denver City report that the astronomers succeeded in taking most satisfactory observations, drawings, and photographs along the line of totality. The corona was unusually bright, extending 70,000 miles from the sun in all directions. The chromosphere appeared to be about 2000 (?) miles in depth. Two protuberances only were seen, very faintly visible on the western side of the moon. There was an entire absence of the pinkish red flame observed on some previous occasions, and the spectroscope revealed no extra red or violet lines. At the moment of totality the Frauenhofer lines and both the "H" lines were reversed. Very bright lines near large "D," and bright lines "F" and 1474, Kirchoff, were observed. The temperature fell from 18 deg. to 33 deg. in different localities during the eclipse. No intermercurial planet was observed. The weather was perfect.



Professor Norman Lockyer reports that the solar protuberances were fainter and fewer, but that the corona was ten times brighter, than in the eclipse of 1871, thus indicating a variation with the maximum and minimum sun spot periods.

A Supplementary Estimate amounting to £1,845,000 has been issued to meet additional expenditure for Army services consequent upon the war in Turkey and the outbreak at the Cape of Good Hope.

The Duke of Devonshire presided at Miss Emily Faithfull's lecture on Modern Extravagance, given on Thursday week, at the Pavilion, Buxton. After paying expenses, Miss Faithfull presented the Devonshire Hospital with £20.



The eighteenth branch of the Leeds Central Public Library was opened on Monday. It was stated that in the reference department of the Central Library 271,000 volumes had been consulted, 2,535,000 issues of books had been made, and the reading room had been visited by 2,751,578 visitors since it was opened.

The Wesleyan Conference at Bradford received on Tuesday influential deputations from the Primitive Methodist Conference and the Bradford Nonconformist ministers. Addresses were read by the Rev. Dr. Antliff and the Rev. Dr. Campbell, and speeches were made by the Rev. T. Smith, ex-President of the Primitive Methodist Conference; and Professor Fairbairn, of Airedale Independent College. The deputation was replied to by the Rev. Dr. Pope and the Rev. Samuel Coley. The number of members in the Wesleyan Connexion was reported as 380,876. After an oral examination by Dr. Osborn, sixty young ministers were received into full connection. On Wednesday Dr. Haydon, Chancellor of Syracuse University, United States, in bidding farewell to the Conference, advocated an ecumenical conference of representatives of all Methodist bodies throughout the world. A committee was appointed to consider the subject and report to the next Conference. The Rev. Dr. Gervase Smith gave an address on his recent official visit to Australia, New Zealand, and the Fiji Islands.—The annual Conference of the Methodist Free Church was begun on Wednesday, at Manchester. The Rev. W. Boydon, of Burnley, was elected president.

"A YOUNG DRUIDESS."

The eminent painter in water-colours, Mr. Carl Haag, who has drawn this graceful and picturesque female figure, may not have been enabled, so far as we know, to obtain precise information of the details of costume proper to a Gaulish or British maiden priestess of the Aboriginal Church two thousand years ago. We do not remember that Julius Cæsar in his Commentaries, or the Elder Pliny in his miscellany of historical and descriptive anecdotes, or any other Roman author of a period when some of the Celtic tribes were still running wild in the woods of Western Europe, has condescended to tell us the fashions of dress worn by those consecrated ladies, or by the secular persons of rank among their sex and nation. The greater scope was left to artistic fancy, which might perhaps have been aided by a study of the costumes of a Maori or Tahitian chieftain's daughters, in designing a characteristic outfit made of woven grass and wampum and the woolly or hairy skin of a beast, with the decorations of golden jewellery which may yet be seen in our antiquarian collections. This figure of the "Young Druidess," however, claims our approval and even admiration upon higher grounds, as a noble type of womanhood and a genuine native beauty, let her belong to whatever age and race or condition of life she may; but there is a special significance in the bundle of mistletoe and the sickle she holds in her hands, after performing the well-known sacred rite of cutting some branches of that holy plant.

Pearson, W.; Curate of St. George's, Bolton; Vicar of Rawtenstall.
Prince, Edward B.; Curate of Torwood, Torquay.
Ruck-Keene, Benjamin; Rector of Copford, Essex.
Smart, E., Rector and Rural Dean of Denbigh; Archdeacon of St. Asaph.
Wood, Canon, Rector of Copford, Essex; Vicar of Newent, Gloucestershire.

The Bishop of Rochester has left Selsdon Park on a short visit to the United States.

The Bishop of Ely has reopened the church of Brampton, Hunts, after an effective restoration.

Last week the Bishop of Ely was present at the opening of a new organ at Basing, and preached on the occasion from 1 Kings iii. 15. The service was fully choral.

The Right Rev. H. B. Bousfield, Bishop of Pretoria, in the Transvaal, was presented at a public meeting in Andover on Monday evening with a purse containing 227 guineas.

St. Mark's, Hamilton-terrace, was reconsecrated by the Bishop of London on the 20th ult., after having undergone considerable alteration and enlargement, from designs by Messrs. B. and E. B. Ferrey.

Lord Northbrock laid the foundation-stone of a new church—to be called St. Mildred's—at Lee, Kent, on Thursday week, having given the site and contributed £2000 towards the building fund.

On Monday the Earl of Darnley laid the foundation-stone of a new church which is to be erected at Barstal, Rochester, close to the large convict establishment. The site has been given by Mr. T. Luff.

The Archbishop of Canterbury on Wednesday consecrated the church of St. Mary Magdalene, Addiscombe, originally built for the Free Church, but acquired for the English Church in 1874. The Rev. H. Glover is the first incumbent.

The Archbishop of York has consecrated a new church dedicated to All Saints, at Middlesborough, to which the late Mr. Bolckow, M.P., was a large contributor, and of which the Hon. and Rev. A. Bertie will be the Vicar.

The corner-stone of St. Matthias' Church, Summerfield-street, the first of the churches to be built by the Sheffield Church Extension Society, was laid on Tuesday afternoon by Mrs. Thomson, wife of the Archbishop of York. The church, which will accommodate about 720 worshippers, is to be erected at a cost of little less than £5000. The land upon which it will stand has been given by Mr. Henry Wilson, who has also largely contributed to the endowment fund.

A portion of the permanent Church of the Ascension, Lavender-hill, was opened on Sunday, July 21, with an octave of services. Amongst the preachers were Canon Carter and the Rev. F. J. Ponsonby. The district comprises the "Shaftesbury Park Estate," and contains about 10,000 inhabitants. The patronage is vested in Keble College. The cost of the portion of the church which has been built has been more than £7000, and a further sum of £9000 will be required to complete the design without the tower.

Two instances of anonymous munificence are worthy of record. The sum of £1000 has been paid to the account of the Curates' Augmentation Fund, with Messrs. Herries, Farquhar, and Co., by an anonymous contributor, through the Rev. E. Capel Cure, Rector of St. George's, Hanover-square; and at Chelmsford church, on Sunday morning, a bank-note for £1000 was placed in the offertory bag, with directions for one half of the amount to be devoted to the Chelmsford Infirmary, and the other half to the Chelmsford Dispensary.

The Bishop of Exeter reopened the parish church of St. Michael, Alphington, on the 25th ult., after a careful and complete restoration, which has entailed an outlay of £1500 The work has been accomplished chiefly through the exertions of Dr. Dennett, the Curate-in-charge. The upper part of the porch, which has been rebuilt, is adorned with a niche containing a statue of the patron saint, executed by Mr. Harry Hems, at the expense and from the design of Lord Devon, who, besides making other contributions to the church, has devoted much attention to the work now being finished.

The Court of Common Council of London has made a grant of 100 guineas, and the Merchant Taylors' Company of 20 guineas to the St. Andrew's Waterside Church Mission. The society has been extending greatly of late, and, in addition to the work it carries on in the waterside parishes of the Thames and at Liverpool, has now many stations abroad, where the best welfare of the sailors on board ship and in hospital are cared for. Gifts of books and numbers of the Illustrated London News, whether consecutive or not, are greatly valued in the mission work, for leading libraries, &c., and will be gladly acknowledged if sent to the dépôt, 36, City Chambers, Fenchurch-street station, E.C., with the address of the donor.

The Lambeth Conference held yesterday week its ninth and last sitting. After prayers in the chapel of the palace, the consideration of the report of the committee on "the condition, progress, and needs of the various churches of the Anglican Communion" was resumed, and after the transaction of other business the Conference closed at seven p.m., with a cordial vote of thanks to the Archbishop as chairman. The Bishops then sang together the "Gloria in Excelsis," the Archbishop pronounced the benediction, and the assembly dispersed.—A farewell service in connection with this Conference was held on Saturday morning in St. Paul's Cathedral. Of the one hundred Bishops who have taken part in the discussions at Lambeth nearly all were present, and a sermon was preached by the Bishop of Pennsylvania.—A considerable number of Bishops again occupied metropolitan pulpits on Sunday.—The Bishops of New York, Pennsylvania, Albany, North Carolina, Colorado, and Guiana preached in the parish church and other churches and chapels of Leamington, the Bishop of Louisiana giving a characteristic address in the afternoon to 1000 children. On Monday morning there was a celebration of holy communion at 8.30; and at eleven the Bishop of Worcester, who has not attended the Lambeth Conference, presided at a missionary conference in the Royal Pump-rooms, when the subjects discussed were—1, the effect of missionary enterprise on civilisation; 2, hindrances to missionary work. In the afternoon the Mayor presided at a public luncheon; and in the evening Lord Leigh, the Lord Lieutenant of the county, took the chair at a second meeting, when the subject for debate was missionary work among the aborigines and freedmen in America, Africa, and the East Indies.—Many of the Bishops who lately took part in the Pan-Anglican Synod arrived at Stratford-on-Avon last Tuesday; and, after visiting Shakspeare's birthplace and other objects of interest, proceeded to Shottery Hall, where they remained for a time the guests of the Vicar of Stratford.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Guardian's Oxford correspondent states that the office of Vice-Chancellor, having been declined by the three heads of houses who come next in rotation to the Warden of New College, is understood to have been offered to and accepted by the Master of Balliol, Professor Jowett. Mr. Sidney Graves Hamilton, B.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, has been nominated by the founder to a Fellowship in Hertford College.

A graduation ceremonial in medicine, in connection with Edinburgh University, took place in the Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on Thursday, Sir Alexander Grant, Vice-Chancellor, presiding. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on the following gentlemen:—Dr. Risdon Bennett, president of the Royal College of Physicians, London; Sir Joseph Fayrer; Mr. J. R. Green, author of "The History of the English People;" Professor Lister, King's College, London; and Mr. William Macdonald, Rector elect of Dunedin High School, Otago.

Mr. Samuel Sharpe has promised to give £5000 towards the building of the north wing of University College, London, so soon as the council are prepared to begin the work. A sum of £50,000 in all will be required to complete the extensions immediately contemplated. The West Scholarship, of the value of £30, has been awarded by the council to Mr. Thomas William Allen, of Amersham Hall School. The annual distribution of prizes to the pupils in University College took place on Thursday afternoon in the theatre of the college, Gower-street, under the presidency of Mr. Henry Morley.

At Eton College the following have been elected to the foundation:—Milman, Williams, Freeman, Lewis, Knatchbull-Hugessen, Douglas, Cross, Dupuis, Marshall, Smallwood, Ferard, Cartwright, Sterrey, Waterfield, Bower, Headlam, Hatchard, Evans, Marchant, Boothby, Croome, and Halcombe.

The Wellesley (leaving) Scholarship at Wellington College has been awarded to G. H. Devonshire; accesserunt, J. B. Atlay and H. Havelock. The senior scholarships (in the school) to N. D. F. Pearce, C. M. Marling, and A. L. Harrison; accesserunt, K. M. Drummond and R. A. Kaye.

The first of the new exhibitions recently founded by the Dean and Chapter of Durham at Durham School has been awarded to Hugh Moises Taylor, late King's Scholar, son of the Rev. R. Taylor, Vicar of Monk Helesdon.

Thursday, July 25, was speech-day at Bradfield College; Trent College; King Edward's School, Berkhamsted; and Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, Cranbrook.

Lord Napier of Magdala distributed the prizes on Friday, July 26, to the successful students in the Cooper's-hill College, and gave them some interesting information and advice bearing upon their future careers as engineers in India. On the same day prizes were given by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress at the City of London School; by Earl Nelson, at Archbishop Tenison's School; by the Bishop of Worcester, at the College for the Blind, Worcester; at the Islington Proprietary School; and at Royse's School, Abingdon.

A large and distinguished company attended the prize-day proceedings on Monday at Marlborough College. A goodly list of distinctions won by past scholars in the Universities was announced. Among the special events of the day was the opening of an organ which has been erected in the chapel, to which the scholars, past and present, largely contributed. On the same day Mr. Grant Duff, M.P., distributed the prizes at the London International College, Isleworth; the Rev. J. Heyworth gave the prizes at Clifton College; the Bishop of New Jersey at St. Chad's School, Denstone; Lord Carlingford, Lord Lieutenant of Essex, at Felsted School; Mr. George Chater at the Stationers' School; Bishop Claughton at the St. Marylebone and All Souls' Grammar School; and the Hon. Mrs. Duncombe at the Royal Naval Female School.

The award of commissions and presentation of prizes at the close of the summer term took place at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, on Wednesday. General Sir Daniel Lysons presided, and among those present was the Duke of Connaught. The name of Corporal Alfred Mantell received in numerous cases honourable mention, and nearly half the prizes fell to him. On the same day was made the annual distribution of prizes at the Royal Naval Hospital School, Greenwich, the distribution being made by the First Lord, the Right Hon. W. H. Smith. The opening of the new wing of the Oxford Military College, which provides accommodation for sixty additional students, took place in the afternoon, and was followed by the annual distribution of prizes, which were presented by Mrs. Desborough. The award of medals and certificates, as well as of the free scholarships in the ladies' division of the Crystal Palace Company's School of Art, Science, and Literature was completed on Wednesday.

Lord Northbrook distributes the prizes at Dulwich College this (Saturday) forenoon.

The estate of Mr. Rhodes, of Hounslow, who was described as having carried on the "business of a miser," is the subject of an inquiry in Chancery. He has left the bulk of his property, which is estimated at £65,000, to two charities; and the relatives who are excluded allege that, as some of the property consists of debentures, it comes under the Mortmain Act. Vice-Chancellor Malins directed an investigation to be made.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Grocers' Company have given £100 to the Charity Organisation Society.

The Rev. Sir Edward Repps Jodrell has sent £100 to the funds of the Cabdrivers' Benevolent Association, Soho-square.

Sadlers Wells Theatre was offered for sale at the Mart, Tokenhouse-yard, by Mr. F. T. Galsworthy, on Tuesday. The bidding reached £2000, when the property was withdrawn.

The Bank of England directors decided on Thursday to raise the rate of discount from 3½ per cent, at which figure it was placed on the 4th ult., to 4 per cent.

The London Hospital has received £525 from the Mercers' Company; and the Saddlers' Company have voted twenty-five guineas to this hospital, being their second grant of that amount during the year.

Viscount Cranbrook, Secretary of State for India, on Wednesday received a deputation representing merchants and others interested in the province of Assam, who waited on him to urge the importance of improving the means of communication between Calcutta and Assam.

The subway at Victoria station to the District Railway for passengers by the London, Brighton, and South Coast, and the London, Chatham, and Dover Railways, was opened last Saturday. It is 300 ft. in length, 10 ft. wide, and 9½ ft. high, and has cost £4000.

Mr. Edward Sutton, chief clerk in the office of the Local Government Board, has been appointed assistant-secretary, in place of Mr. Francis Fletcher, resigned; and Mr. John Bellamy, a principal clerk in that department, has been appointed to the chief clerkship, in the room of Mr. Sutton.

A final meeting of the executive committee of the Caxton Celebration was held on Tuesday in the library of the Bank of England—Sir Charles Reed presiding—when the secretary, Mr. Hodson, announced that the clear balance resulting amounted to £1116 8s. 2d., which was directed to be handed over to the Printers' Pension Corporation.

This being the twenty-fifth year of Mr. Spurgeon's ministry, it is proposed to present him with £5000 as a testimonial. Mr. Spurgeon has expressed his desire that the whole amount raised should be devoted to the purposes of his congregation, and especially to the providing a permanent maintenance for the aged inmates of the almshouses in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the fourth week in July was 76,247, of whom 38,058 were in workhouses and 38,189 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1877, 1876, and 1875, these figures show a decrease of 599, 612, and 6940 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 470, of whom 275 were men, 153 women, and 42 children.

The litigation arising out of the grant by Parliament of £5000 to Lord Cochrane in respect of the distinguished services of his grandfather, the Earl of Dundonald, came to a close on Tuesday in the Chancery Division. Vice-Chancellor Malins decided that the grant was specific to Lord Cochrane, and that therefore his brothers had no claim to any portion of it; but that one tenth thereof must, under the Earl's will, go to the executor of Mr. Earp, who assisted him in calling public attention to his claims.

The annual general meeting of the board of governors of the Home for Incurable Children was held yesterday week at the Eyre Arms Assembly Rooms, St. John's-wood—the Rev. Canon Lloyd (in the absence of Bishop Claughton) presiding. The total receipts on account of the general fund during the past year (including a balance of £202 brought forward from the previous year) had been £957. The expenditure for the same period had been £858, leaving £99 2s. 9d. still to the credit of the institution. Eighteen patients had been under treatment during the past year—one had died, six had been removed or discharged, and eleven are still in the house. The receipts towards the building fund amounted to £778, making the present total to the credit of this special fund £1188, and the committee trusts the balance of the estimated amount required—viz., £3000—may shortly be forthcoming. The report was adopted. The chairman then announced that the Duke of Connaught has consented to become the president of the institution, and had forwarded ten guineas to its funds.

There were 2414 births and 1792 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 54, and the deaths by 39, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. Whooping-cough continues fatally epidemic, and caused 101 of the deaths registered last week, which exceeded the corrected weekly average by 56; the disease showed especial fatality in Kentish Town, Islington, Lambeth, and Camberwell. The deaths referred to diarrhœa and simple cholera, which in the five preceding weeks had rapidly increased from 23 to 349, further rose last week to 457, of which 336 were of infants under one year of age, and 99 of children aged between one and five years. The deaths from smallpox, which had been 11 and 19 in the two preceding weeks, declined again to 11 last week. Six fatal cases of sunstroke were registered during the week. There were 21 deaths from measles, 27 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, and 21 from different forms of fever. In the Greater London 2933 births and 2145 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 65·2 deg., and was 3·0 deg. above the average in the corresponding week of the sixty years 1814-73. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was only 37·6 hours, although the sun was above the horizon during 110·2 hours.

Amongst the communications read at yesterday week's meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works was a letter signed by Sir Charles Reed and others on behalf of the Sunday School Union, requesting the board to appropriate a site on the Victoria Embankment for the purpose of erecting thereon a statue to the memory of Robert Raikes, the founder of Sunday schools. It was referred to a committee.—Three board schools for three southern districts of London were opened last week. The first, for the district lying between Brixton-road and Clapham Park, in the division of Lambeth, was opened on Thursday, in the presence of a large meeting, by the Rev. John Rodgers, M.A., the vice-chairman of the board. On Friday Sir Charles Reed opened a new board school at Randall-place, Roan-street, Greenwich. The new schools will accommodate boys, girls, and infants, many of whom will be transferred from temporary schools. At Beresford-street, Walworth, on the same day the Rev. J. Rodgers, the vice-chairman, performed a like ceremony at a new school erected there for nearly 800 children.—A charge against a schoolmaster of having admitted superior children from efficient schools, to the detriment of poorer children, was discussed at the weekly meeting of the London School Board. The discussion arose on the presentation of a report from a Committee exonerating the master. The report was agreed to.

LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST.
THE MOST PALATABLE.
THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.

DR. DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL, proved by twenty-five years' medical experience to be THE ONLY GENUINE KIND which produces the full curative effects in CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN, RICKETS, AND ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, Coughs, Colds, Tendencies of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

DR. PROSSER JAMES,
Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extendir, its use."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the world.

EPPS'S COCOA.
THE "Naval and Military Gazette" says:—
"The nutritive qualities of cocoa over either those of tea or coffee are now so generally acknowledged that the steady increase shown by official statistics in the consumption during recent years ceases to be a matter of surprise. One of the first firms to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our breakfast-table was Messrs. Epps and Co., whose business it has been to watch at Messrs. Epps's works the elaborate and complex processes, and to note the care and labour bestowed before the grains, once dry, are considered ready for consumption, cannot crude cocoa bean is considered ready for consumption, cannot but admit that the popularity Messrs. Epps's productions have secured is fully deserved. The vastness of these works may be imagined when it is stated that four millions of pounds of prepared cocoa alone are prepared there yearly. The reputation gained, now many years since, for Mr. James Epps's preparation, both for its purity and its value as a dietetic, has been more than maintained. A constant increasing demand fully testifies to this—which must be as gratifying to Messrs. Epps as it is certainly flattering to the good faith they have kept with the public to secure so gratifying a result."

"All the Year Round" says:—
"Having now disposed of fancy chocolate, let us stroll to the Euston-road, hard by the Regent's Park, to Epps's cocoa manufactory, where may be studied the making of cocoa on a stupendous scale, giving a just idea of the value of these articles, not as luxuries, but as actual food."

THE "Court Journal" says:—
"In a climate so varying and trying as our own, to maintain sound and uniform health, our daily diet cannot be too carefully and attentively studied. Advancing science and chemical discoveries have within the last few years been instrumental in several most valuable additions to our comparatively short list of dietetic foods. Foremost among these should be ranged cocoa, which, although known here several centuries previously, only came into general use within the last forty years. One of the first to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our table was Mr. James Epps, whose 'Prepared Cocoa' has gained such just repute for its excellent and nutritious character. Prepared originally on homœopathic principles, in a subtle and convenient form, and easy of digestion, it met a public demand, speedily became popular, until now Messrs. Epps produce over four millions of pounds of that cocoa a year; and their manufactory is the largest of its kind in this country."

"Cassell's Household Guide" says:—
"We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps and Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in the Euston-road, London."

EPPS'S COCOA.
THE "Morning Advertiser" says:—
"In the middle of the seventeenth century an announcement appeared in one of the few journals of that period, to the effect that 'out of Bishopsgate-street, at a Frenchman's house, is an excellent West India drink, called chocolate, to be sold at reasonable rates.' This is the first record we have of the introduction of cocoa into England. For a time it flourished as a fashionable drink, and then, like all fashions, became obsolete. Nearly two centuries after, in 1832, the duties, which had been almost prohibitive, were greatly reduced, and one of the first to take advantage of re-establishing the popularity of cocoa was Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists. Under the name of 'Prepared Cocoa' they introduced a soluble and convenient preparation, which required no boiling, and was palatable and highly nutritious. It met a public want, speedily became popular, and year by year has increased in demand, till the consumption now exceeds four millions of pounds yearly."

THE "Christian World" says:—
"'If I am to take cocoa,' said I, 'I must know what it is made of; I must examine the process: I must dive into the mystery of its manufacture; I must see and judge for myself what are the ingredients of which it is composed.' With this view I made my way to the manufactory of James Epps and Co., in the Euston-road.'"

"John Bull" says:—
"In no branches of industry are recent scientific and chemical discoveries more generally applied than in those upon which our food supply is so largely dependent. The increase of the last generation have in many cases become the daily necessaries of the present. A forcible illustration of this is to be found in the enormous increase in the consumption of cocoa during the year—in exact proportion to the increased facilities for its manufacture. An idea of the vast extent of this industry may be formed from the fact that one firm alone—that of Messrs. Epps and Co.—now sell over four millions of pounds annually. The 'Homœopathic Cocoa' of Messrs. Epps has, during the many years it has been before the public, gained great and just repute, which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly entitle it to. A cocoa in soluble form, and combining what are technically known as 'flesh-forming' and 'heat-giving' properties, is clearly an invaluable addition to our somewhat list of dietetic foods. Such Messrs. Epps claim for their prepared cocoas, and such analysis and—most valuable of all—experience has proved it to be."

THE "Church Review" says:—
"Although we cannot yet boast of a free breakfast-table, still the active legislation in furtherance of that object during the last half century leaves us much to be thankful for. A striking instance of the general good resulting from the removal of heavy imposts upon our food supply is afforded by the marvellous increase in the consumption of cocoa since 1833, up to which period an almost prohibitive duty was levied. In 1830 the total amount consumed in this country was less than half a million pounds yearly. At the present time one firm alone, that of Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists, sell annually four million pounds."

EPPS'S COCOA.
THE "Civilian" says:—
"In the seventeenth century, before either tea or coffee had found their way into the English markets, chocolate was a favourite beverage with the luxurious classes at that period; it then fetched an almost fabulous price per pound. To-day, when modern science and enterprise have placed it within the reach of every class, cocoa is not only still regarded as a palatable and refreshing drink, but is valued for its nutritive and dietetic qualities. One of the first, we believe, who may be credited with introducing cocoa in its present form is Mr. James Epps. Prepared on sound dietetic principles, Epps's Homœopathic cocoa contains all the nutritive properties of the native product in such a form that they are rendered thoroughly soluble, and, therefore, much more easy of digestion. The natural superabundance of fat present in raw cocoa is, moreover, not only counteracted, but made to serve one of the most essential functions of sound diet. Messrs. Epps's works are now, perhaps, the largest in the country, the cocoa produced there amounting to many million pounds a year."

"Land and Water" says:—
"Through the kindness of Messrs. Epps, I recently had an opportunity of seeing the many complicated and varied processes the cacao bean passes through ere it is sold for public use, and being interested and highly pleased with what I saw during the visit to the manufactory, I hand a brief account of the cacao and the way it is manufactured by Messrs. Epps to fit it for a wholesome and nutritious beverage, might be likewise of interest to the readers of 'Land and Water.'"

THE "Mining World" says:—
"The preparation of pure and nutritious articles of diet is, in point of philanthropy, noble work. The wear and tear upon brain and muscle in this age is growing more and more intense, so that without some compensating influence the end must be hopeless collapse in individuals and national decay collectively. Fresh air and more wholesome and more nutritious diet must be had at any price. Food and drink need great improvement. A few chemists have done great public service in this respect. Mr. James Epps, in the preparation of cocoa in its various forms, has done more, perhaps, than any other person to supply the tables of even the poorest with a most agreeable and wholesome article of diet. The application of modern science at his extensive works has brought cocoa, once the dear-bought luxury of the higher classes, within the reach of all; and there may now be found on the labourer's table cocoa in better and more nutritious form than the Royal breakfast-tables of early Kings could boast. Cocoa as prepared by Mr. Epps is palatable, refreshing, strengthening, and most assuredly preferable to the trashy tea and coffee in general use."

"A YOUNG DRUIDESS." BY CARL HAAG.

IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

The head of the French Government Commission for the management of the Exhibition is M. Krantz, whose portrait here greets the eyes of our readers. He is an eminent civil engineer, who was trained in the Ecole Polytechnique, and the Ecole des Ponts et Chaussées, about forty years ago. As chief engineer of the Grand Central Railway of France, he gained a high scientific and professional reputation. He was employed to design and superintend the construction of the Exhibition Palace of 1867, in accordance with a plan for the classification and division of its contents, which was generally approved. Since 1868 M. Krantz has been much occupied with projected improvements of the navigation of the Seine, by means of locks, which should enable large vessels to reach Paris from the Sea. During the German siege of Paris, in the winter of 1870 and the first months of 1871, he rendered good service to his country by directing part of the works of fortification round the capital, especially at St. Denis; and, further, by contriving and applying a method of converting the useless railway locomotive-engines into steam-engines for the working of corn-mills, and for other useful purposes. He was elected in that year, by more than 100,000 voters, to sit in the National Assembly. He has now a seat in the Senate, conferred upon him by the votes of his former colleagues in the popular branch of the Legislature.

We give Illustrations this week of the Russian and Dutch buildings in the Central Avenue of the Exhibition Palace in the Champ de Mars, called the Street or Avenue of Nations from the various examples of foreign domestic architecture which are erected along one side. The Russian edifice, which has a very picturesque and interesting appearance, is an imitation, in miniature, of the rural palace of Kolomna, near Moscow, the actual birthplace of Peter the Great. This model of the palace is 130 ft. long, and is constructed of pinewood; the lower part of the front wall, indeed, consists simply of the trunks of pine-trees, stripped of their bark, laid one above another, and kept in their place by morticing with flanges and grooves, and by wooden pegs, without a single nail. The central portion of the building, which contains the wide open porch, giving entrance to the Russian section of the Exhibition, presents a short transverse gallery above the porch, and a second storey or attic storey, above which rises the steep and lofty roof, in the French style of Louis XIII.'s reign; the main roof is relieved by those of the two side towers, which are pointed and surmounted by fantastic pinnacles of carved and painted wood. The heraldic insignia of Russia are displayed, with accompanying flags, and the name of Russia below on the escutcheon in the centre of the summit of this façade. All the windows are small and square, and are set in frames or borders of wood, painted of several bright colours. In the original building at Moscow, at least when it was constructed, above two centuries ago, there would be no glass panes to the windows, but talc or semi-transparent mica. The staircase of this house is outside, in the recess between the central block and that shown to the right hand of our Engraving, where the private chapel and the guest-rooms of the palace were situated; this staircase is roofed over, and is furnished with massive balustrades decorated with much carving. The nearer wing of the whole range of building shown to the left hand represents that portion which was destined, in the palace of Kolomna, to accommodate the Imperial family. Its design, as will be seen, differs somewhat from the other wing of the edifice. The windows of the upper storey, belonging to the apartments inhabited by the august owners, are ornamented with triangular pediments, richly carved and painted, which project over the windows. Such was the "isba" or old-fashioned Russian mansion of Prince Alexis Michaelovitch and his wife Princess Natalia, the parents of the Czar Peter, who was born there in 1672, and whose famous visit to England, with his shipbuilding apprenticeship in Deptford Dockyard, is so familiar to most of us, among the historical anecdotes we learnt in our youth.

M. KRANTZ, COMMISSIONER-GENERAL, PARIS EXHIBITION.

The front building of the Dutch section of the Exhibition, standing likewise in the "Avenue of Nations," is a miniature copy of the Townhall at the Hague, an edifice of the Renaissance period and style, dating 1581. The building is of brick, rclieved by dressings and bands of white stone. The doorway is adorned with two Grecian pillars, supporting a pediment: above each of the windows is a flat arch composed of brick and stone placed alternately. The principal storey is separated from the attic storey by a deep cornice, with ornamentation of the Tuscan style, surmounted with balustrades to the right and left, but sustaining in the middle a central upper front, with four allegorical statues of white marble, and with a large window between them. Over all is a shield of sculptured stone, displaying the arms of Holland. The belfry tower, with its open cupola rising from the summit platform, gives an air of dignity to the whole building.

The pavilions belonging to those Moslem nations of North Africa, who must, from geographical vicinity and affinity of race to the people of Algiers, be regarded with much interest by the French public, attract considerable attention in the Trocadéro Park. We give Illustrations of the tent erected for the Emperor of Morocco, whose death was erroneously reported in all the newspapers two or three weeks ago, but who may possibly survive the Exhibition, if he does not recover health in time for a journey this season to Paris. The lion's hide exposed for sale at the price of 800f., must be the property of some one of his Moorish Majesty's subjects. The interior of the Tunisian pavilion seems an inviting retreat, with the cushioned divan, loose slippers, tobacco-pipes, coffee-cups, and fans, provided for the hour of repose and refreshment, besides which a guitar or banjo is seen awaiting the player's hand.

Among the specimens of art-manufacture in the British section of this Exhibition, one deserving of notice is the piece of woven tapestry, in the patent Axminster carpet fabric, manufactured by Messrs. Thomas Tapling and Co., of Gresham-street, London. The design, of which we give an Illustration, is copied from the picture, "Christ Blessing Little Children," painted by the late Mr. E. T. Parris, and would be suitable for the altar-piece of a church, or the board-room of an Orphan School, or any similar institution. The whole is woven by machinery in one piece, at a tenth the cost of Gobelins tapestry, and it is not improbable that this material for decorating the walls of rooms may again come into fashion.

THE PHONOGRAPH AND MICROPHONE.

This is an age of scientific marvels, if not of miracles. To railways and steam-boats, making near neighbours of distant provinces and practically bridging oceans, succeeded the electric telegraph, which turned into a verity Puck's boast of girdling the earth in forty minutes: and now we have that marvellous triad—the telephone, phonograph, and microphone. It is with the two last named that we have at present to deal, the telephone having been illustrated and explained in our number for Dec. 15 last; and the phonograph first claims attention.

THE PHONOGRAPH.

The effect is startling enough when, from some hillside hollow or ivied ruin, echo gives back, unexpectedly, an answering cry. But what if that echo were, by a touch of magic, locked up in its stony recess, to be let loose at the enchanter's will—so that the echoes of shouts and cries, laughter, and snatches of song, tongue-tied at their birth, and lying "cribbed, cabined, and confined" for ages, like embalmed mummies, should, at a touch, break their enforced silence and leap into vocal life, with precisely the same cadences and tones in which they were originally uttered; and this not once only, but a hundred times! Yet nothing less—nay, infinitely more—than this has been achieved. To verify the assertion one has only to step from the pavement of Regent-street into the London Stereoscopic Company's premises, and there, among amusing scientific novelties of all kinds, may be seen and heard in full work this recent invention, the phonograph, which first imprints the message, and then speaks or sings it off any number of times at the operator's will. Witnessing its performances, one is apt to take the stories of genii bottled up for long years to be freed at last, of frozen tunes, released by warmth, flooding the air with melody, and other romances of a like kind, as veritable prophecies of the good time coming, couched in this sort of rollicking nonsense to hide their true meaning from the uninitiated, and possibly to save the narrators' heads. Be that as it may, this is certain—persons have only to speak or sing into the mouthpiece of the simple-looking instrument figured on page 109 and they may have the pleasure of hearing their own sweet voices reproduced many times. It is true the voice is somewhat muffled and diminished when returned from the phonograph; but its intonations, inflections, pauses, and quality are rendered with fidelity. The muffled sound in which the message is repeated arises no doubt in part, if not wholly, from the fact of its being spoken into the mouthpiece, for which there does not appear to be any absolute necessity; and, as regards the return-voice being somewhat weaker than that in which the message was first given, it should be borne in mind that this is but the baby-talk of an invention still in its infancy. When more matured, its voice will, of course, become stronger, and it may, perchance, be aided by the microphone, so that whispers breathed into its ear shall be thundered back. At all events, the phonograph talks, sings, shouts, laughs, whistles, and coughs quite naturally. In the words of Mr. Edison, its inventor—"This tongueless, toothless instrument, without larynx or pharynx, mimics your tones, speaks with your voice, utters your words; and, centuries after you have crumbled into dust, may repeat every idle thought, every fond fancy, every vain word that you choose to whisper against the thin iron diaphragm."

The phonograph is as simple in construction as it appears in our Engraving, consisting of a cylinder mounted on a horizontal axle, and capable of rotation by a handle, or preferably, as uniformity of speed is essential, by clockwork. The cylinder is not only capable of rotation, but has also a gentle lateral movement, which is effected by a screw cut on part of the shaft, and working in a nut. A screw-thread is likewise cut on the cylinder, and the cylinder itself is coated with tinfoil. This tinfoil is gently pressed by a metal pin, or style, which is attached to a thin disc of iron furnished with a funnel-shaped mouthpiece of vulcanite. When words are spoken into the mouthpiece, the vibrations of the air are communicated to the metal diaphragm, and the pin which it carries is thus thrown into agitation. As the cylinder slowly travels along, it is constantly pressed by this point; and if the pressure continued uniform, a furrow, everywhere of equal depth, would be traced around the barrel. But when the voice agitates the iron plate, the pin is caused to press unequally upon the cylinder, and the metal surface is therefore indented to an unequal extent in different parts of the line. While the tinfoil readily yields to pressure, and thus offers but little opposition to indentation, its lack of elasticity prevents it from springing back, and hence the impressions once made are permanently retained. To reproduce the sounds which have thus been impressed upon the metal, the cylinder has to be brought back to its original position. It is then rotated beneath the pin, which is jerked up and down as the elevations and depressions pass beneath it. These movements of the pin are faithfully followed by the metal diaphragm, which throws the air into vibration, and thus produces sounds exactly corresponding with those by which the indentations were produced. As the pitch of the sound is altered by varying the velocity of rotation—a quicker motion raising and a slower motion lowering it—an exact reproduction of the voice can only be effected by causing the cylinder to revolve at precisely the same rate as that which it possessed when it originally received the sounds that it is seeking to emit. This precision of movement is effected by means of clockwork.

The phonograph is the invention of Mr. Thomas Elvey Edison, a well-known electrician, of Menlo Park, New Jersey, United States. Of its origin the following account has been given. As Mr. Edison was experimenting with telephones, a vibrating diaphragm pricked his finger, and the idea of reproducing sound occurred to him one Wednesday afternoon. He set to work, continuing at the task all that evening and night, all Thursday and Thursday night, all Friday and Friday night, and on Saturday morning he succeeded in reproducing sounds clearly. He then went to bed, and slept from Saturday morning till the following Monday morning. Mr. Edison is the inventor also of the automatic telegraph, which is capable of transmitting a thousand words a minute, and of the quadruplex system of telegraphy.

Some of the numerous possible applications of the phonograph may readily be guessed. By its means letters may be dispensed with. Friends and lovers, sundered by half the globe, may communicate with each other by word of mouth. To effect this, all that is necessary is to speak into a phonograph, then to remove the metallic record from the cylinder, pack it in a box and send it by post to the antipodes; and, being there rotated on a similar instrument, it will deliver its message of friendship or love in the tones of the original speaker. Dr. William F. Channing, giving, in a popular scientific periodical, some anticipations concerning the phonograph, writes as follows:—"We shall have galleries where phonotype sheets will be preserved as photographs and books now are. The utterances of great speakers and singers will there be kept for a thousand years. In these galleries, spoken languages will be preserved from century to century with all the peculiarities of pronunciation, dialect, and brogue. As we go now to see the stereopticon, we shall go to public halls to hear these treasures of speech and song brought out and reproduced as loud as, or louder than, when first spoken or sung by the truly great ones of earth. The ease with which the phonotype cylinders may be stereotyped or electrotyped and multiplied has been spoken of. Certainly, within a dozen years, some of the great singers will be induced to sing into the ear of the phonograph, and the electrotyped cylinders thus obtained will be put into the hand-organs of the streets, and we shall hear the actual voices of our best singers ground out at every corner! In public exhibitions, also, we shall have reproductions of the sounds of nature, and of noises familiar and unfamiliar. Nothing will be easier than to catch the sounds of the waves on the beach, the roar of Niagara, the discords of the streets, the noises of animals, the puffing and rush of the railroad train, the rolling of thunder, or even the tumult of a battle." Speaking of the uses to which the instrument may be put, Mr. Edison says:—"You can have a phonograph in your parlour with an album of selected phonographic matter lying beside it. You can take a sheet from the album, place it on the phonograph, start the clockwork, and have a symphony performed; then, by changing the sheet, you can listen to a chapter or two from a favourite novel: this may be followed by a song, a duet, or a quartet; and at the close the young people may indulge in a waltz, all joining in it, for no one need be asked to play the dance-music."

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PHONOGRAPH.

Fig. 1. The form adopted by Mr. Edison. a. Cylinder, whose circumference, b, is scored by a spiral thread. Round this part is placed, when the machine is in use, a sheet of tinfoil, made to adhere by gumming the corners. c, axis; d, screw-thread, on a portion of the axis, agreeing exactly in the number of its threads to the inch with those on the cylinder; e, handle, to make the cylinder revolve; f, heavy fly-wheel, to secure as far as possible uniformity of motion; g, mouth-piece, having in front a hollow funnel-shaped cavity, with a hole in the centre, and behind a thin iron plate about 100th of an inch thick. In the centre, at the back of this iron plate, is a piece of indiarubber tubing, connected with the plate at its back. It is fixed to one end of a slip of steel spring, which is joined at its outer end to the circumference of the plate. Half-way from the margin, and joined also to the steel in the same way, is another piece of tubing. The object of both these pieces of indiarubber is to regulate the pressure of the steel point. This steel point is fixed perpendicularly to and against the central end of the slip, and is therefore vertical to and in the middle of both the steel plate and the parchment or paper diaphragms, these being parallel to each other. The steel point, which is rounded, enters slightly between the threads on the cylinder, and consequently imprints a dint on the tinfoil which covers the cylinder. The distance of the mouth-piece, with the iron plate, diaphragm, and point, from the cylinder, can be regulated by the lever, h, which moves on a pin, i. Greater exactness may also be secured by a screw at the inner base of the upright mouth-piece support (not seen in engraving).

Fig. 2. Instrument designed and constructed by Mr. Stroh. The difference between this and Mr. Edison's is in its having some exceedingly simple controlled clockwork mechanism, actuated by a descending weight, which is attached, upon Huygen's maintaining principle, to an endless chain passing over a pulley, fixed upon the principal axis of the instrument, so that it is possible to wind up the weight while the cylinder is rotating without affecting its speed. The cylinder of fig. 2 is scored along its entire length with spiral threads, of which twenty-one go to the inch. a. The controlling fans or governor, consisting of two circular discs of brass, at the upper ends of the levers, b b. When the machine is about to be started, the weight, d, is drawn up by means of the handle, e, whereby the pressure of a small cork-lined brake or block is taken off the fly-spindle of the governor. The discs then fly out, under the influence of the centrifugal force. c, a spiral spring, which can be moved up and down the levers, b b. By placing the spring on the upper part of the levers, near the fans, they are drawn closer together. This reduces the circle of their path, and gives the mechanism a diminished resistance to rotation, so allowing the cylinder a greater travelling speed when necessary. When the tinfoil on the cylinder has been spoken to sufficiently, and is either filled up or at any intermediate space along its length, the mouth-piece, with its diaphragms and point, is moved back from the cylinder. In this instrument the mouth-piece is mounted on a heavy base, which fits rather tightly into a groove fastened to the main board. This done, the handle, e, is turned in a reverse direction till the cylinder is moved back on its axis to the place it started from; the mouth-piece is advanced toward the cylinder until the point rests, without absolute pressure in the first indentation previously made on the tinfoil. Motion is now given as before. The depressions again pass under the point, and in so doing they cause it and the thin iron plate to make over again the precise vibrations which animated them when they made those impressions under the action of the voice. The consequence is that the iron plate gives out the vibrations which previously fell upon it, be it either of music, of any kind of sound, or speech. The narrow opening of a hollow paper cone is applied to the mouth-piece to augment the sounds as they reverberate from the tinfoil, otherwise they would be fainter than previously, whether they had been played on an instrument, sung, or spoken.

Enlarged back view of diaphragm, its framework, and iron base. a, diaphragm of thin iron. b, rim of vulcanised indiarubber, in which the diaphragm circumference is embedded. c, screw-nut, which secures needle in centre of diaphragm. A similar nut further secures the end of needle on the other side of the thin iron. d, steel spring.

Fig. 4. Back view of mahogany mouth-piece and frame. e, diaphragm of thin indiarubber. f, zinc rim to secure it. g, light seen through the semi-transparent skin; this shows the position of aperture leading to mouth-piece, h.

Fig. 5. A still larger view of the needle portion. c, screw-nut; i, needle, which ends at j; j, k, pieces of ivory, over which is fitted a short length of indiarubber tubing, thus connecting the two. By this arrangement elasticity is secured to the pressure of the point l, which is inserted in k. An ivory disc, m, at the end of the steel spring, d, renders the point quite secure. The dotted lines under the tubing show the manner of fitting over the ivory ends.

THE MICROPHONE.

We are enabled, by permission of Professor Hughes, who has made to the world a noble gift of this invention, to present to our readers Illustrations of some of his original apparatus. The following introductory remarks are borrowed from Engineering:—

"The eminent inventor of the well-known Hughes type-printer has recently made the startling discovery that certain unhomogeneous conducting substances, placed in circuit with a battery, possess the property of converting sonorous vibrations into undulating currents of electricity, by which not only can notes and articulate speech be transmitted to a distant telephone, placed in the circuit, but sounds so minute as to be otherwise inaudible can be magnified into loud noises. Of all the marvels connected with telephonic electricity, we have no hesitation in saying that Professor Hughes's discovery of the sensitiveness of certain compound structures, or unhomogeneous substances, to minute vibrations, is the most marvellous. It opens up a vast field of philosophic inquiry, and places in the hands of the physicist a detector of sounds and of other mechanical vibrations so small as to be altogether unsuspected. It gives to him, in fact, the means of constructing instruments which will be to the ear what lenses and microscopes are to the eye; and, at the same time, as a telephonic transmitter, is an improvement upon Professor Bell's telephone, transmitting louder and clearer articulations. But the most extraordinary part of Professor Hughes's discovery is the extreme simplicity of the apparatus employed—a few French nails, a few sticks of charcoal, a tube or two containing powders, a little sealing-wax, and a few pieces of wood; and any boy can in a few minutes construct a transmitting telephone, surpassing in sensitiveness the beautiful instrument of Professor Bell."

Our Engravings, with the description, will suffice to show the modus operandi of this latest scientific wonder; but some quotations from Professor Hughes's paper lately read before the Physical Society will further explain the principles on which the microphone is constructed. He referred first to his paper, read on May 9 before the Royal Society, "On the Action of Sonorous Waves in Varying the Force of an Electric Current," and then proceeded to point out that the problem which the microphone solves is this—to introduce into an electrical circuit an electrical resistance, which shall vary in exact accord with sonorous vibrations, thus producing an undulatory current of electricity from a constant source, whose wave, length, height, and form shall be an exact representation of sonorous waves. In the microphone he has solved this by the discovery that, when an electric conducting matter is in a divided state, as in the form of powder or filings, and is put under a slight pressure, far less than that which would produce cohesion, and more than would allow it to be separated by sonorous vibrations, the molecules, being in a comparatively free state, although electrically joined, would of themselves so arrange their form, their number in contact, or their pressure by increased size or orbit of revolution, as to increase and decrease the electrical resistance to a remarkable degree. It had long been known that the resistance which a body offers to the passage of an electric current is invariably affected by changes in temperature, and in some cases by changes in light; and from this Professor Hughes drew the hint to investigate whether or not sound vibrations would also have an effect. The mode of this discovery he stated as follows:—"I introduced in the circuit a strained conductor—a stretched wire—listening attentively with the telephone to detect any change that might occur when the wire was spoken to, or set into transverse vibrations by being plucked aside. Gradually, till the wire broke, the strain was varied, but no effect whatever was remarked except at the moment when the wire broke. The effect was but momentary, but invariably at the moment of breaking a peculiar 'rush' or sound was heard." It was soon found that it was not at all necessary to join two wires endwise together to reproduce sound, but that any portion of an electric conductor would do so, even when fastened to a board or to a table, and no matter how complicated the structure upon this board, or the materials used as a conductor, provided one or more portions of the electrical conductor were separated and only brought into contact by a slight but constant pressure. Thus, if the ends of the wire terminate in two common nails laid side by side, and separated from each other by a slight space, were electrically connected by laying a similar nail between them, sound could be reproduced. The effect was improved by building up the nails log-hut fashion, into a square configuration, using ten to twenty nails. A piece of steel watch-chain acted well." Professor Hughes further states:—"Although I tried all forms of pressure and modes of contact, a lever, a spring, pressure in a glass tube sealed up while under the influence of strain, so as to maintain the pressure constant, all gave similar and invariable results, but the results varied with the materials used. All metals, however, could be made to produce identical results, provided the division of the metal was small enough, and that the material used does not oxidise by contact with the air filtering through the mass. Thus platinum and mercury are very excellent and unvarying in their results, whilst lead soon becomes of such high resistance, through oxidisation upon the surface, as to be of little or no use. A mass of bright round shot is peculiarly sensitive to sound whilst clean; but as the shot soon become coated with oxide, this sensitiveness ceases. Carbon, again, from its surface being entirely free from oxidisation, is excellent; but the best results I have been able to obtain at present have been from mercury in a finely-divided state. I took a comparatively porous non-conductor, such as the willow charcoal used by artists for sketching, heating it gradually to a white heat, and then suddenly plunging it in mercury. The vacua in the pores caused by the sudden cooling become filled with innumerable minute globules of mercury, thus, as it were, holding the mercury in a fine state of division. It will be seen that in these experiments the diaphragm has been altogether discarded, with the effect depending upon the changes produced by molecular action, and that the variations in the strengths of the currents flowing are produced simply and solely by the direct effect of the sonorous vibrations.

"I have found that any sound, however feeble, produces vibrations which can be taken up by the matter interposed in the electrical circuit. Sounds absolutely inaudible to the human ear effect the resistance of the conductors described above. In practice, the effect is so sensitive that a slight touch on the board, by the finger-nail, on which the transmitter is placed, or a mere touch with the soft part of a feather, would be distinctly heard at the receiving-station. The movement of the softest camel-hair brush on any part of the board is distinctly audible. If held in the hand, several feet from a piano, the whole chords—the highest as well as the lowest—can be distinctly heard at a distance. If one person sings a song, the distant station, provided with a similar transmitter, can sing and speak at the same time; and the sounds will be received loud enough for the person singing to follow the second speech or song sent from the distant end.

"Acting on these facts, I have also devised an instrument suitable for magnifying weak sounds, which I call a microphone. The best form and materials for this instrument, however, have not yet been fully experimented on. Still, in its present shape, it is capable of detecting very faint sounds made in its presence. If a pin, for instance, be laid upon or taken off a table, a distinct sound is emitted; or if a fly be confined under a table-glass we can hear the fly walking, with a peculiar tramp of its own. The beating of a pulse, the tick of a watch, the tramp of a fly, can thus be heard at least a hundred miles distant from the source of sound."

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE MICROPHONE.

Our Illustrations on another page show some of the apparatus used by Professor Hughes in the discovery of the microphone.

1. He began his investigations by constructing a "rough-and-ready" Bell telephone. It has a round bar magnet, four inches long, a. Round its inner end is the coil, which is contained in a circular hole in the deal board, three inches square, b. Against this is the enlarged end of half a large wooden reel, c; through this runs the magnet fixed by screw, d. The wires, f, from coil come through sides of board, and sealing-wax, g, secures them. Between the board b and board h is the plate of ferrotype iron, which is embedded at its edge between borders of cardboard.

2. His battery is three small tumblers, each containing a coil of copper at the bottom; on this is placed some sulphate of copper; the glass is filled with clay, well moistened with water; on this is floating a bent plate of zinc, a a a. Sealing-wax is used here and in all Professor Hughes's apparatus for the adhesive. The whole is usually contained in an ordinary cigar-box.

3. Shows the experiment with three French nails, a, in circuit, with the battery in the cigar-box, b, and telephone, c (the actual length of wire was much greater than here shown). These nails, when spoken to, produced the grosser vibrations only of the voice, its timbre was wanting. But a little "white bronze" added to the nails at points of contact improved the distinctness and character of articulate speech. This is the first transmitter telephone of Professor Hughes.

4. A glass tube, a, nearly filled with "white bronze" (a mixture of fine zinc and tin), or sometimes with four cylindrical blocks of metallised willow charcoal. The ends of tube are stopped by plugs of metalised carbon, b. The tube, &c. (not the box), were placed in circuit with the battery and a "rough-and-ready" galvanometer; and, on grasping the tube with both hands, then pulling the ends of it in contrary ways, the needle showed a deflection in one direction; but when the two ends of the tube were pushed towards each other the needle deflected in another direction. Afterwards this tube and contents were placed over a child's money-box of thin pine with one end knocked out, as in the Illustration. The wires, e, were then connected, as in fig. 3. This formed a resonating-chamber as well as a transmitter telephone—Bell's being the receiver, or phonoscope. Speech and song delivered at the open end of box were received and pronounced by the phonoscope with surprising volume.

5. Deal board, 12 in. by 18 in., having on it two microphones, a a. Two pieces of ordinary bundle firewood shaped to 2 in. high. The flat sides have holes drilled for receiving pieces of gas carbon, b b; each of these has a little pit for retaining an inch length of gas carbon, pointed at both ends, c c. d. Wires to battery. e. Wires to bell telephone. This form of microphone is more suitable for aerial sounds and speaking at a distance. Professor Hughes has a modification of this arrangement in which the base-board is smaller, and in place of the upright, a, the carbons are fixed to a perpendicular sound-board.

6. Deal board 4 in. long. a. Bar of gas carbon balanced by pivot on thin bent strip of brass. b. Oblong block of metallised charcoal attached to irregular-shaped slip of deal, c, which adheres to base-board. d. Spots of wax for attaching lucifer-box fly-prison. e. Wire to battery. f. Wire to telephone.

7. Improved transmitter telephone. As before, it is a child's money-box, with one end out.

8. Its other end.

9. Microphone from the inside of box (fig. 7), nearly full scale of original. Its base-board is fastened, upside down, to top of box by screw a, fig. 7. The microphone is covered over by two thirds circumference of short length of bamboo, one third of the circle having been cut off and ends added, so that in shape it is like a miniature old-fashioned tin candle-box: a flat lid is formed by the base-board, which is fastened at the notch to bamboo by threads round both. b. Rod of soft iron. Attached to one end of its under surface is a piece of pine charcoal, resting on c. c. Metallised pine charcoal block connected with another of the same material, d, by paper hinge. e. Spring coil to keep down b. g, fig. 7, end of bamboo case. Sealing-wax is the adhesive.

10. Probe for detecting by the ear the existence of bullets or other foreign bodies in the human frame. a. Steel rod. b. Microphone. c. Wooden handle.

A summary account of the German excavations at Olympia says that the number of marble objects found during the last three winters is 904; of bronzes, 3734; of terra-cottas, 904; of inscriptions 429; and of coins, 1270. All the more important ruins have been photographed, and the third volume of the official account is about to appear. An exhibition of all the casts taken will shortly be opened at Berlin.—Dr. Schliemann is at Constantinople, and, according to the Times' correspondent there, intends resuming his excavations in the Troad if he can obtain from the Porte fifty soldiers as a guard against robbers.

FINE ART.

The Royal Academy Exhibition will remain open on Bank Holiday (Aug. 5), and will not close till 10.30 p.m. on that day.

Mr. Raggi has at his studio, Devonshire-street, a fine bust of the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster.

The Holmesdale Fine-Art Club held its annual sketching-day on Saturday last. Penshurst Park was the site selected, where, by the permission of Lord de L'Isle, a large number of well-known artists and amateurs found ample material for their pencils in the varied scenery of that charming spot.

A memorial has been presented to the Council of the Royal Academy by the Sunday Society asking that the exhibition of the Academy may be opened on one or two Sunday afternoons during the present season, and offering to provide an efficient staff of care-takers on such occasions to relieve the regular attendants. In reply the Council state that the constitution and laws of the Royal Academy do not allow of the exhibition being opened on Sundays.

Mr. T. N. MacLean has finished in marble his beautiful female figure of "Ione" seated on a square classic stool gazing on a pictured tablet of a Grecian feast she holds in her hand. The innocence and sweetness of the face, the simple arrangement of the drapery, and the natural pose of the whole figure, all betoken a coming sculptor. The work, with others lately designed, is on view at the artist's studio, 21, Devonshire-street, Portland-place.

We have read Mr. Alfred Dawson's "English Landscape Art in the Year 1878" (Deighton and Dunthorne), a brochure which has reached its third year. Mr. Dawson glances at the various London exhibitions of oil pictures and water-colour drawings with a quiet, critical eye, is not afraid at the same time to speak out, and what he says is invariably to the point, whether his words are addressed to the artist or to the general art-loving public. We have much pleasure in recommending a perusal of his spirited little pamphlet to both.

A bronze statue to the memory of the late Rev. Dr. Chalmers, the eminent leader of the Free Church of Scotland, was unveiled in Edinburgh last Saturday in the presence of a large assemblage. The execution of the statue was intrusted to Sir John Steel, R.S.A., who has produced an excellent work of art and an admirable likeness. The statue, which is twelve feet in height, represents the Reverend Doctor in the dress of a Moderator of the General Assembly, with an open Bible in his hand, as if giving an exposition. The pedestal is of Peterhead granite, and about fifteen feet high. The site is at the intersection of Castle-street and George-street.

A memorial has been presented to the Earl of Beaconsfield by a number of gentlemen professionally interested in the promotion of higher education in London and its vicinity representing their strong conviction of the importance of giving increased prominence to the study of ancient art as a branch of classical training. They say:—"As we believe that a museum of casts from the antique would be of very great service for this purpose, especially if provision were made for the delivery of lectures upon the history of Greek sculpture, to be illustrated from the casts and from the collections in the British Museum, we earnestly hope that your Lordship may see fit to give your assent to some such scheme as that which, we understand, has been submitted to you by Mr. Walter Perry and others for the formation of a museum of this nature."

We have great pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the colossal statue by Miss Hosmer, of Rome, of the famous Pompeian sentinel who, seventeen centuries ago, kept his post at the gate of the city until he was buried with it in the ashes of Vesuvius. The figure is about eight feet high, and represents a Roman soldier in the prime of life, stalwart and muscular, leaning with both hands upon his spear. His figure is erect, but his head droops; and in looking at his face one sees that his eyelids are closed, and that his lineaments are fast assuming the eternal fixity of death. The subject has been frequently painted, and, considering how readily it lends itself to sculpture, we are surprised it has never been modelled before. Besides the wonderful success with which Miss Hosmer has carried out her noble idea of the sentinel, and on account of which we heartily congratulate her, she is to be felicitated on another score—viz., on the happy innovation—to modern practice, at least—of modelling the whole in wax. The figure is first roughly blocked in in plaster of Paris, and then comes a coating of wax from an eighth of an inch to an inch in thickness; and on this coating all the modelling is done, thereby obviating the necessity of afterwards casting in plaster. Miss Hosmer completed the figure in Rome last winter, and it is now on show at the Guardi Gallery, Haymarket.

The first Dorset Industrial Exhibition was opened at Weymouth on Thursday week by the Earl of Eldon, in the presence of a large number of persons from all parts of the county, including the Mayors of Dorchester, Bridport, and Weymouth. Mr. Lundie, the Mayor of Weymouth, presented his Lordship with an address. Lord Eldon, in his reply, spoke of the great advantages of exhibitions similar to that in which they were assembled, and then declared the building duly opened. Mr. G. Eliot, one of the vice-presidents, Mr. Albert Banks, Mr. Herbert Evans, the Vicar of St. James's, Shaftesbury, and other gentlemen, addressed the meeting. The Earl, accompanied by the committee and the hon. secretary, Mr. W. Mordaunt Thiselton, then inspected the most interesting objects in the different buildings, and expressed himself highly delighted with the exhibition. The work from the art needlework school at South Kensington, was greatly admired. His Lordship bought an elegantly-designed screen in crewel-work from this school. On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday the exhibition was visited by 1600 persons. The Rev. H C. G. Moule, M.A., Dorchester, wrote an ode for the opening. The prizes awarded exceed £265. In connection with the exhibition Mr. Edwards, M.P. for Weymouth, offered four special prizes for the best essays on "The Industries of Dorset," and the first prize was won by Mr. W. H. Bradley, a reporter on the Dorset County Chronicle.

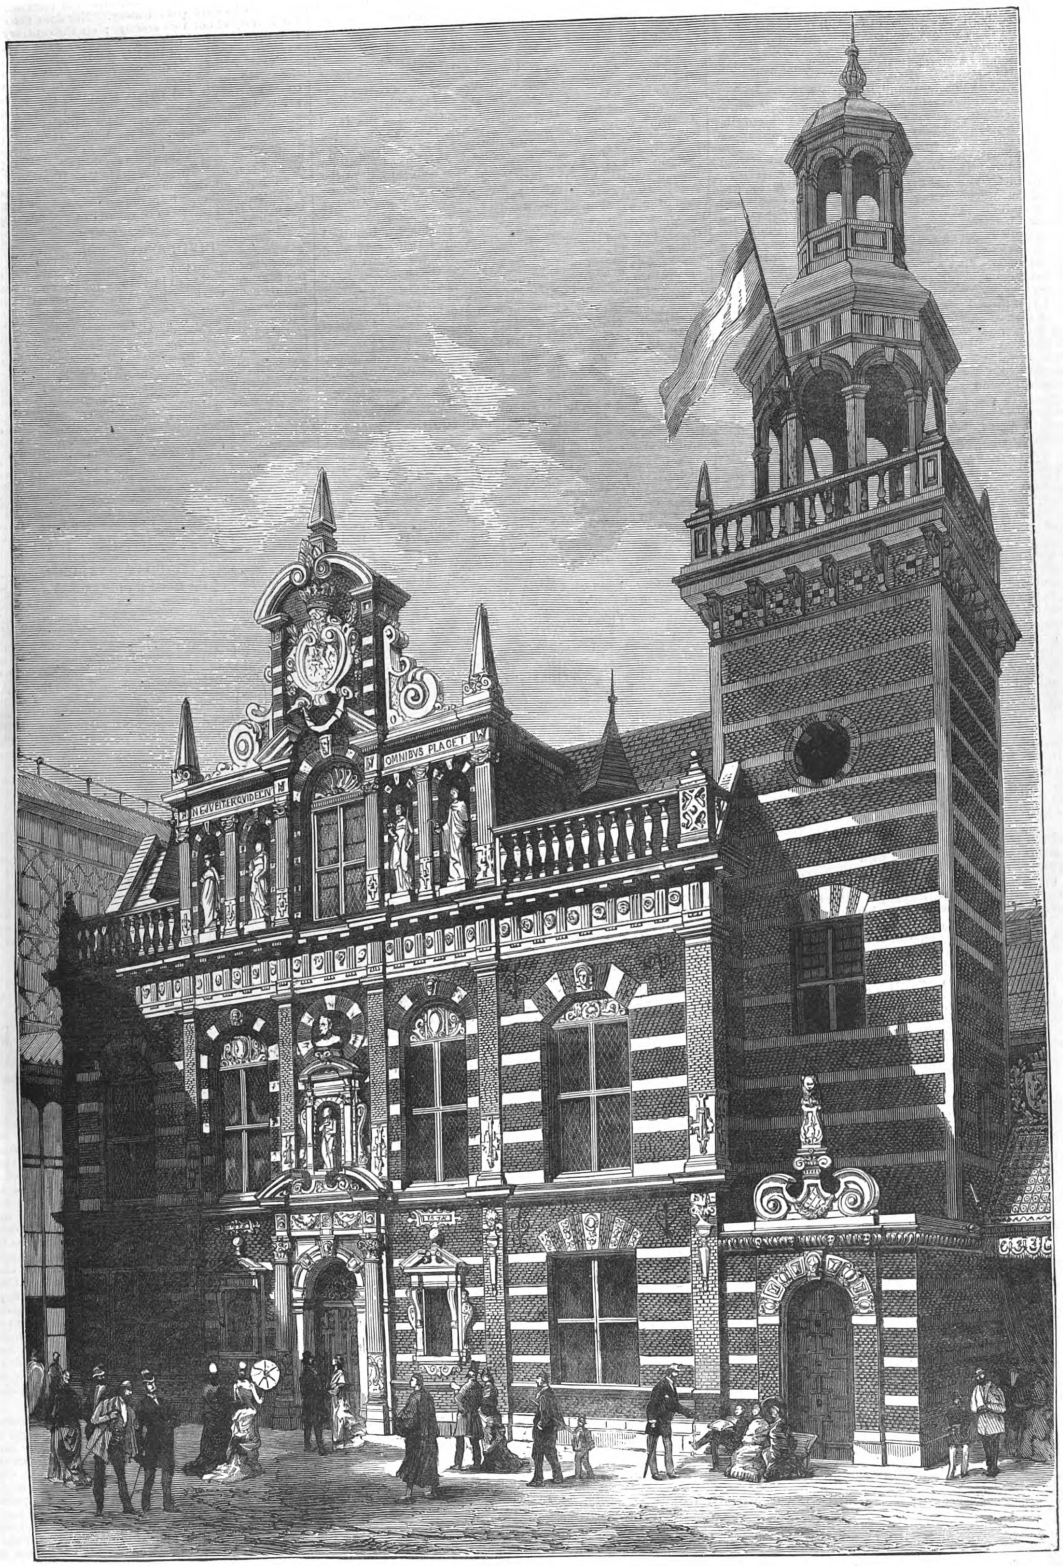
Time alone was wanted to stamp with European recognition the remarkable art-organ, L'Art, Revue Hebdomadaire Illustrée. It is now in the fourth year of its existence, and the thirteenth volume lies before us. Whatever can be tried to make an art-journal acceptable to a cultured mind has been accomplished here, and with a hand no less lavish than wise. The plates and wood-blocks are as varied and abundant as ever; and what is so difficult with us—especially in the finer qualities of work—viz., their printing—is simply a marvel of its kind. There is more art exhibited in some of the initial letters to the chapters than will be found sometimes in a whole volume of ordinary illustrations. Among the more important etched portraits, we would point to those by C. Waltner after Rubens—they are simply superb; and among figure-subjects to the "Apparition" of Geaujean, after the magnificent creation of Gustave Moreau. Of architectural and decorative designs there are many; and the wonders of the Paris Universal Exposition are by no means left unrecorded. The editor, moreover, keeps his readers well abreast of whatever is going on in the art-world, whether in the sale-room or the Salon, and competent writers set forth, from time to time, what has been achieved by the masters who have passed away. Nor does the editor despise the literary aid of this country; on the contrary, the critical acumen of Mr. Frederick Wedmore finds ample room for exercise in treating of the life and labours of John Constable; Professor Sidney Colvin, of Cambridge, makes short excursions into the byways of historic art to bring under notice certain fifteenth and sixteenth century engravers; the ready pen of J. Comyns Carr finds scope and verge enough in setting forth the merits of the old masters as exhibited lately in the Grosvenor Gallery; and the dramatic sympathies of Walter Herries Pollock seek expression in a flowing and critically appreciative article on the "English Stage." Mr. Hermann Vezin, Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft, Mr. Hare, and Mr. Arthur Cecil have all their merits judicially apportioned to them. All these articles are fully illustrated, and are but a sample of the many good things to be found in this sumptuous tome.

CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

The following are the names, given in the order of merit, of the gentlemen selected in 1876, who, after two years' training in this country, have passed the final examination, also the Presidency, or division of Presidency, to which assigned:—

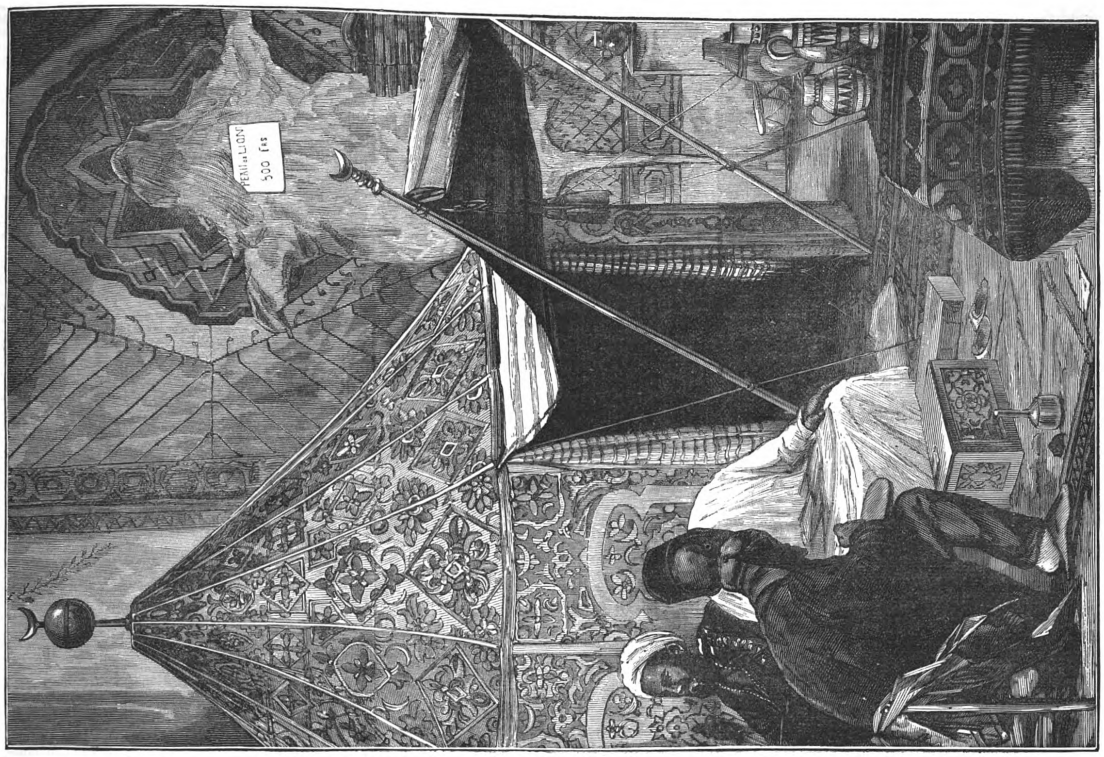
Edward Lawrence, Bombay; Charles Peter Caspersz, Bengal Lower Provinces; Duncan James Macpherson, Bengal Lower Provinces; Edward Norman Baker, Bengal Lower Provinces; Hugh FitzJohn Tyrrol Maguire, Bengal Lower Provinces; William Henry Lockington Impey, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; Arthur Herbert Collins, Bengal Lower Provinces; Lucas White King, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; Arthur Meredith, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; James Clark Seaton, Madras; Edward Woodfield Collin, Bengal Lower Provinces; Alexander Murison Wake Shakespear, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; George Robert Irwin, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; William Wilson Drew, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; James Adair Crawford, Bombay; George Mawdsley Williams, Madras; Herbert Bradley, Madras; Percy Gray, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; Charles Lindsledt Modellier Eales, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; William Nethersole, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; Edward Louis Cappel, North-West Provinces, Punjaub and Oude; William Thomas Hall, Bengal Lower Provinces; Henry Sankey, Bengal Lower Provinces; Henry Alexander Sim, Madras; Charles Herbert Mounsey, Madras; Evelyn Gray, Bombay; Henry Shircliffe Otter, Madras; John Nathaniel Atkinson, Madras; Alexander Porteous, Bengal Lower Provinces; Arthur Dingwall, Bengal Lower Provinces.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.



At a meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution on Thursday, at its house, John-street, Adelphi, rewards and other payments, amounting altogether to £3021, were made on some of the 268 life-boat establishments of the institution. Various rewards were also granted to the crews of shore boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts. The Broadstairs life-boat went out to the Goodwin Sands early on Tuesday morning in reply to signal-guns fired from the Gull lightship, while a strong wind was blowing from the north and a heavy sea was running, and found the schooner Star of the West, of Bridgewater, ashore there. Fortunately, she was enabled to extricate the vessel from her perilous position and take her safely into Ramsgate Harbour, although in performing the service the life-boat herself was severely damaged. The Ramsgate harbour steamer and life-boat also performed good service on the same day by saving the brigantine Donna Maria, of Swansea, and her crew of six men, that vessel having stranded on the same dangerous sand. The receipt of various contributions and legacies was announced at the meeting. The inauguration of the Clacton-on-Sea new life-boat station took place on the 10th ult., in the presence of a large number of spectators, and was very successful in every respect. This boat is named the Albert Edward, it being one of the two boats presented to the institution by the Freemasons as a thank-offering for the safe return of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales from India. Reports were read from the institution's four inspectors of life-boats on their recent visits to some of its life-boat stations.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Cambridge and Isle of Ely Agricultural Society was held last week at Cambridge. The entries were large in all the classes, and some fine animals were exhibited. £800 was given in prizes.—The exhibition of the Lincolnshire Agricultural Society for this year was held at Louth, and extended over three days. The town was decorated along the whole route to the show-ground, which was situated on the outskirts of the town.



The Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland, in their annual report, state that the Church Temporalities Commissioners in 1874 vested in that board fourteen churches, ecclesiastical buildings, and other structures for future preservation and maintenance; and, in order to meet the cost of placing these ruins, as far as possible, in a state of security against further dilapidation, and to supply a fund for their subsequent preservation, these Commissioners transferred to the credit of the board £22,554. During the past year, after careful inquiry, they made choice of 105 additional structures, which, out of a multitude of cases, appeared to be the most deserving of being preserved as monuments of national or historic value and importance, and vested them in the board for future maintenance. They also transferred to the credit of the board £27,446, making in all £50,000 to be applied in repairing and maintaining the 119 churches, ecclesiastical buildings, and other ancient structures selected for preservation. Up to the present, the works have been completed at the Rock of Cashel, Seven Churches Glendalough, Ardmore, Ardfert, Monasterboise, Devenish Island, St. Columb's House (Kells), and Donaghmore. The works are in progress at Movilla, Ardtoke, St. John's Point, Loughin's Island, Maghera, Kilmacduagh, and Howth Abbey.

The bill "to enable her Majesty to provide for the establishment of his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and of Strathearn and her Royal Highness Princess Louise Margaret Alexandra Victoria Agnes of Prussia, and to settle an annuity on her Royal Highness," was printed on Monday. Clause 1 empowers her Majesty to grant by letters patent an additional annuity of £10,000 for life to the Duke, or to such persons as her Majesty may think fit to name, on trust for his Royal Highness, and subject to such conditions as her Majesty may direct; such annuity to commence from the date of the marriage his Royal Highness, to be free from all taxes, assessments, and charges, and to be paid quarterly, on the 5th day of January, the 5th day of April, the 5th day of July, and the 10th day of October. There is a proviso "that in the event of his said Royal Highness succeeding to any sovereignty or principality abroad, it shall be lawful for her Majesty or her successors, with the consent of Parliament, to revoke or reduce the said annuity by warrant under the sign manual." Clause 3 provides for an annuity of £6000 to Princess Louise in the event of her surviving her husband. Clause 4 provides that "the annuities granted in pursuance of the Act shall, if her Majesty think fit so to direct, be personal and inalienable provisions, and the same shall be charged on and payable out of the Consolidated Fund."

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The fortnight's extra performances at reduced prices closed on Saturday.

On the previous Thursday "Le Nozze di Figaro" was given, cast as recently noticed, with the exception of the character of the Countess, which was assigned, for the first time here, to Madame Pappenheim, who sang with much effect, especially in the aria "Dove sono." On Friday "Carmen" was repeated, for the benefit of Mdlle. Minnie Hauk, whose performance in the title-character has been one of the features of the season. The closing night was appropriated to the benefit of Madame Gerster, who appeared as the heroine in "Lucia di Lammermoor," with the same success as on previous occasions—the opera having been followed by the second act of "Dinorah," with Madame Gerster in the title-character, and Mdlle. Tremelli as the Goatherd, as in former representations. With the National Anthem, and tributes of applause to the lessee, Mr. Mapleson, and the conductor, Sir M. Costa, the house finally closed—to reopen for operatic performances in October.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES AT THE ACADEMIES OF MUSIC.

The annual awards took place on Saturday at the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street, Hanover-square, and the London Academy of Music, Langham-place, the former in the afternoon, the latter in the evening of the day named. The prizes were distributed in each case by Mdlle. Albani. At the Royal Academy of Music the awards were as follow:—The Lucas silver medal to Mr. R. H. Löhr; the Parepa-Rosa gold medal, Miss E. Orridge; the Sterndale Bennett prize (ten guineas), Miss Jessie Percivall; second prize (five guineas), Miss D. Shapley; Llewellyn Thomas gold medal, Miss Leonora Braham; the Christine Nilsson prizes (of twenty and ten guineas), Misses A. Butterworth and E. Orridge; the Heathcote Long Prize (a purse of ten guineas), Mr. P. Saunders; and the Kelsall Prize (the fourth of five violins bequeathed by Mr. C. Kelsall in 1857) to Mr. F. Arnold. In the Ladies' department six silver medals, thirteen bronze medals, eight certificates, and five high commendations, were also awarded. The scholarships were thus adjudged:—The Parepa-Rosa to Miss M'Kenzie, the Sir John Goss to Mr. E. Ford, the Lady Goldsmid to Miss B. Davenport, the Professors' to Mr. W. Sutton and Mr. C. T. E. Catchpole, the Balfe to Mr. P. Stranders, the Novello to Mr. W. Sewell, and the Thalberg to Miss A. Heathcote. Professor G. A. Macfarren made a brief address, in which he commented on the present prosperity of the Royal Academy of Music, the pupils now numbering about six times as many as there were ten years ago. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mdlle. Albani. A short selection of vocal and instrumental music performed by the students, and conducted by Mr. W. Macfarren, preceded the distribution.

The proceedings at the London Academy of Music included a miscellaneous concert and a performance of an English version of Suppé's pretty operetta "Die Schöne Galathe," in both of which several students of the institution displayed great efficiency. The characters in the operetta were well sustained by Miss Elène Webster (Galatea), Miss Rosa Leo (Ganymede), Mr. Randall (Midas), and Mr. F. Thomas (Pygmalion). Signor Gustav Garcia conducted, Miss Chaplin and M. Marlois presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. C. Trew at the harmonium. Between the concert and the operetta the prizes were distributed, free scholarships having been awarded to Misses Waud and Greenop (pianistes), Master Pearsall (violinist), Misses Carreros and Turner, and Mr. E. Frith (vocalists). Gold medals were given—for harmony, to Miss Armstrong and Miss Wilden; for pianoforte, to Misses Chaplin, Berry-Yelp, Hathrill, E. Leggatt, and Douglas; for violin, to Miss Perkins; and for singing, to Misses E. Webster and Isaacs. Silver medals were awarded—for the pianoforte, to Misses Greenop, Anstie, F. Adams, G. Sinclair, Mrs. Guest, Misses E. K. Russell, M. Pavy, Goldsworthy, D. Harris, Mrs. Marsden, Miss E. Turner; for singing, to Misses Amy Dicksee, C. Fuller, Fusselle, Spyer, Rosa Leo, Marchant, Pavy, M. Turner, Miss K. Reece, Mrs. Guest, Misses Badrick, E. Thomas, E. Norton, F. Clarke, M. Letts, A. Martini; and for harmony to Mr. E. Bromell; violoncello, Mr. H. C. Gough; and violin, Mr. C. Cortie. In addition to which, Mr. G. F. Gear was presented with the medal awarded by the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts. Dr. Wylde, Principal of the London Academy, made an appropriate address; and the proceedings were altogether of a very satisfactory nature.

This (Saturday) evening Covent Garden Theatre will be reopened for the usual autumn series of promenade concerts, again under the direction of Messrs. Gatti, and with Dr. Arthur Sullivan as conductor. Of the general arrangements we have already spoken.

THEATRES.

Now that the dramatic season has ended, we might have been tempted to give a résumé of its progress and results, had there been as satisfactory as might have been expected. A glance at the survivals of the products that remain as symbols of the most successful of the pieces that have been produced may be at least suggestive. The melodrama of "Proof," which in its career has met with difficulties not, we believe, yet entirely overcome, still continues at the Adelphi; the Lyceum has presented during the week Mr. Henry Irving as Mathias in "The Bells," and Jingle in "Pickwick." To-night he appears for the last time of the regular season in the same part of, as he is termed in advertisements, "Financier, Swindler, and Penitent," and, in addition, in the first act of Shakspeare's "King Richard III." and Hood's "Dream of Eugene Aram." Miss Bateman will on Monday reappear as Mary Warner, a part which she has created, and in which she is always welcome. The Princess's has fallen back on melodrama, and has found an old Grecian piece, "Queen's Evidence," acceptable to the audience. At the Olympic "Nancy Sikes," as represented by Miss Rose Eytinge, has during the week continued to excite discussion as to the fitness of such subjects for stage purposes, but will cease to do so after Saturday, Mr. Neville having entered into an engagement with Mdlle. Beatrice, who will appear on Monday in "The Woman of the People." Mr. Gilbert's comedy of "Engaged" still gives Mr. Honey an opportunity of appearing at the Strand as Cheviot Hill, and, with the drama of "Our Bitterest Foe," proves sufficiently attractive. The new play of "Diplomacy" maintains its place at the Prince of Wales's. "Our Boys," with "A Whirligig" and "A Fearful Fog," distinguish the Vaudeville by a prolonged success without example. At the Opera Comique the audience are entertained with nautical comic opera and fanciful operetta, the former provided by Messrs. W. S. Gilbert and the latter by Messrs. J. Albery and Alfred Cellier—namely, "H.M.S. Pinafore" and "The Spectre Knight." The Court is worthily occupied by Mr. W. G. Wills's "Olivia," and the Folly with "Les Cloches de Corneville"—the latter theatre announcing, however, its last twelve nights. The Alhambra proceeds with the comic opera of "Fatinitza," and the grand ballet of "The Golden Wreath," by Mr. J. Albery. The Criterion rests satisfied with "The Pink Dominoes," which has now been repeated more than 430 nights. What is called the popular taste may be fairly estimated from this catalogue of the survivals of the season.

Earlier in the season two so-called poetical dramas were presented, under, as it turned out, far from favourable circumstances—that at the Princess's suffering from the indisposition of an eminent actress, and that at the Lyceum being an incomplete and objectionable substitute for an original composition, not calculated to advance the cause which it seemed intended to support. Not by such half-hearted efforts can the once palmy state of the English stage be restored. To mend what is amiss, we find a Dramatic Reform Association has been started, and a journal projected, the seventh number of which lies before us. A monthly circular is one of the proposed means of accomplishing the object intended, and we find among its promoters the names of Bishops, professors, clergymen, eminent actors, authors, and persons of distinction on and off the stage, including Mr. Phelps, the Duke of Meiningen, the Rev. the Earl of Mulgrave, and the Rev. H. R. Haweis. Among the papers contributed is one by the Rev. C. H. Halford Hawkins, M.A., on "The Symptoms and Causes of the Decline of the Higher Drama in England." This gentleman dates the beginning of the decline of the drama many years back in the days of our grandfathers, while, as he states, there were yet critics, and a pit filled with active, literary, acute young fellows, who "were not afraid of showing what they thought, by applause or the reverse, either worth something, as the players and the managers knew full well." This state of things passed away with the great actors who supported it, and a system of mere commercial management followed. We have now good actors, but they are scattered, the writer tells us, in twenty places of amusement, so that we seldom now get a good company. He adds that "no one, who has not seen a great play, greatly acted throughout, can tell what the pleasure of a play may be." There is truth in this statement, but also considerable misapprehension. The fault lies not in the number of theatres, but in what the writer next proceeds to state—the merely mechanical mode of management adopted by merely commercial conductors. "A burlesque succeeds somewhere; all the houses follow suit with burlesques. A French play is eminently successful in Oxford-street; the management in the Strand immediately purchase a copyright from M. Sardou." It is also, the writer remarks, "the firm conviction of managers that the days of classic sock and buskin are departed; with existing companies the experiment of a revival of pure tragedy or high comedy is impossible. Without these, however, you will never attract the highest genius to the Boards, nor enlist the strongest pens in their service, nor woo the imagination and the appreciation from their comfortable fireside to the heated atmosphere before the footlights."

In another part of the journal some practical illustrations are given of the present state of things. "Some months ago," a writer in Light remarks, "a very clever and energetic entrépeneur, who adds to his other accomplishments that of an incisive literary style, but who labours under the disadvantage of a cynical literary training, wrote to the editor of a great review:—'As a licensed dealer in legs, short skirts, French adaptations, Shakspeare, taste, and the musical glasses, I produce anything and everything at the Gaiety Theatre that is likely to pay. When I find that it has no paying quality, I strangle it with as little mercy as Providence shows to the poor beetle.' The deductions made from this admission are:—"It will, perhaps, be conceded that Mr. Hollingshead has as much intelligence as any manager in London. It will, perhaps, also be conceded, on the other hand, that the Gaiety programme is the one in London less attractive to the intelligent. The obvious inference is that entertainments of a higher class than those at the Gaiety are not remunerative, and that Mr. Hollingshead is a wise man in his generation not to attempt them."

The journalists' contention, on the contrary, is that managers are below the public taste. Even the management of the Lyceum is quoted as an instance, for even there a frequent recurrence to vulgar melodramas, and a too palpable endeavour to lower the calibre of the company to the advantage of the leading performer, vitiates the experiment. Managers ought to endeavour to lead, not to follow, the public taste. If a season on inferior products, and finding them after all not profitable, they cannot expect that their audiences will turn round at once to Shakspeare and the poetic drama. In other quarters we find that "there is a growing taste for good plays, strong actors, and powerful effects." Nevertheless, we are afraid that managers are not alone to blame. The fault, after all, lies somehow or somewhere in the want of intellectual cultivation on the part of the public. It must be left for the full education of the masses to secure the final victory.

The intention of the Dramatic Reform Association is, doubtless, good, and their statements in spirit, if not in letter, generally correct; but we suspect that the circulation of their journal will avail but little to mend matters. If they have the means, let them erect and subsidise a theatre, devoted to the highest class compositions exclusively, acted by a select company, and honestly conducted on principle. Let the committee of management be open to receive from authors in general their best and spontaneous work, the result of the labour of months, and subject to every kind of revision before it is placed on the boards; let it be felt that such work will be carefully read and thoroughly appreciated and in no very long time the beneficial consequences of such management will appear. But time, long or short, will be required for the gradual cultivation of public taste; and that means that an adequate capital will be requisite. At the time of writing we hear that a nobleman has recently taken a theatre hitherto unsuccessful for twenty-one years. This looks like business. But he will do little if he intrusts it to a mere actors' management, sure to conduct the speculation on sordid principles. Nor will he succeed better himself if he has the prejudiced notions of ordinary theatrical cliques. One instance is given in the pages before us of a certain capitalist and manager who "roundly vowed some years ago never to produce a play which was either divided into five acts, or founded on an historical subject, or written in blank verse. The public won't have it, this worthy vowed." Probably this is a fact. And what is the result? The theatre in question is yet in the market, not having been able to create for itself a character, because of the absurd prejudices of the owner of the property. Produce the best pieces you can obtain, and act them in the best manner you can secure; the public will in due course respond and recompense the enterprising capitalist.

Miss Glyn's last reading from Shakspeare, at her own residence, was given on Tuesday. It was from "Measure for Measure," which was throughout admirably delivered. Miss Stringfield delivered on the occasion a poem by Francis Bennoch, entitled "Together," and added to the promise she has already given of achieving success in her intended profession. The course altogether has consisted of seven Shakspearean dramas—namely, "Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "Merchant of Venice," "Anthony and Cleopatra," "King John," and "Measure for Measure." The series has been numerously attended, and the closing séance commanded a large fashionable and intelligent audience. The apartments and passage were crowded.

PARIS AT THE CAFÉ.—NO. V.

Completely to vary the scene from that of our last paper, let us proceed a little northward—still keeping, however, on the "Surrey side"—to the cafés frequented chiefly, or greatly, by artists. Straight down from the railway station lately mentioned, the Gare de l'Ouest, there runs riverward the Rue de Rennes, and in this stands Lang's Châlet—the first of the brasseries, as was the Procope of the cafés; though as yet the Châlet has acquired no literary fame, being, indeed, even now barely middle-aged. This house, and the café-chantant in the Boulevard St. Michel, likewise called the Châlet, the Café Fleurus—just by the Luxembourg Palace—and a queer little brasserie on the south side of the Rue Jacob, of which I cannot recall the name, are among the most favoured haunts of artists and sculptors; the last mentioned, quite a little room, hung round with countless unframed pictures (each, perhaps, with its story of a score long left unpaid) is used a good deal by English art-students, always to be easily picked out among Frenchmen by their light suits, red neckties, and dandified "Oxford" voices.

The Brasserie du Châlet, of which I began to speak, was the rendezvous of the clique of which the good, vain, eccentric artist Courbet, lately dead, was—or, at least, thought himself—the centre; here he talked of his political importance till other people almost believed him—and he thoroughly believed himself. Among the habitués of this "châlet" are still (cum multis aliis) Taluet, the sculptor, and Paul Arène; among those of the other, in the Boulevard—just opposite what was the Closerie des Lilas!—are Français, the big, burly, old landscape-painter, Oliva, the sculptor from the South, and Cordier, another sculptor; at the Brasserie Mayer, in the Rue Vavin, are many artists, chiefly Alsatian—Henner, for example, and Kreisler; and at the Nouvelle Athènes—a café in the Rue Pigalle, far away to the north of Paris—one may often see the slight, light, dreamy face and figure of Fantin, the wonderful painter of portraits and of flowers, who is at least as much appreciated in London as in Paris, and whose portrait, La Lecture, is this season one of the most striking pictures at Burlington House, as it was last year one of the gems of the Salon.

One among these artist-cafés is the nearest approach to a café chantant which it will be needful to describe: this is the Café du Châlet, which, however, has only acquired its present characteristics during the last two years. I remember very well what was its appearance the first time I—quite by accident—strolled in on a summer evening of 1876. It was an odd, half-and-half sort of place; its only attempt at music was a band of the penny steam-boat order—a violin and a harp, I think—which scraped away dismally in a little summer-house. The indoor part—the "châlet," in fact—looked as if it were only intended as a refuge in case it rained. A dingy old waiter set before you things which were not very dear, if they had been good; as it was, they were not very cheap. This state of affairs, however, has passed away, and a pretty little music-hall has been added to the café—decorated in quiet colours and with very good taste: which hall you can either regard from a respectful distance at your little table, or take your seat in—in this latter case, "consuming" in proportion as you are near the stage or far from it: spending two francs, one franc, or even (if I remember) half a one.

Of the regular café chantant—the French music-hall—it is by no means necessary to speak; nor need one do more than mention the great glaring places on the Boulevards, frequented chiefly by foreigners—the Américain, the Anglais, crammed every night with Englishmen, and with women speaking English of all qualities, except the best. Such places are among the things which the intelligent visitor to Paris goes to see possibly once, but once only. No doubt they give a brilliancy to their boulevard, lighted up as they are in the evening, with their rows of little tables three or four deep in front of them; but the genuine café of Frenchmen is much more interesting.

Of this, there is a principal type which I have not yet mentioned—the once famous cafés of the Palais Royal. There is one among these which still is usually full—the Café de la Rotonde, which inherits from the Café de Foy the sole right of placing chairs in the Palais Royal garden; but even the Rotonde is supported almost entirely by foreigners and French country-people, who are naturally much more amusing to Parisians than to us. The renowned Café des Aveugles, which used to be at the north end of the eastern gallery—the Galerie de Valois—has left nothing but its renown; nor is any more to be seen of the Café de Foy. On the evenings when the band plays some Parisians still condescend to sit in the pleasant first-floor rooms of the western gallery; but the tide of fashion has flowed northward and westward to the boulevards, and the Palais Royal is not what it was.

As I have said, many of these last-named cafés are used principally by foreigners; and it is remarkable how in Paris almost every nationality has its "house of call," where it can obtain all its home delicacies, and hear its own language spoken by the attendants and by nearly all the guests. Without going into a detailed description of the cafés devoted specially to Englishmen, Germans, Russians, or Spaniards, let me take as a specimen one odd little house thronged every evening with Greeks, mingled with a few Turks—and, indeed, familiarly called the "café turc," though its owner has christened it the Café d'Apollon.

It is in the Rue Monsieur le Prince, not a dozen doors off that wonderful Boulevard St. Michel—concerning which, and this particular little café, may I quote some doggrel lines sent home from Paris by an English student? The "quaer" he speaks of is, of course, that universally called "Latin"

> Here in this quarter you may meet
> A dozen nations in a street,
> Roumanians, English, Greeks, and Russians,
> Italians, Mexicans by dozens,
> Haytians, Turks—and other vermin—
> And every now and then a German.
> Near here's a café where you may
> (Five sous is all you have to pay)
> Have coffee made the Turkish way—
> Hot water poured on it a minute,
> And then no milk nor sugar in it:
> I did not find it nice to swallow.
> (The café bears for sign Apollo,
> And there the customers all speak
> Not French, nor English, but—pure Gree
> The barmaid doesn't understand 'em,
> Yet smiles—politely, but at random.)

The proprietor of the place is, however, a reek himself and there was last year a Greek girl there, i sad and very pretty face, and exquisitely graceful figure whom the two waitresses spoke of as la patronne. She was new to Paris, and seemed scarcely at home in its bustle and garish merriment.

And the little room—there is only one, the further end of it slightly raised, with a table where guests could dine in company—the little room was really very merry of an evening: filled with keen, dark, soapless faces, and ringing with voices which jabbered strange tongues. On a table in the middle of the lower part of the room were piled all sorts of Eastern dishes and delicacies, all cheap enough, and all, as far as I ventured to taste them, very sweet and not very nice. But the coffee, in spite of the opinion above quoted, is delicious, though some Englishmen might find it a taste to be acquired only after one or two trials: it is strong, pure, and not very sweet.

There was something very picturesque about the narrow, dingy, Oriental place; there is much that is picturesque about most of the representative Parisian cafés. Remembering the pleasant, easy hours spent at so many of them—named or omitted in these brief papers—one cannot but wish that London had some similar places, where spare evenings could be passed merrily, cheaply, and not always unprofitably. There are a good many things to be seen, a good many to be learnt, in watching Paris at its cafés.

OBITUARY.

ADMIRAL SIR H. R. YELVERTON.

Admiral Sir Hastings Reginald Yelverton, G.C.B., died at Bath, on the 24th ult. He was born in 1808, the son of John Joseph Henry, Esq., of Straffan, in the county of Kildare, by the Lady Emily Elizabeth FitzGerald, his wife, daughter of William Robert, second Duke of Leinster, K.P. (grandfather of the present Duke), and assumed the surname of Yelverton in 1849, having married, in 1845, Barbara, Baroness Grey de Ruthyn (in her own right), widow of George Augustus Francis, second Marquis of Hastings. He entered the Royal Navy in 1823, was in command of the Mediterranean squadron from 1863 to 1866, subsequently of the Channel squadron, and from 1870 to 1874 was Commander-in-Chief on the Mediterranean station. From 1874 to 1877 he was Senior Naval Lord of the Admiralty. He received the decoration of K.C.B. in 1869, and that of G.C.B. in 1875, and attained the rank of Admiral the same year. He had one only child, the Hon. Barbara Yelverton, coheir, through her mother, of the Barony of Grey de Ruthyn, married, Sept. 23, 1872, to John, present Lord Churston.

The deaths have also been announced of—

Henry Blochmann, Esq., M.A., Principal of the Madrassah College, on the 13th ult., at Calcutta, aged forty.

Walter Were Prideaux, Esq., on the 18th ult., at Kingsbridge, Devon, aged eighty-five. He was the representative of the ancient family of Prideaux of Luson, a branch of the great Devonshire family of Prideaux.

The Rev. J. Antrobus, who graduated at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1827, and was for twenty-two years one of the Minor Canons of Westminster, on the 26th ult., in the Cloisters, Westminster. He was Priest in Ordinary to the Queen.

The Rev. Charles Vansittart, formerly Rector of Shottesbrooke, Berks, on the 14th ult., at Geneva, aged fifty-eight. He was seventh son of Arthur Vansittart, Esq., of Shottesbrook Park, Berks, by Caroline, his wife, daughter of William, first Lord Auckland.

Colonel John Scriven, J.P. and D.L., of Moulsey, Surrey, formerly of the 51st Foot, on the 19th ult., at Devonport-street, Hyde Park, aged seventy. He was son of the late Mr. Serjeant Scriven, and was Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant Royal South Middlesex Militia.

Edward Chatterton Middleton, Esq., J.P. and D.L., on the 19th ult., at The Grove, Loughborough, aged sixty-eight. He was the third son of William Middleton, Esq., of Loughborough, by Anne, his wife, daughter of John Alleyne, Esq., of Derby, and served as High Sheriff of Derbyshire in 1857.

Colonel George Sackville Cotter, C.B., Royal (late Madras) Artillery, on June 25, in his seventieth year. He was son of the Rev. James Laurence Cotter, LL.D., Vicar of Buttevant, and was descended from Sir James Cotter, first Baronet of Rockforest, in the county of Cork. He received his decoration for services in India in 1857.

Major-General John Sherbrooke Gell, late Commandant Bombay Garrison, on the 16th ult., at Downderry, Cornwall, in his fifty-eighth year. He served as Quartermaster-General of the Bombay army from 1868 to 1871, and subsequently commanded the Bombay district as Brigadier-General from 1872 until April, 1877. He entered the Bombay army as an Ensign in June, 1839, and served under Brigadier Pennycuick in the South Mahratta campaign of 1844-5.

Rear-Admiral Philip Augustus Helpman, on the 23rd ult., at Stoke, Devonshire, in his seventieth year. He entered the Navy in July, 1821, served in several engagements with pirates in the West Indies, and as mate of the Fair Rosamond, on the West Coast, where he obtained his promotion to lieutenant for attacking, in the gig of his ship, a slaver armed with two 18-pounders. As Lieutenant of the Columbine he served in the China war of 1841, including the operations against Canton and the capture of Amoy and Chinghæ, and he also served with the naval brigade in the attacks upon Chusan, Woosung, and Shanghai. In 1858 he was promoted to the reserved list of Captains, and in 1875 he became a retired Rear-Admiral.

Commander Poynter Crane, R.N., on the 20th ult., at Norwich, aged ninety-two. He entered the service in 1798, as midshipman on board the Repulse, in which he saw the capture, in 1799, of three French frigates by a part of the Mediterranean squadron, under Lord Keith, and was wrecked off Ushant in 1800. After a short imprisonment in France he regained his liberty, and took part in the victory gained by Sir James Saumarez over the Franco-Spanish squadron in the Gut of Gibraltar, July 12, 1801. He also accompanied Lord Nelson in his pursuit of the combined fleets to the West Indies during the summer of 1805. In 1813, while in command of a prize, he was driven by stress of weather into Frederikstad, in Norway, where he was detained a prisoner for some months. Commander Crane did not serve afloat after 1818.

Dr. Eason Wilkinson, president of the British Medical Association, at his residence, Greenheys, Manchester, on the 26th ult., in his sixty-fourth year. Dr. Wilkinson was educated at the St. Bees Grammar School, and after spending two or three years on the Continent he went to Edinburgh in 1832, and began the study of medicine. Six years later he visited the chief hospitals of Paris, Berlin, Halle, Dresden, and Vienna, returning to England in 1840. He then began to practise in Manchester, and was very soon afterwards elected physician to the Ardwick and Ancoats Dispensary. In 1844 he was appointed physician to the Royal Infirmary, and in 1876 he was elected President of the British Medical Association for the year 1877-8. Dr. Wilkinson was a member of the Société Française d'Hygiène, and was awarded a medal for distinguished merit by the British Medical Association.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

THE PARIS TOURNAMENT.—A week has now elapsed since the last round in this tourney was concluded, and the event has yet to name the winners of the chief prizes. As announced in another part of our last issue, Messrs. Winawer and Zukertort tied for the first two prizes, Mr. Blackburne secured the third, Messrs Bird and Mackenzie tied for the fourth and fifth, and the sixth fell to Herr Andersson. The committee of the congress directed that the ties should be played off, the winners of the first two games to take the higher prize in each case, and the play was according y resumed on the 27th ult. The result of the match between Messrs. Bird and Mackenzie was that the latter won the required two games consecutively, while that between Messrs. Winawer and Zukertort has, so far, been productive of two draws.

THE COUNTIES CHESS ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of this society was opened on Monday last at King's College, when thirteen competitors, comprising many of the best provincial players, entered for the challenge cup tourney, and six players of the second class entered for the minor prizes. The score in the challenge tournament up to Wednesday last was as follows:—Thorold, 5; Fisher, 2½; Barbier, 2½; Ensor, 2; Coker, 2; Martin, 1; Rankin, 1; and Messrs. Earnshaw, Minchin, Wayte, and Colonel Minchin a half each. Messrs. Jenkin and Beardsell have not yet scored. The entries for the handicap tourney have not yet been completed, but it is understood that these include Messrs. Macdonnell, Thorold, and Wayte.

It is arranged that the British Association will visit the Earl of Rosse at Parsonstown on Tuesday, Aug. 20.

Hagley Hall estate, near the Rugeley Trent Valley Railway station, has been bought by the Marquis of Anglesea for £30,000.

A special appeal is made on behalf of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, which relieved 11,876 persons last year, and which has to call upon its funded capital to meet a deficiency in income.

At a general meeting of the magistrates of Middlesex recently held, Captain Morley was elected chairman of the court, in succession to the Marquis of Salisbury, who resigned the office through the pressure of official duties.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Aug. 22, 1876) with a codicil (dated Nov. 5, 1877) of Mr. Joseph Street, late of Lloyd's, and of No. 42, York-terrace, Regent's Park, who died on the 2nd ult., was proved on the 19th ult. by Joseph Edward Street, the nephew, Josiah Burke Lynch, and Samuel Smith, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £200,000. The testator bequeaths £200 each to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, the Clergy Orphan Corporation, the Sons of the Clergy Corporation, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church, the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, the Society for Promoting the Employment of Additional Curates in Populous Places, and the Bishop of London's Fund; to the Church Defence Association, Parliament-street, £100; to the Rector of St. Marylebone and the Rector of Trinity Church, Marylebone, £50 each, to be distributed in the relief of the poor of their respective parishes or districts—all free of legacy duty. To his sister Mrs. Evans the testator leaves an annuity of £600 for life, and on her death £10,000 each to her three children, Edward Muirhead, William Herbert, and Elizabeth Alice; to his sister Mrs. Duthoit an annuity of £600 for life, and on her death £3000 to each of her five daughters; and there are many other bequests. All his real estate is to be sold, and the proceeds, with the residue of the personalty, is to be invested, and to accumulate during the life of his brother William Fauntleroy Street, or twenty-one years; and on the death of his brother, or the expiration of the said term, which ever shall first happen, the whole of the residue of his property, with the accumulations, is to be held upon trust for his nephew Joseph Edward Street and his niece Caroline Sophia Street, in equal moieties; but until they shall come into possession they are to receive £300 per annum each.

The will (dated Feb. 12, 1878) with a codicil (dated Feb. 19 following) of Mrs. Catherine Dauntesey Foxton, late of Agecroft Hall, Pendlebury, Lancashire, who died on March 31 last, has been proved at the Manchester district registry by Robert Hull, Edward Heath, and Thomas Heath, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testatrix bequeaths £1000 each to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, Barnes Convalescent Institution, Cheadle, Chester, the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, and the Cornbrook Orphanage, Manchester, generally known as Birch's Orphanage; £500 each to St. Mary's Hospital and Dispensary, Quay-street, Manchester, and the Ragged and Certified Industrial School, Ardwick-green, Manchester; £5000 to Owens College, to found two scholarships, one to be called "The Dauntesey Legal Scholarship" and the other "The Dauntesey Medical Scholarship;" £6000 to found a medical dispensary at Pendleburry, and £6000 to found a medical dispensary at Blackpool, all free of legacy duty. There are numerous legacies to relatives, friends, and servants, and the residue of the personalty is to be divided between her next of kin, other than the Rev. Robert Pennyman Hull-Brown, according to the statute for the distribution of intestates' effects. The testatrix settles all her real estate, under which settlement the said Rev. R. P. Hull-Brown gets the first life interest.

The will (dated May 6, 1870) with four codicils (dated Oct. 31, 1873, Nov. 11, 1874, Dec. 28, 1876, and Oct. 13, 1877) of Mr. John Brooke, late of Kensworth House, near Dunstable, Herts, who died on June 11 last, was proved on the 6th ult. by John William Brooke, the son, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths to his grandsons Harry and Frederick William, £5000 each; to his granddaughter Mary, £2500; upon trust for his son, John William, for life, then for his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Jemima Charlotte Brooke, for life, and on the death of the survivor of them for his said granddaughter, £7500; and some other legacies. The residue of his personalty he leaves to his said son. All his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates the testator gives to his said son, Mr. J. W. Brooke, until his grandson John Kendall attains twenty-five, and then to such grandson, subject, however, to the payment of £400 per annum for life to Mrs. Jemima Charlotte Brooke on the death of her husband, and £200 per annum for life to his granddaughter Ada Charlotte on the death of her father.

The will (dated Nov. 24, 1876) of the Rev. George Gore, Rector of Newton Saint Loe, Somersetshire, who died on May 22 last, was proved on the 1st ult. by Francis William George Gore, the son, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. Subject to a few legacies, the testator leaves all his real and personal estate to his said son.

The will (dated Feb. 22, 1878) with two codicils (one bearing even date with the will, and the other Feb. 26 following) of Sir Courtenay Honywood, Bart., late of Evington, Kent, who died on April 17 last at No. 19, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, was proved on the 13th ult. by Robert Alured Deane, acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000.

The will (dated Feb. 14, 1878) of Sir William Snagg, late Chief Justice of British Guiana, who died on April 17 last at Kingston, in the said colony, was proved in London on the 18th ult. by Alexander Forbes Tweedie, the acting executor, the personal estate in England being sworn under £4000. The testator bequeaths £10 each to the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, and the Coolie Mission, Demerary.

The will (dated April 25, 1878) with a codicil (dated June 13, 1878) of Robert Lawrence, Esq., of Amwell Lodge, Sydenham-hill, who died on June 30, were proved on the 23rd ult. by four of the executors and trustees—namely, his widow and his sons Edward Spencer, Samuel, and John (power being reserved of making the like grant to Thomas William Pelham, another of the sons, as the other executor), the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The testator bequeaths to his widow all his furniture, plate, horses, and carriages, together with an immediate legacy of £500. He devises his real and copyhold and personal estate to his trustees upon trust to provide annuities to his sons, the said executors, and Joseph and Cuthbert Dawes, during the life of his widow, and to pay the remaining income of his estate to his widow for life; and after her death, and subject to an annuity to his eldest son, Robert Henry, he bequeaths all his property for the benefit of his remaining sons equally.

The North Wilts Herald says that Major Prower has sold his mansion and grounds at Purton for about £11,000 to Rajah Brooke, it being his intention to reside near London.

By an Order in Council, dated June 29, it is directed that for the future the number of Greenwich Hospital age-pensions in force at any one time shall not exceed 7500. The pension is to be awarded at the ages of fifty-five and sixty-five, as at present, provided it does not, together with any other pension or pensions which a man may have from public funds, cause the combined pensions to exceed 2s. 6d. a day.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer." for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. Ask any Chemist for the "Mexican Hair Renewer," Price 3s. 6d.
Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the World: it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. Price 2s. 6d. per Bottle. The Fragrant Florline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being purely composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London. Retailed everywhere.

EAU DE CHYPRE.—PIESSE and LUBIN. This is an ancient perfume from Cyprus. During the national career of Egypt, Persia, Greece, and Rome, the Island of Cyprus was the resort of the elite, learned, and refined. It was at the time of the Crusades, when Richard I. of England assumed the title of King of Cyprus, that the famed Eau de Chypre was introduced into Europe, the composition of which is yet preserved in the archives of the Laboratory of Piesse and Lubin. Those who are curious in ancient perfumes can be gratified at 2, New Bond-street, London.

JOHN GOSNELL and CO.'S VIOLET and MILLEFLEUR POWDER, for the Toilet and Nursery. Universally admired for its purity and fragrance. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale, 93, Upper Thames-street.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1878.

"Breaking up and going away!" Whose blood is not freshly stirred by the ring of this academical formula attaching to days of yore? The full meaning of it—and it was full of meaning—comes back to most of us as one of the most vivid illustrations to be found in after-life of the "pleasures of memory." Of what does it tell us? Of a period of labour closed, of tasks accomplished, of examinations passed, of honours awarded, of friendly congratulations paid and received, of dreamy but delicious expectations yet to be realised, of rest and recreation unburdened by proximate anxiety to be enjoyed. There is a small gap between the past and the future not altogether in accordance with the feelings inspired by the occasion. There are packings-up to do—some objects formerly prized to be relegated as worthless to the dust-heap, some to be put aside for future use; some scores to be settled, others to be spread over coming terms of sessions, projects suddenly broken off and to be put by for resumption—altogether, an "uneasy quarter of an hour" to be passed. Such is the present state of public affairs in Europe. The Treaty of Berlin has been ratified. The Plenipotentiaries who prepared and signed it have received their respective awards of honour, or of that silence which either presupposes or precludes it. At any rate, each of them can adopt the words of the attendant spirit in Comus, "Now my task is smoothly done, I can fly or I can run."

In academical affairs, however, immediate triumphs seldom led to an adequate realisation of the hopes they inspired. So it is in the political world. The fruits of the Treaty just ratified at Berlin do not exactly correspond with its flower of promise. There is the occupation, for instance, by Austria of the Herzegovina and Bosnia, for which and for the administration of those Provinces she holds the "Mandate of Europe." Unhappily, individual human perversity often sets at nought conclusions which have been arrived at with a view to general good. There can be no doubt that the rule of Austria in these outlying provinces would secure to their inhabitants impartial protection of life, property, and family honour. The indigenous Turks, however, have for some centuries been accustomed to supremacy, and they are but little inclined to give it up in exchange for equal justice to all. They have already contested in some places—perhaps, but we shall hope not, with secret encouragement from high places in Constantinople—the advance of Austro-Hungarian Troops, and serious bloodshed (to say nothing of great political perplexity) has been the result. Of course, the object of Austria will not be frustrated by these partial insurrections. But they indicate a state of feeling among the Turks far from favourable to a speedy establishment or a long continuance of European peace. The relations, moreover, of the Turkish Government to Greece are very far from settled, and the mediation of the Powers, or one of them, will probably be required to force into effect the recommendations of the Congress with regard to that question. Still, there is good reason to hope that the passing period of perplexity may be of but short duration, and that the settlements agreed upon by the Plenipotentiaries at Berlin will in the course of a few months be carried into effect.

So far as this country is concerned, affairs are not without a certain shade of evil omen. Cyprus, for instance, seems not unlikely to turn out—we will not say an expensive acquisition, but one not in all respects worth the expense. We take no note of merely transient embarrassments which a little administrative skill will no doubt efface. But it is tolerably clear that the climate of the island is anything but salubrious; that it is destitute of convenient ports, which can only be formed at great expense, and that its geographical position with regard to Asiatic Turkey is not such as will greatly aid the policy of her Majesty's Government in assuming a Protectorate over that portion of the Turkish Empire. It is not to be hastily taken for granted that the cession of Cyprus to England may not prove to be valuable, but there are some appearances which actual possession has brought out into relief which forewarn the country that what it has acquired—and peacefully acquired—in the Levant may not turn out to be all that her Majesty's Government had anticipated of it. In fact, it is in the eating of the pudding that proof has to be sought, and should be found, of its actual worth. There is this consolation about the arrangement—that, whatever may be its adaptation or non-adaptation to British wants, it can hardly fail to be an almost unqualified blessing to the inhabitants of Cyprus itself.

This is not, perhaps, the most suitable time that could be chosen for discussing the responsibilities imposed upon the country by the Convention of Constantinople. Parliament has accepted what Ministers have engaged to attempt. There is an end of the matter, so far as argument is concerned. England has now to make the best she can of the obligations and their correlative powers which have been stipulated with the Sultan on her behalf. The nation has formally indorsed the acts of the Ministry, and no more can be said about it. Nevertheless this has to be borne in mind, that what is now before the country is less a period of diplomatic glory than of administrative vigilance and, it may be, of military conflict. It would be puerile to enter upon the fulfilment of our international engagements as boys do upon their holidays. The "Term" which has just come to a close (still reverting to our academical illustration) will, after a very brief interval of gratified ambition, be succeeded by another Term of increasingly anxious labour and self-denial. We shall have to enter upon the latter with energy and courage. We have accepted the task, we are bound to perform it, if we can, with fidelity to our trust. We have not gone out of the region of national honour, but we cannot but bear in mind that it is one which can only yield its laurels to earnest, disinterested, and expensive exertion.

And this last thought brings us to another, that we have yet the Bill to pay. Somewhat more than six millions is not, perhaps, an unreasonable sum total for the British Empire to expend in the purchase of European peace. This, we are told by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, constitutes as near as he can calculate the whole of the capital required to defray the cost of the policy adopted by the Government for the settlement of the Eastern Question. But the entire sum is not be paid at once. The liquidation of the debt will be spread over two years, at any rate, if not three, and will be less felt as a burden than if it had been determined to bring the expenditure of the year within the year's resources. Sound financial principles have thus been superseded by temporary convenience. Perhaps wisely; but this has to be seen. There cannot be a doubt that the floating debt we are now incurring will reappear as a demand upon the national purse when it will be as reluctantly discharged as it would have been just now. We must not go away to the enjoyment of our leisure quite forgetful of the fact that we have stored up for ourselves a disagreeable duty for the future. We shall perform it, no doubt, with strictest integrity. We may be called upon to do so when the industrial and mercantile activities of the country are more profitable than they are now; but also, let it be remembered, the demand may be made upon us when we are even less able to bear it. These are considerations, however, upon which we have no disposition to dwell with undue persistence. If it be true, as Parliament by an immense majority seems to have decided, that her Majesty's Government have achieved by their policy a permanent settlement of the Eastern Question, we do not think the cost at which they have done so should be made matter of very serious complaint.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Princess Albert Victor and George of Wales, drove from Osborne to Sandown yesterday week and saw the Eurydice grounded in the bay; her Majesty returned viâ Brading and Arreton Down.

Prince Leopold arrived at Osborne on Saturday last from Windsor Castle. Princes Albert Victor and George and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales left Osborne and joined the Prince and Princess of Wales on board her Majesty's yacht Osborne at Portsmouth. Admiral Fanshawe, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, dined with the Queen.

Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Connor, Vicar of Newport. Lord John Manners and Mr. Connor dined with the Queen.

Lord John Manners had an audience of her Majesty on Monday, and afterwards left Osborne. Prince Leopold went out in the Alberta and steamed round the Eurydice.

Tuesday was the thirty-third anniversary of the birthday of the Duke of Edinburgh. The day was observed with due honours at Portsmouth and Windsor. The Princess of Wales, with her children, visited the Queen at Osborne. The Rev. George and Mrs. Prothero and Captain Thomson, of her Majesty's yacht Victoria and Albert, dined with her Majesty.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice have driven to West Cowes and Newport, and have witnessed the Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta from the Royal yacht.

Professor Louis Engel, who has passed a week at Osborne, has played several times before her Majesty, and has given a series of lessons on the harmonium to Princess Beatrice.

The inspection of the Fleet at Spithead by the Queen on Tuesday next will take place about four p.m. There will be no general issue of tickets, as only a very limited number of vessels can be set apart for the conveyance of official visitors.

Colonel Du Plat has succeeded Colonel the Hon. H. Byng as Equerry in Waiting to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales returned to town yesterday week from Goodwood House. The Duke of Connaught visited their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House on Saturday and remained to luncheon. The Duke of Cambridge also visited them. Later in the day the Prince and Princess left town to join the Royal yacht Osborne at Cowes, on board which they with their family have passed the week. The Prince has taken part in the Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta, sailing in his yacht Hildegarde. His Royal Highness has dined at Cowes Castle with the members of the squadron. On Monday the Royal yacht Osborne steamed into Sandown Bay, having on board the Prince and Princess, Princes Albert Victor and George, and the three Princesses. One of the Osborne's boats was lowered, and the Prince, with Commander Hugo L. Pearson and other officers, were rowed to the Eurydyce. His Royal Highness clambered up the side of the wreck and remained some time in conversation with the officers. In connection with the recent visit of the Prince and Princess to the London Hospital, their Royal Highnesses have forwarded a donation of one hundred guineas to the "Maintenance Fund" now being raised.

Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis of Lorne are passing a short time at Kissingen previous to their departure for Canada.

The Duke of Connaught went to the Court Theatre on Tuesday evening. His Royal Highness has given Mr. Desanges sittings for his portrait at his studio in Stratford-place.

The Duke of Cambridge returned to Gloucester House yesterday week from a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Richmond during the Goodwood race week.

The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz has left St. James's Palace for Homburg.

The Duke and Duchess of Teck went to the Opéra Comique on Tuesday evening.

The Maharajah and Maharanee Dhuleep Singh have left Claridge's Hotel for Elvedon Hall, Thetford.

The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Alexandra Leveson Gower have arrived at Dunrobin Castle.

The Duke and Duchess of Westminster and Earl and Countess Grosvenor have arrived at Eaton Hall.

The Duke and Duchess of Grafton left Grosvenor-place on Saturday last for Euston Hall, Suffolk.

The Duke of Abercorn has left town for Eastbourne.

The Duke of Northumberland has left Grosvenor-place for Albury Park, Surrey.

The Duke of Rutland left Bute House, Campden-hill, on Monday, for Cowes, Isle of Wight.

The Duchess of Athole arrived in town on Saturday last from the Continent.

The Duchess Eleanor of Northumberland has left town for Tunbridge Wells.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Ripon and Earl De Grey have left Carlton-gardens for Studley Royal, Yorkshire.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry have joined their yacht at Cowes for the yachting season.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Sir Lewis Pelly, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., and Miss Amy Lowder, daughter of Lady Alcock and the late Rev. John Lowder, M.A., was celebrated on the 1st inst., by special license, in Westminster Abbey. The bride—who wore a white satin dress trimmed with orange-blossoms, and a wreath of natural orange flowers and tulle veil, her ornaments being pearls and diamonds—was received on her arrival by Sir Rutherford Alcock, her step-father, who gave her away. Her bridesmaids were the Hon. Mary Hammond, Miss Margaret Awdry, Miss Florence Somerset, Miss Buchanan, Miss Louisa Norwich Duff, Miss Armstrong, Miss Hudson, and Miss Amabel Gwyn Jeffreys. Their costumes were of white cashmere and blue broché, white chip bonnets trimmed with blue satin and forget-me-nots and each wore a miniature and pearl locket, the gift of the bridegroom. The Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster performed the marriage ceremony. After the registration of the marriage in the Jerusalem Chamber, the wedding party adjourned to Sir Rutherford and Lady Alcock's residence in Great Queen-street, Westminster, to breakfast, after which Sir Lewis and Lady Pelly left for Dover, en route for Normandy, on their wedding tour.

The marriage at Paris is announced of Sir Francis Fortescue Turville, K.C.M.G., of Bosworth Hall, Leicestershire, to Lady Lisgar. Lady Lisgar is the daughter of the late Marchioness of Headfort, by her first husband, Mr. E. T. Dalton. She was married in 1855 to Lord Lisgar, who died in 1876.

The marriage between Captain Arkwright, Coldstream Guards, and Miss Rosa Baring is fixed to take pl ace at Norman Court, Hampshire, on the 29th inst.

A marriage is arranged between Mr. A. M. M. Crichton, youngest son of the late Mr. D. M. M. Crichton, of Rankeilour, Fife, and Miss Hulse, eldest daughter of Sir Edward Hulse, Bart., of Breamore, Hants.

Berechurch Hall, near Colchester, and the contiguous estate of 1450 acres, have been bought by Mr. O. E. Coope, M.P., for £50,000. Mr. Coope has also purchased other valuable property in the same neighbourhood, including two large farms.

THE OCCUPATION OF CYPRUS.

Our front-page Engraving, from a sketch we have been favoured with by an officer of the Mediterranean naval squadron, shows the scene at Nicosia, the chief town of Cyprus, on Friday, the 12th ult., when Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B., formally took possession of that island, and hoisted the British flag, in the name of Queen Victoria. The figure to the left hand is that of the Admiral, who stands with his right hand raised to the peak of his undress cap, in the act of saluting the Union-Jack, which Captain Henry Rawson is engaged in hoisting, with the assistance of another naval officer. A guard consisting of twenty-five men of the Royal Marine Artillery, and Royal Marine Light Infantry from H.M.S. Minotaur, was all the actual British force present upon this important occasion; but the assembled people, both Greeks and Turks, who heard the Admiral's declaration, repeated in their own language by Mr. Walter Baring, of the British Legation at Constantinople, responded with hearty cheers, more especially greeting the name of "Victoria" with vociferous applause. This is a gratifying contrast to the reception of the Austrian Imperial authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina; but it is probable that the natives of Cyprus expect to make high pecuniary profits out of the British political and military establishments in their long neglected and poverty-stricken island. It was the same on Tuesday, the 23rd ult., when Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived at Nicosia with his staff, and took charge of the insular government as High Commissioner for her Majesty the Queen. We have now received from our Special Artist and Correspondent, whose first letter, describing his journey and voyage from London to Cyprus, appears in this week's Number of our Journal, sketches of the interesting scenes that have taken place at the landing of the British and Indian troops, with the ships in the habour of Larnaca, and various Illustrations of the towns, the country, and the people. These will be engraved and published in future Numbers; in the mean time, we present two more views of the coast—one being that of Cape Kormakiti, the ancient Krommyon, on the northern shore of Cyprus, opposite the mainland of Cilicia in Asia Minor; the other, a small seaport town named Kyrenia, situated also on the north coast, some twenty miles east of Cape Kormakiti. The distance across the sea to the mainland is rather less than fifty miles, so that the mountains of Asiatic Turkey are usually visible from Cyprus. The point thus within sight is not far from Tarsus, the birthplace of the Apostle Paul.

EN ROUTE FOR CYPRUS.

(From our Special Artist and Correspondent.)

Cyprus, July 25, 1878.

A brief interview at 198, Strand, was quickly succeeded by a short drive to Waterloo, whence we were quickly whirled past Winchester by the South-Western Railway to Southampton and the Havre packet. Our thoughts were chiefly bent on reaching as soon as possible England's latest acquisition of territory, which on that day had been formally taken possession of by Mr. Walter Baring and Admiral Lord John Hay. A moonlit and calm sea permitted an enjoyable trip across the "silver streak," and promoted a healthy appetite for breakfast at Frascati's early next morning. But, leaving Havre without delay, we were speedily traversing the valley of the Seine, and four hours' rail brought us to St. Lazare and Paris, which was still en fête.

The transfer from St. Lazare to the station of the Paris, Lyons, and Mediterranean line, seemed slow enough in the wretched voiture which emulates the London four-wheeler for discomfort. But, fortunately, there was ample time for dinner at the neighbouring "buffet;" and a few extra francs of expenditure was amply compensated for by the accommodation in one of the "wagons-lits" which are now attached to all the night-trains for Lyons and beyond. The next morning's dawn showed us the banks of the Rhône, with a glimpse of the amphitheatre at Arles; and by the time we had dressed and taken our coffee we reached our terminus at Marseilles. The rapid change of scenery and climate is here perceived; for within thirty-five hours we have exchanged the elm for the olive-tree, and the south-west breeze of the Channel for the keen "mistral" of the Bouches du Rhône.

A day's stay at Marseilles is quite sufficient to give the passing traveller an idea of this French Liverpool. Its docks, cafés, and ever increasing trade; its unfinished Cathedral and its celebrated Notre Dame de la Garde, with a colossal gilt figure, visible far out at sea, and regarded with superstitious reverence by the fishermen, are worth stopping to see. The superb Temple at Longchamp, between the Museums of Science and Art, with its colonnades and wonderfully designed waterfalls, is deserving of a better approach than that of the narrow boulevard which confronts it. By far the grandest feature of Marseilles, however, is its Prado, of which any capital in the world might be proud, whilst at its termination the grounds of the Château Borelly, by the seaside race-course, are laid out in that charming fashion which French landscape gardeners can alone produce in what otherwise would be regarded as a hopelessly ugly domain of waste land, now a suburban paradise for the Marseillais. But, enough, everyone who has travelled south knows Marseilles more or less, though few English ever stay here long if they can help it.

We leave Marseilles basin in one of Messrs. Fraissinet's boats, the Saint Marc. Of the few passengers bound for Malta the larger proportion are for Cyprus. There are English officers recalled from leave of absence but a day or two after their leave had been granted. These are, naturally, grumbling a little at their hard fate, but, at the same time, ardent to enter upon a new sphere of action. There are Greek interpreters from Manchester and Liverpool; while a Maltese Marquis, about to be disestablished, and a telegraph clerk, make up the company in the first-class saloon. A few of those ubiquitous foreign commercial travellers of polyglot discourse and uncertain nationality are the occupants of the second-class berths.

Alas! the boat is a slow one, but it is not the slightest use chafing at delay. The foreigners play dominoes, while the English debate over the map of Cyprus, the future plans of Sir Garnet Wolseley, and the respective merits or demerits of his newly appointed staff.

It is fortunate for us all that the passengers are not numerous, otherwise the discomfort would be intolerable; as it is, we are not stowed too closely. With British officers as compagnons de voyage, there is always some pleasant society; and in the present instance we are fortunate. The senior of the company is a Colonel, who is a great linguist; there is a Captain, a musical performer of no mean ability; and there is a smart Adjutant—all of a crack regiment of light infantry, and good specimens of our Army men.

During the whole of the next afternoon we are in sight of the Corsican Mountains; and as the moon rises we pass the Strait of Bonifazio. On emerging from this strait, and altering our course more to the south, we are happily enabled to set sail, and in consequence are set free from the cinders and smuts from the funnel which had before assailed us. Not till early the following morning do we pass Maritimo, the small Italian convict island at the extreme west of Sicily; and at breakfast-time on the 18th (Thursday) we find ourselves passing small fleets of fishing-vessels off the coasts of Sicily, which are dimly visible in the haze, northward of us. As the embarkation of the troops at Malta is supposed to commence this day, and our engines revolve with much diminished speed, we greatly chafe at the unwarrantable delay. We should be in sight of Gozo, at least; but we are told that we shall be lucky if we reach Valetta by midnight. There is nothing to be done but to watch the porpoises, talk Maltese politics with the intelligent Marquis, read last Saturday's paper, pick out the coolest corner on the poop, and go to sleep.

Gozo is in sight by dinner-time; and it is quite dark as we enter the Grand Harbour. But where is the fleet of transports? They have all sailed this afternoon. The Tamar troop-ship alone remains, waiting for the three officers who are in the Saint Marc. There is still a chance of a passage; and the moment "pratique" is obtained we are off to the Tamar; but in vain. The Captain of that ship is inexorable, as well he may be; for even his quarter-deck is crowded with horses; and we have to reach the poop from the gangway along a single board over the horses' heads. The captain is civil, but firm; and at ten p.m. the Tamar, with the gallant 71st Highlanders on board, steams majestically away. There is no help for it; but Dunsford's Hotel affords plenty of accommodation, being now empty after the day's exodus. Yesterday sixty sat down to the table d'hote, and to-day the table is deserted. The Peninsular and Oriental steamer took home about forty ladies, wives and relations of the Cyprus contingent.

Punctually at nine a.m. next day the Rear-Admiral enters his office at the dockyard, and we are granted a memorandum for Captain Twiss, R.N., who directs the hired transports. Admiral Luard courteously takes us in his steam-launch to the other harbour, where three large transport-steamers and a sailing-ship are lying. We are here introduced to Captain Twiss, and by his direction a cabin is provided for us on board the Trinacria steamer, one of the Anchor line, which brought a portion of the Indian contingent from Bombay. A few short visits to old acquaintances and fellow-officers in Valetta; and at last, to our great satisfaction, we leave Malta behind us.

The Trinacria is supposed to be a fast steamer, and we are in hopes of catching up the expeditionary fleet, which has the start of us. But our hopes are not realised; from lying stationary in the harbour at Malta, the steamer's bottom has become encrusted with barnacles and seaweed, and seven knots is the utmost speed to be got out of the vessel. If it were not for our impatience to be at Larnaca in time to witness the disembarkation of the main body of the troops, we should be most comfortable. On board are commissariat, ordnance, and transport stores, horses, mules, and "tats," with a number of Maltese muleteers, who are outrageously sensick. But the passengers are few, and consequently the cabin accommodation is ample. During the whole of Monday, July 22, we were in sight of the long mountain ranges of Crete. At last, but not till this morning, Thursday, the 25th, we could discern the distant outline of our new dependency. It had taken us a fortnight from the Strand to Cyprus, consequent on unforeseen delays, which could not possibly have been calculated upon. As the dense fog which had enveloped us since two a.m. lifted under the rising sun, the coast-line of Cyprus was disclosed within a short distance of us; and ahead were visible, in the roadstead of Larnaca, the ships of the British expeditionary force. By breakfast-time we were anchored, and were soon in a position to know the state of affairs. The larger portion of the army of occupation had arrived the previous day, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, who, with his staff, still has his head-quarters on board the Himalaya.

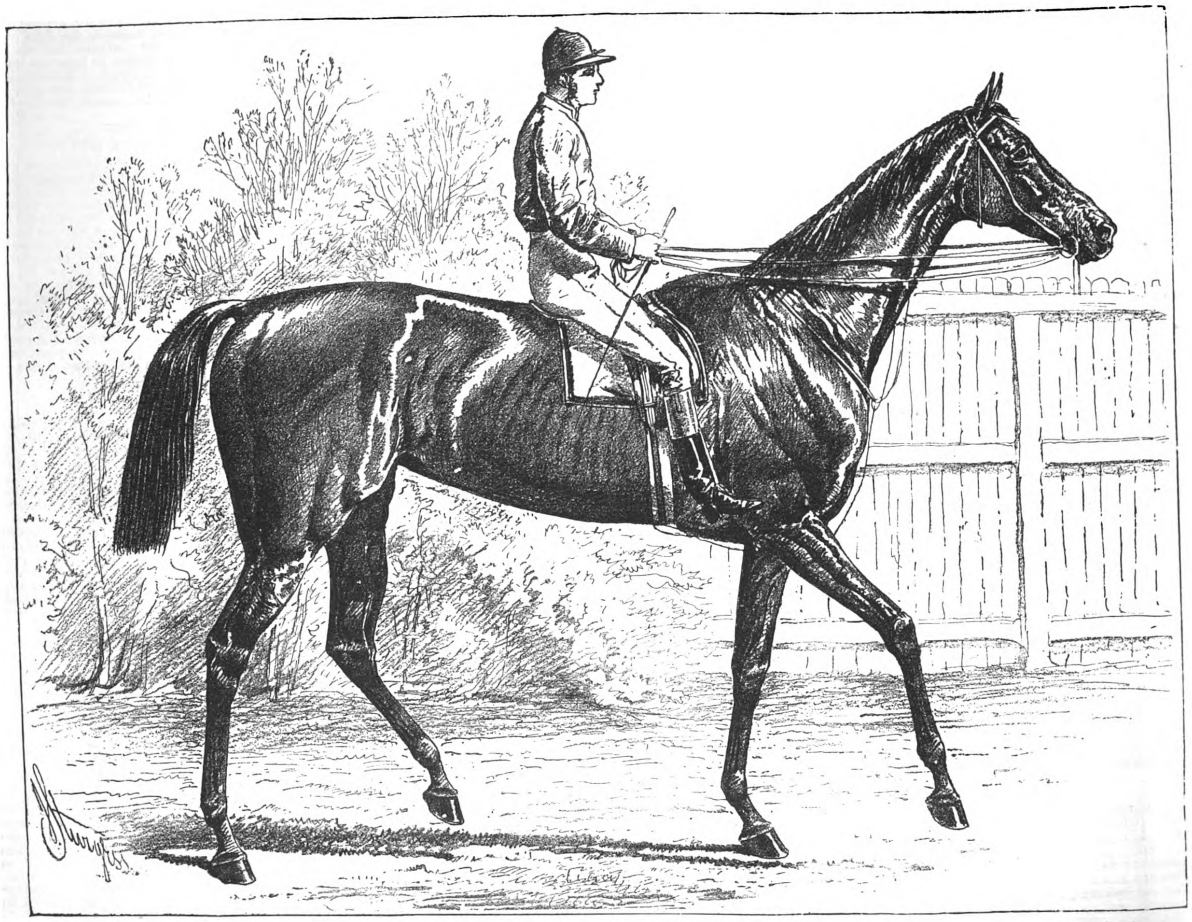
A JAPANESE GUN-BOAT.



The Seiki, which should rather be called a corvette than a gunboat, is a vessel entirely constructed by Japanese shipbuilders, though upon lines drawn by a French engineer who is director of the naval dockyard of the Mikado's Government at Nagasaki. This vessel, of which we present an Illustration, is 192 ft. in length and 30 ft. broad, with a capacity of 900 tons burden; her engines, which are of English manufacture, have 200-horse power; and she carries a Krupp gun of 15-centimètres calibre, placed amidships. She attains the speed of 11½ knots an hour. He crew numbers a hundred and fifty men, under the command of Captain Enouyé, who distinguished himself, by skill and bravery, in the civil war of 1868, between the Mikado and the Tycoon. All the officers of the Seiki, as well as the sailors, are native Japanese. The Imperial Navy of that insular realm has made great progress of late years, and is likely to play a conspicuous part in the Far East of Asia.

KINCSEM.

It is an unfortunate fact that whenever a "distinguished foreigner" has made a descent upon any of our classic races the opposition has generally been of a very feeble kind. The season of 1876 was an exception, for the Hungarian Kisber won his laurels from a sterling good horse like Petrarch, to say nothing of Skylark and one or two other smart animals that finished behind him; but, in 1865, the mighty Gladiateur was only opposed by about the worst field that ever ran for the Derby, and we could give several other instances of a similar kind. Kincsem, the latest invader, was exceptionally fortunate in winning her race almost before she went to the post. Slowly but surely the probable opposition to her melted away. Petrarch, in all likelihood, ran his last race at Ascot, where the hard ground found out his weak spot; Hampton is not thoroughly sound, and Lord Ellesmere naturally did not care to risk a second race with him at Goodwood; Verneuil, the hero of the unprecedented triple victory at Ascot a few weeks ago, suffered from an enlargement of the near hock, and had to be withdrawn almost at the last moment; and Silvio was not entered. Thus Kincsem had only Pageant and Lady Golightly to dispose of. The former, though a high-class performer in handicaps, and wonderfully fit and well this season, can scarcely be considered a representative cup horse; while Lady Golightly, always 10 lb. behind the best of her year, appears to be out of form. Nevertheless Kincsem could not do more than win in a canter, though with more artistic handling she would doubtless have made a fearful example of the other two. The filly is now four years old, and is a daughter of Cambuscan and Water Nymph. She is a dark chestnut, standing upwards of sixteen hands high. Her best point is her great length, but she has a beautiful head and grand shoulders. Like Achievement, whom she resembles in many respects, her back ribs are her weak spot, and, having said that, we have not much more fault to find. Her action when fully extended is splendid, as she moves close to the ground, with a long, sweeping stride that looks like staying for ever. The Goodwood Cup was her thirty-seventh successive victory, and defeat is unknown to her; so we should be very sorry to say that she is not capable of defeating anything that we could put against her. Her next appearance will be in France. But we trust that Mr. Blascovitz, her enterprising owner, will give us another peep at the "darling"—which, we believe, is the translation of Kincsem—in the Doncaster Cup.

THE REV. DR. RIGG, PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

CAPE KORMAKITI, CYPRUS.

WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

At the recent annual Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion the Rev. Dr. Rigg was elected to the presidential chair by a larger vote than has ever been given on any former occasion. He had three hundred and sixty-one votes; while the next highest voting was sixty-nine for the Rev. Samuel Coley. The newly-elected President, the Rev. James H. Rigg, D.D., was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in the year 1821. His father was an Englishman and a Wesleyan minister; his mother was of Irish descent. Dr. Rigg was educated in the Wesleyan school for preachers' sons at Kingswood, and became a Wesleyan minister in the year 1845. He has been stationed on some of the best circuits in the largest English towns. In 1868 he was appointed Principal of the Wesleyan Normal Institution at Westminster, which post he still occupies. Dr. Rigg's preaching is marked by great intellectual power, though better suited to cultured minds than to the multitude. He is a very able theologian, and has lately won for himself considerable distinction by his addresses in connection with the Christian Evidence Society. As a writer Dr. Rigg is well known in religious and theological circles both in this country and in the United States. His pen is very prolific. For many years he was the English correspondent of the New York Christian Advocate, and he is still, notwithstanding his many official duties, one of the principal contributors to the London Quarterly Review, and sometimes writes in the Contemporary. He is author of "The Living Wesley," "Modern Anglican Theology," "Essays for the Times," and "Relations of John Wesley and Wesleyan Methodism with the Church of England." We believe that Dr. Rigg and the Rev. William Arthur were the first men to move in the direction of liberal and, at the same time, conservative progress in modern Methodism. In 1870 his name became prominent in the educational conflicts of the country. He is neither a School Board man nor a denominationalist exclusively, but wishes both systems to work in accordance with the varieties of our national life. His conduct in the presidential chair is clear, firm, and decisive. Perhaps the most striking feature of his mind is its unwearied activity. His friends do not know if his brain is ever tired, but he certainly never shows any signs of mental fatigue.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

At the request of the United States, the French Government has addressed an invitation to Foreign Powers to attend a Monetary Congress, to be held in Paris on the 10th inst.

By a decree of the President, dated July 30, M. de Blowitz, the Paris correspondent of the Times, has been advanced to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honour, for services exceptionnels. He has been a Chevalier of the Order since 1871.

Queen Christina of Spain lies in an alarming state, owing to a fall down a flight of stairs a few months ago, and Queen Isabella has been in attendance on her mother. In spite of the opposition of her family and her Spanish doctor, Queen Christina has left Paris for Havre, where, she believes, the sea air will cure her. Her Majesty had to be carried in an arm-chair to the railway carriage. On bidding good-by to her family at the station she said sorrowfully to Queen Isabella, her daughter, "We shall be sure to meet again, at least at the Escurial."

M. Freycinet, Minister of Public Works, left Paris on Wednesday on a visit to Rouen, Dieppe, and Havre, to inquire into the best means of improving the ports in the district of the Lower Seine.

The Academy of Sciences has chosen Mr. Darwin, the distinguished naturalist, a corresponding member for the Botanical Section.

Prizes were awarded by the French Academy on the 1st inst. That for eloquence was divided, 2000f. each to the late M. Michaut, Licentiate in Law, and M. Hemon, Agrégé of Letters, the subject being "Eloge de Buffon." The Montyon prize for virtue was awarded—2500f. to Abbé Roussel, Auteuil; and 1500f. to Mdlle. Aimée Milcent, Saint-Jean-de-Monts (Vendée). In the Montyon prize for the works most useful to manners three sums of 2000f. each were awarded, to the Marquis de Beauregard, for "Un Homme d'Autrefois;" M. Charles de Bonnechose, for "Montcalm et le Canada Français;" and M. Henry Gréville, for "Dosio." The Guizot triennial prize of 3000f. to M. Vian, for a "Histoire de Montesquieu." The Archon-Despérouses prize, of the annual value of 4000f., was divided, 2500f. to M. Charles Marty-Laveaux, and 1500f. to M. Arsène Darmesteter.

On Monday the Académie des Beaux Arts awarded the prizes in the competition for the Prix de Rome (engraving on copperplate section). The first prize was gained by M. Charles Théodore Deblois, born at Fleurmes, Oise, in 1851, and the second by M. Edmond Achille Rabouille, born at Paris, in 1851.

M. Vibert's picture "The Apotheosis of M. Thiers" has been bought by the State, for the Luxembourg, for 8000f.

The parties of the Left, both of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, have addressed circulars to those who are entitled to vote at the approaching election of senators. These circulars, which are drawn up almost in identical terms, insist upon the importance of these elections, upon the result of which depends the future of the Republic. They request the Councils-General to select the most suitable candidates, and in doing so to put aside their personal preferences.

From the 16th to the 22nd of this month an International Congress of Commerce and Industry will be held in the Trocadéro. One of the questions to be discussed is "the establishment of an international commercial régime to be instituted by conventions between the Governments."

The short line which connects the ancient township of Montreuil-sur-Mer with Hesdin and St. Pol has been opened. By it a direct route is now made available from the port of Boulogne to Arras and Béthune, which lie in the midst of the coal measures of the Pas de Calais, and in close proximity to those of the Département du Nord.

A strike of the Paris cabmen which began on Monday has greatly extended.

The strike of the coal-miners of the Nord has broken out afresh.

ITALY.

The King and Queen of Italy arrived at Venice on a visit last Wednesday. Great preparations had been made for their reception, and they were welcomed with much enthusiasm.

The Pope has yielded to the earnest prayers of Cardinal de Luca to be excused from accepting the onerous duties of State Secretary on the ground of his age and infirmities.

Archbishop Jacobini, the Nuncio at Vienna, has been summoned to Rome.

For the post of Captain of the Swiss Guard at the Vatican, vacant by the resignation of Baron Alfred de Sonneberg, nominally on the ground of ill-health, but really because of the late Mutiny, there were twenty-two candidates, of whom Count Lewis de Courten was elected. The pay is £12 a month with £6 for official expenses, and apartments free.

The distinguished Italian patriot and hero, Giorgio Pallavicino, friend of Cavour, died last Saturday morning, aged eighty-four. He was fellow-prisoner with Silvio Pellico in an Austrian fortress.

The long deconsecrated and deserted church of the Spaniards in the Piazza Navona, at Rome, for some time used for the storage of timber, and which Mr. Joseph Severn, when Consul, proposed should be bought for the Church of England congregation which worships outside the walls, has been sold by auction and bought by the French Society of the Sacred Heart, who intend converting it into a pensionnat.

A "green book" on the Eastern Question, presented to Parliament last Saturday, shows, according to a summary in Reuter's despatches, that Italy did not cease to give good counsel to Servia, and also advised prudence to Greece. The despatches state that the decision of Greece to withdraw her troops from Thessaly was due to the initiative of the Italian, French, and Russian Ministers to Greece. Greece was then assured that Hellenic interests would be considered in the Congress deliberations.

Garibaldi has made public his opinion that the Government ought not to declare war against Austria, "and with the breath of fictitious peace now blowing over Europe such a war-note would be disapproved." Inasmuch, however, as it is useless to hope for the accomplishment of Italian right from congresses and international arbitrations in an effectual way while despotic power prevails, it is well to inculcate on united Italians what a real fortune it will be for that generation which shall be called to avenge the many injuries and disasters caused by the two-headed eagle.

PORTUGAL.

The elections of municipal and general councillors have resulted favourably for the supporters of the Government.

BELGIUM.

The Chamber of Representatives has elected M. Rogier President, and M. Guillery (deputy for Brussels) and M. Dewal (deputy for Antwerp) Vice-Presidents of the Chamber.

In Wednesday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies the bill for the creation of a Ministry of Public Instruction was adopted by 63 votes against 50.

The Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria arrived at Prague on the 1st inst. on a visit, and met with an enthusiastic reception. In the evening a torchlight procession and serenade were organised in honour of his Imperial Highness.

The Empress Eugenie has been in Vienna, and has received much attention, both from official circles and from the inhabitants. The day after her arrival she received a visit from the Emperor and the Archduke Albrecht; and the chief State dignitaries, with Prince Hohenlohe, Count Andrassy, Prince Reuss, the German Ambassador, Prince Metternich, and Count Beust, have called upon her. On Tuesday a Court dinner was given in her honour at Schönbrunn.

The elections for the Hungarian Legislature were held on Monday. The returns of eighty constituencies show that the Liberal party have obtained fifty-six seats, the United Opposition twelve, the Extreme Left seven, and the Nationalists two, while three independent members have been elected. In Debreczyn all three electoral districts voted for candidates of the Extreme Left, and the Minister-President, Herr Tisza, was defeated by Herr Ernst Simonyi. The latest returns concerning these elections show that, although the Minister-President Tisza has been defeated, the Liberal or Government party will have a decided majority. Returns have come to hand of 163 elections, and of these the successful candidates are:—104 Liberals, thirty members of the United Opposition, seventeen of the Extreme left, four Nationalists, and five belonging to no party. Three elections are indecisive.

The Austrian occupation of Bosnia and the Herzegovina is threatened with more difficulty than appeared at first. The troops have entered Mostar safely, and those of the inhabitants having property, the Times report says, received the troops most joyfully. But the Standard has a despatch stating that when the Austrians were within one day's march of Mostar the Bosnian chiefs who had occupied the defiles offered a strong resistance. "The fight began on Sunday morning, and continued until the evening. The Austrians had 200 cavalry soldiers killed and 150 infantry killed and wounded. In consequence of their position, the loss of the Bosnians was comparatively small. A score of the insurgents, however, fell into the hands of the Austrians, and were shot. It is added that the battle continued on Monday near Mostar, and the losses on both sides were considerable. The insurgents had field guns and good artillerists. From other sources it is reported that great agitation prevails among the Mussulman population of Trebinje.

The arbitrators have settled the western and northern boundaries of Ontario.

A Reuter's telegram from Victoria (Vancouver Island), dated Aug. 3, says that a bill has been introduced in the Legislative Assembly imposing a tax of sixty dollars per annum on every Chinaman in the province.

By a telegram from Montreal we learn that the Orangemen have declined a proposal from the Catholic party to bring a case before the Privy Council in order to test the legality of the Orange organisation.

THE CAPE COLONIES.

The surrender of the chief Sandilli's brother has confirmed the hopes in South Africa that hostilities with the Kaffirs were at an end. There have, however, been a few skirmishes in the Transvaal, where the British, after some success, had in one case to retreat with a slight loss.

Telegrams of Monday's date from Alexandria report that the Nile is rising well and rapidly, showing a rising higher than at the corresponding period of last year.

A jury about to decide in Paris on the merits of the mustard of various nations consists of twelve gentlemen and twelve ladies, the suggestion having been made that men's palates are vitiated by smoking, and that women are likely to have a nicer appreciation of the condiment.

The barque Highflyer, of 1011 tons, Captain Hawkins, sailed from Gravesend on the 2nd inst., bound for Maryborough, Queensland, and had on board the following number of emigrants—viz., eighty-four married people, 153 single men, fifty single women, forty-four children between the ages of twelve and one, and six infants, making a total of 337 souls, equal to 319 statute adults. The single women are under the care of Mrs. Cochet, Dr. Harris acting as surgeon and superintendent.

By the presentation of a report from the watch committee, the question of the erection of a new Townhall at Hastings has been reopened at the council meeting. This document recommends the building of a new block of municipal offices, at an estimated cost of £14,000. The report was adopted by ten votes to eight.

Dr. Bell Fletcher, having retired from his position as chief physician to the Birmingham General Hospital, after a service of nearly thirty years, his friends determined to honour him with a testimonial. Yesterday week a large piece of plate and two elegant candelabra were presented to Dr. Fletcher. His portrait, by Sir Daniel Macnee, F.R.S.A., is also to be placed in the board-room of the institution with which he was so long connected.

What was designated "the genuine eisteddfod of the Kymry" brought its three days' session at Llanrwst to a close on Saturday last—Mr. Salisbury, of the Parliamentary bar, a lineal descendant of Dr. William Salisbury, the Welsh translator of the Bible, who was born near Llanrwst, and the Rev. W. Rees, D.D., Chester, being the presidents. The chief literary honour (a prize given by the Rev. T. James, LL.D., Netherthong Vicarage, Huddersfield, for a memorial poem) was awarded to the Rev. Richard Roberts, Wesleyan Minister, Llandudno. Lady Llanover's harp prize, the winner of which bears the title of chief harper of Wales, was carried off by Mr. Edwin Roberts, Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Mr. Davies, Bethesda, taking the second prize. During the proceedings the Rev. Dr. Rees was installed chief bard of Britain.—At the Eisteddfod at Menai Bridge, on Wednesday, Mr. Morgan Lloyd, M.P., the president, spoke upon the interest which Wales was now manifesting in high-class education, complaining that whilst liberal grants were made to Ireland and Scotland, the Government refused any aid towards the Welsh University, which was established and supported chiefly by the working classes of Wales. Mr. Cubitt's piano, for lady amateurs resident in Wales, was won by Miss Ella Richards, of Bangor, Mr. Elias Davies and Mr. Owen Jones winning the harp prizes, and the Portdinowic Choir the chief choral competition.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Orleans Club coach has ceased running for the season, and the horses will be sold by Messrs. Tattersall next Monday.

The fourth exhibition by the British Bee-Keepers' Association has been held this week at the Royal Horticultural Society's Gardens, South Kensington.

Sir Sydney Waterlow, M.P., presided last Monday at the half-yearly meeting of the Improved Industrial Dwellings Company, held at the Mansion House. The report, which was of a satisfactory character, and which recommended a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, was adopted.

The Metropolitan Board of Works have resolved upon applying to Parliament for an extension until the year 1900 of the coal and wine dues upon the present basis, so as to provide the means for the erection of a new bridge over the Thames at the Tower.

A meeting in support of the movement for providing a home for the reformation of female habitual drunkards was held at the Mansion House yesterday week—Dr. Cameron, M.P., presided. The committee which had been appointed at a former meeting reported that a suitable house had been secured at Bedford.

The rooms and library of the South London Working-Men's College, Upper Kennington-lane, will be opened as a Free Public Reading-Room and Library on Oct. 1, and will remain open every weekday, so long as the expenses, estimated at £200 a year, are provided by local contributions. The management will be under the control of a local committee, among whom are Sir Charles Dilke, Sir J. C. Lawrence, Bart., M.P., Professor Fawcett, M.P., and Mr. W. Gordon, M.P.

At the annual meeting of the council of the Royal School of Mines, held in Jermyn-street, the prizes were awarded as follow:—The two Royal scholarships, of £15 each, for first year's students, to Mr. R. G. Scott and Mr. W. Cross; the Royal scholarship, of £25, to Mr. R. Lancaster; the Edward Forbes medal and prize of books, to Mr. P. F. Frankland; the De la Beche medal and prize of books, to Mr. F. G. Mills; the Murchison medal and prize of books, to Mr. M. Terrero; and an extra medal to Syed Ali.

Mrs. De Tourville, who was murdered by her husband in the Tyrol in 1876, had by her will bequeathed all her estate over which she had power of disposition, amounting to £40,000, to her husband. He being now a convict under a life sentence, has assigned his interest; but the wife's next-of-kin have raised a claim to the estate. The matter came on Monday before Vice-Chancellor Malins, who gave directions which will enable the claimants to take steps for raising the question of law between them and De Tourville and his assigns.

Sir Charles Reed having been detained in Paris at a meeting of the jurors of the Exhibition, who are now busy considering the awards, the weekly meeting of the School Board for London on Wednesday was presided over by the Rev. J. Rodgers, the vice-chairman. The Crystal Palace Scholarship was presented to Frederick William Stebbings, of the Canterbury-road, Old Kent-road, board school. A certificate of fitness of the Shaftesbury industrial school-ship, duly signed by the Home Secretary, was received. The board adjourned for their recess till Oct. 2.

Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton presided on Wednesday afternoon over the reopening of the Whitechapel Public Baths and Washhouses, which were erected some years ago in Goulston-square, Goulston-street, High-street, by a private committee. They have now been extended and repaired under the powers contained in the Baths and Wash-houses Acts. The building contains seven first and fourteen second-class women's baths; and twenty-one first and forty-seven second-class men's baths; while there are also eighty-four tubs, with all necessary appliances, in the wash-houses.

The Society of Apothecaries have awarded their prizes for medical students as follows:—The gold medal to T. B. Franklin Eminson, of St. Mary's Hospital, and the silver medal and books to W. Egerton Starling, of Guy's Hospital. They have also awarded their prizes for young women as follows:—The gold medal to Alice Graham, of 155, Hungerford-road, N.W., and the silver medal to Mary Isabella Webb, of West Hill Lodge, Hampstead, N.W. The third in order of merit received a prize in books from Miss Twining, of Twickenham. The papers of many of the young ladies showed considerable knowledge and ability.

The annual excursion in connection with the Working-Men's Club and Institute Union took place on Monday, Mr. Henry Bicknell, of Cavendish House, Clapham-common, having placed the handsome grounds attached to his residence at the disposal of the committee. A considerable number of working men, accompanied by their wives and children, availed themselves of the opportunity thus afforded for a day's healthful recreation and amusement. The programme, which was carried out under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Hodgson Pratt, the indefatigable chairman, included a number of athletic contests by members of the different clubs. The band of the Haggerston Club was in attendance, and played popular selections during the day. In the evening the prizes, which consisted of books, won by the successful competitors in the athletic sports, were distributed by Mr. Bicknell.

A dispute between Mr. and Mrs. Agar-Ellis as to the religion in which their children shall be educated came before Vice-Chancellor Malins on Monday. Before the marriage Mr. Agar-Ellis had promised that any children born to them should be Roman Catholics, like their mother; but, his convictions as a Protestant having become stronger since his marriage, he now desires to send the three daughters, the eldest of whom is twelve years of age, into the country to be brought up as Protestants. The Vice-Chancellor said it was the law of every civilised country and of Christianity that the wife should submit to the husband, and the pre-nuptial promise which had been pleaded had been decided over and over again not to be binding. The Court would not interfere with the father in the bringing up of his children, and Vice-Chancellor Malins ordered that they should not be taken to a Roman Catholic church or to confession.

It is believed that never since the passing of Sir John Lubbock's Act did so many people make holiday as on Monday last. Many of the places of resort in and around the metropolis were not so crowded as on previous occasions, but the excursionists to the seaside and other places at a distance from town, including those who left London on Saturday, are said to have never been more numerous. The Great Western Railway booked from its London stations to its country stations between Saturday morning and Monday afternoon 28,000 persons; the bookings at Waterloo station are estimated to have amounted to about 50,000; the Great Eastern Railway conveyed 62,000 persons from London; and the southern railway lines also carried several thousands to the seaside. The omnibuses, tramcars, and river steam-boats were, as usual, crowded with passengers the whole day; and all the open spaces about London had their share of visitors. On Hampstead-heath alone it is estimated that there were about 30,000 persons. The number of persons present at some of the principal resorts of holiday-makers were as follows:—Crystal Palace, 44,078; Alexandra Palace, about 45,000; Kew Gardens, which were opened at ten o'clock, 57,000; the Zoological Society's Gardens, 27,393; the South Kensington Museum, 14,058; the British Museum, 6595; the Tower, 2000; the Grosvenor Gallery, 3500; and the Royal Academy, 5953. It is also stated that 12,800 persons visited the Brighton Aquarium. The gardens and conservatory of the Royal Horticultural Society at South Kensington were open to the public all day on Bank Holiday. The weather was fine until between nine and ten o'clock at night, when rain fell heavily.

TRAINING-BRIGS' RACE AT PLYMOUTH.

At Plymouth Regatta, which was held on Friday, the 26th ult., there was a sailing-race between five of her Majesty's brigs maintained at different ports for the training of seamen for the Royal Navy. These were the Seaflower, a vessel of 433 tons burden, armed with eight guns, which is tender to H.M.S. Boscawen at Portland; the Sealark, 311 tons, employed as tender to H.M.S. Ganges at Falmouth; the Liberty, 447 tons, tender to H.M.S. Implacable at Devonport; the Squirrel, of the same size, tender at the same port to H.M.S. Impregnable; and the Marten, 489 tons, carrying ten guns, tender to H.M.S. St. Vincent at Portsmouth. They were moored inside the Breakwater in the order named, the Seaflower lying to the westward. The wind was about north-west and variable at eleven o'clock in the morning, when the brigs started, the Sealark getting off first and leading in fine style, followed by the Squirrel, Liberty, Marten, and Seaflower, through the eastern channel. The course was through the eastern channel of the Breakwater to the Mewstone, thence to Penlee Point, and back through the western channel to Jenny Cliff, and round a mark off the Melampus Buoy, a distance of about sixteen miles. There were two prizes, a piece of plate value twenty-five guineas and a silver cup value five guineas, presented by the Mayor of Plymouth. Rounding the eastern end of the Breakwater, the Liberty took the lead slightly, but the Marten, Sealark, and Squirrel were holding well on to her, and the Seaflower was considerably astern. They then got into line about a cable's-length distant in the above order, the Seaflower lumbering along and gradually creeping up. The wind was free, and at this point the Marten came out and promised to make good running; but after passing the buoy, when they hauled up on the starboard tack, the Liberty gained a decided advantage, and only the Squirrel competed with her at all closely towards the end of the race. The Seaflower and Sealark gave up the contest at the end of the first round, when the wind had fallen light. The race was won by the Liberty, subject to a protest made by the Commanders of the Squirrel and Marten, who alleged that the Liberty had quitted her anchorage before the starting-gun was fired. Our Illustration is from a Sketch by Mr. W. Gibbons, of Plymouth.

Lord Norton has accepted the presidency of the Social Science Congress, to be held at Cheltenham in October next.

THE TRAINING-BRIGS RACE AT THE PLYMOUTH REGATTA.

PRESENTATION OF THE FREEDOM OF THE CITY OF LONDON TO LORDS BEACONSFIELD AND SALISBURY.

THE TRAINING-SHIP RACE AT THE PLYMOUTH REGATTA.

LORDS BEACONSFIELD AND SALISBURY AT GUILDHALL.

The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs went into the City on Saturday last to receive from the Lord Mayor and Corporation the honorary gift of the civic franchise. Three private carriages, the first conveying Lord Beaconsfield and Mr. Montagu Corry, his private secretary; the second containing the Marquis of Salisbury, with Lady Salisbury, Lady Maude Cecil, and Miss Alderson; and the last carrying Lord Robert Cecil, with Mr. Philip Wodehouse Currie, Lord Salisbury's secretary, passed from Whitehall to Guildhall, along the Strand, Fleet-street, St. Paul's-churchyard, and Cheapside. It was half-past five in the afternoon when they started from the Ministers' official residences in Downing-street. They were much cheered by the people along the streets. The entrance to the City, at Temple Bar, was adorned with two rows of flags, and with a trophy erected on the site of the ancient gateway. A wooden side arch, to correspond with the remaining stone arch, was put up on the side next the great eastern tower of the New Law Courts. Each of these side arches was surmounted by a silver griffin, like the heraldic supporters of the City of London arms, upholding Venetian masts, gilt and decked with scarlet, between which extended a band displaying the motto "Peace with Honour." Many flags were hung out in Fleet-street and further along the route; and St. Dunstan's and other church bells were set ringing. The carriages were escorted by a small detachment of City police. At Guildhall the front court-yard was partly inclosed and covered with an awning. This formed an elegant pavilion, with tiers of seats for twelve hundred spectators. Its interior was decorated with mirrors at the four corners, emblazoned shields, trophies of flags, masses of verdant shrubs, and garlands of bright flowers. Messrs. Simmonds were the contractors for the decoration, and Mr. John Wills, the florist, supplied his part, all under the direction of the City architect, Mr. Horace Jones, and the City Lands Committee of the Common Council, with Mr. Colls at its head. The interior of Guildhall was fitted up for the occasion.

The City Library, where the Lord Mayor received the illustrious visitors of the Corporation, is a beautiful modern Gothic hall. The scene here, as well as in the entrance pavilion or vestibule, was splendid and lively, with plenty of rich dresses of ladies, municipal robes, official and military uniforms; while the bands of the Artillery Company and of the London Rifle Volunteers made spirit-stirring music. Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury, who wore Court levée dress, with the ribbons, George and star of the Garter, were greeted by the Lord Mayor, Sir T. S. Owden, in his robes of office, accompanied by the Lady Mayoress. After the due salutations, their Lordships passed into the Great Hall, through an avenue of palms and ferns in every room, staircase, and corridor.

The Great Hall was prepared for the ceremonial by erecting a dais, under a canopy decorated with arabesques, for the principal personages concerned; and there were ten tiers of seats for members of the Common Council, and at each end of the hall twenty tiers of seats for other spectators, to the number altogether of nearly two thousand. Banners of the City Companies were ranged above the doors, and the sunlight through the stained glass windows, falling on the marble statuary, had a beautiful effect. The band of the Coldstream Guards was in the Music Gallery. The two Ministers of State, conducted by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs and some other Aldermen and Common Councilmen, took their seats on the dais. The Court of the Common Council was opened in due form, the Lord Mayor presiding; and the Town Clerk read the resolutions of the 18th inst., that the freedom of the City, in a gold box, should be presented to each of their Lordships, for their conduct at the Congress of Berlin. The necessary formal documents were produced, certificates of their admission in 1874 to the Merchant Taylor' Company, and a voucher from the "Compurgators" that both were honest men, who would pay scot and bear lot, and not defraud the City or the Queen. Each of their Lordships then made his solemn declaration of allegiance, loyalty, and fidelity; after which the City Chamberlain addressed first Lord Beaconsfield, and secondly Lord Salisbury, in set terms of special commendation, referring to their late political achievements. The Prime Minister briefly replied, and was followed by the Secretary for Foreign Affairs. They inscribed their names in the roll of City freemen, and the proceedings were ordered to be entered in the journals of the Court. Our Illustration shows Lord Beaconsfield reading the prescribed declaration from a paper held in his hand.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress entertained the two Ministers, with a numerous and distinguished company, including the other members of the Cabinet, in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. Lord Beaconsfield there made another speech, claiming for himself and his Government the credit of having secured for Europe a general peace which he believed would be enduring, because every one of the Powers, including Russia, was benefited, and not one was humiliated, by the arrangements now concluded. Lord Salisbury, in the same strain, declared his persuasion that we had done with the Eastern Question, and that a period of peace and prosperity had been opened, and that all rancorous controversy should now cease. The Lord Chancellor, Sir Stafford Northcote, Colonel Stanley, and the Right Hon. W. H. Smith were among the Ministers who spoke at this banquet.

The gold caskets in which the freedom of the City was presented were designed and manufactured by Messrs. Stephen Smith and Son, of Covent-garden.

Mr. Alderman George Hurst, J.P., has been unanimously elected Mayor of Bedford, in the place of Mr. Taylor, deceased.

The steel corvette Cleopatra, 2377 tons, was launched on the 1st inst. from the yard of Messrs. John Elder and Co. Mrs. John Elder, widow of the late eminent Clyde shipbuilder, named the vessel.

Bishop Rigg, who has been appointed to the diocese of Dunkeld by the decree re-establishing a Papal hierarchy in Scotland, was on Monday installed in his charge. The ceremony took place in St. Andrew's Roman Catholic Chapel, Dundee, in presence of a large number of clergy and laity. An address was presented to the Bishop, along with a set of vestments and a service of altar plate valued at £400.

A remarkable gathering took place on Wednesday in the quiet Somersetshire village of Wedmore, a number of learned men having assembled to celebrate the thousandth anniversary of the signing, by Alfred the Great, of the peace of Wedmore. Papers were read and speeches made by Mr. E. A. Freeman, the historian, Professor Earle, Bishop Clifford, and others, contending for the probability that Alfred lived at Wedmore and signed there the peace that terminated hostilities between him and his enemies. There was a special service in the parish church in the morning, the Bishop of Bath and Wells preaching the sermon. At midday there was a meeting for the reading of papers, in the afternoon a luncheon, and in the evening a public tea meeting.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The period has arrived when, in the ordinary course of things, the Prime Minister has to make his diagnosis; and, finding as a rule that the House is suffering not only from extreme physical lassitude, but also from inability to grasp an idea savouring not of grouse or yachting, prescribes the magic remedy of prorogation. But this is an extraordinary Session. Having called Parliament together much earlier than usual, the Government, by way of making amends, now ask our Legislators to sit further into August than is their wont. Not that Ministers themselves are not in need of rest and change. On Monday the somnolent oratory long drawn out of the Earl of Northbrook sent Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Redesdale, and the Lord Chancellor off into a placid dose which made the chubby half-smiling face of the Chairman of Committees appear more cherubic than ever. Earl Granville had flown. Neither Lord Derby nor Lord Carnarvon sat below the gangway to disquiet the minds of Ministers, albeit the Duke of Richmond buttonholed the Home Secretary for some minutes near the Throne, seemingly in case any exMinister might crop up to make some further Cabinet disclosure which might be checked by a dogmatic negative from Mr. Cross. Whilst the Prime Minister gently slumbered, Lord Cranbrook sat by his side actively taking notes of points in Lord Northbrook's speech to be replied to. The late Governor-General of India was emphatically, if inaudibly, insisting that the petitions he had presented from Calcutta complaining of the increase of taxation in India ought to be seriously considered with a view to lessening public expenditure. This evil of growing taxation was regarded by the noble Earl as being a greater danger to India than the proximity of Russia to Armenia. Lord Cranbrook, however, maintained that the Government had, as a matter of fact, laid the foundation of a better fiscal system in India. The Secretary for India went into particulars to support his argument; and Lord Napier of Magdala, in expressing his opinion on the matter, trusted that the formation of railways in India would still be encouraged and that the Indian Army would not be further reduced. The Irish Tenant Right Bill then came up for second reading, but was negatived by 25 to 8 votes.

The Duke of Connaught's Establishment Bill was read the third time and passed on Tuesday; a few other measures were advanced a stage; and the Earl of Camperdown initiated a seasonable conversation, which will presumably have considerable influence in inducing employers to reinstate where possible the men who were called away to join the Reserves, but who have lately been dismissed. Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Bury, the Duke of Cambridge, Lord Cardwell, Lord Waveney, the Duke of Buccleuch, and Lord Monk all added their voices in support of Lord Camperdown's kindly motion.

The Royal assent was given on Thursday to the Duke of Connaught's Establishment Bill and to many other bills. Several measures having been advanced a stage, the whole business of the evening was disposed of in little more than thirty minutes.

COMMONS.

Government had a larger majority than they could have anticipated. Ere the House divided, in the small hours of Saturday morning last, however, the current of debate on the Marquis of Hartington's resolutions had to be continued by Lord Elcho, Mr. W. E. Forster, and Mr. Courtney, and, quickly eluding the small fry, was lashed into so much fury by Mr. Roebuck (who appears to be a kind of Minister unattached), Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Butt, and Sir Wilfrid Lawson, that it was accepted as a relief when the Chancellor of the Exchequer rose and threw oil on the troubled waters in an admirably-reasoned speech, which Mr. Sullivan and the Marquis of Hartington, who spoke last of all, had not time to reply to. Cheering loud and long-continued greeted the result of the division:—

Voted against the Marquis of Hartington's Resolutions ...	338
Voted for the Resolutions	195
Majority...	143

As a matter of form, Mr. Plunket's amendment was then put and agreed to. Among the Liberals who supported the Government on this occasion were Mr. Butt and sixteen other Irish members, Mr. Joseph Cowen, Mr. Roebuck, Sir N. Rothschild, Mr. Samuda, Mr. Yeaman, Mr. Lambert, and Mr. W. H. Foster; whilst the Marquis of Hartington's following was further lessened by the abstention of several Liberals from voting at all.

The House became thin by degrees and beautifully less on Monday. Its capacity for enjoyment had not altogether gone, however. Laughter was raised, though it was difficult to see wherefore, by Mr. J. Holms's notice of a motion next Session for the shortening of Parliaments. Laughter was also provoked by a slip on the part of Mr. Cross, who, in giving a matter-of-fact explanation of the arrest and retention in custody of a Mr. Harman for stealing his own opera-glass, barked out in his habitual positive voice the strange statement that the same gentleman had been taken into custody last year. When Mr. Gorst showed the right hon. gentleman he was in error in supposing it was the same person, Mr. Cross naïvely exclaimed, "Oh, another gentleman, was it?" Whereupon the House laughed afresh. The state to which hon. members have been brought by the prolongation of the Session may thus be imagined. Not that all the questions were of a parochial nature. We presume we must admit some few were of an Imperial character. Colonel Stanley, for example, favoured Mr. Hayter with a little preliminary Cyprus Budget when he foreshadowed that £10,000 would be taken for the staff, £25,000 for works, and £40,000 for stores. Laconic as ever, Mr. Bourke vouchsafed the answer to Mr. C. B. Denison that Government had an eye on General Kauffman, the Russian Commander reported to be at the head of a military expedition south of the Oxus threatening Balkh, in Afghan territory. Then Sir Stafford Northcote forecasted the course of business so far as to say that the Supplementary Estimates would be considered this week, and the report on the Irish Intermediate Education Bill next Monday; that the Bishopric's Bill would be persevered with; but that the Criminal Code and Medical Acts Bills would be dropped. Opposition cheers welcomed Lord William Hay on his taking the oaths and his seat for the Haddington Burghs; and a new writ for Boston was issued, in consequence of the resignation of Mr. Malcolm. The House having resolved itself into a kind of jury, various hon. members displayed considerable forensic ability in discussing the execution of a native of Tanna on board H.M.S. Beagle on Sept. 25 1877. Mr. Gorst was counsel for the unfortunate individual strung up at the yard-arm of the Beagle; and the gist of his argument was that her Majesty's Navy ought not to be transformed into a pack of Beagles, if the expression may be allowed. The Attorney-General was leading counsel for the officers of the Beagle, but found a shrewd and smart critic in Sir Charles Dilke, who has much improved as a ready debater this Session, albeit his ironic manner still smacks rather too much of the style of the heavy villain of the Vic. Sir Henry James, the Solicitor-General, and Sir William Harcourt were also among the luminaries who endeavoured to throw light on the case, regarding which Mr. W. H. Smith's reasonable explanation on the part of the Government eventually satisfied Mr. Gorst. The depreciation of silver in India was a text on which Sir George Campbell waxed loquacious, with the result that Mr. Cave returned a reassuring answer to the hon. member for Kirkcaldy. Evidence of commendable industry in the mastery of a number of figures was shown by Lord George Hamilton in introducing thus late in the Session the Education Estimates, which amount this year to £2,149,000, being £178,000 more than last year's. Mr. Forster and Mr. Gladstone warned the noble Lord against the increasing expenses, the right hon. member for Bradford maintaining that 15s. a head was as high as they ought to go for educational purposes. The vote was ultimately sanctioned, as were the votes of £307,414 for the Science and Art Department, £331,812 for public education in Scotland, £84,790 for the British Museum, £9233 for the National Gallery, and £1500 for the National Portrait Gallery.

The Supplementary Estimates were on Tuesday introduced by Sir Stafford Northcote, who occupied little time in disposing of the large figures it fell to his lot to deal with. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that he had expected when he brought forward his Budget of £83,230,000 that that revenue would have covered all the supplementary expenses incurred owing to the complications in the East. But the expenditure had proved larger than he anticipated. In addition to the £748,000 for the transport of the Indian troops to Malta, he had to ask for £2,618,000. This sum would be absorbed in this way:—"£1,845,000 for the Army, £678,000 for the Navy, £75,000 for the Civil Service, and a balance of nearly £20,000 for winding up the old Abyssinian accounts." Nor was this all. The right hon. Baronet intimated that a further vote for the Kaffir War would probably have to be asked for. To gild the pill, the Chancellor of the Exchequer expressed his opinion that this abnormal expenditure had prevented war. To make good the deficiency he proposed to issue Exchequer Bonds to the amount of £2,000,000; and before March next it might be necessary to renew the £2,750,000 of Exchequer Bonds which would then fall due. This putting off for to-morrow what he thought should be done to-day did not satisfy Mr. Childers, who went through the multiplication-table to show that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was establishing a dangerous precedent. Mr. Gladstone, in a brief and effective speech, indorsed the protest of Mr. Childers. Sir Stafford Northcote, in reply, justified the action of the Government; and, after a time, the resolution was agreed to. But a storm was brewing in the last stage of the discussion. Major O'Gorman was seen to be in a state of ferment. Angry exclamations came from the hon. and gallant member. His excitement grew and grew until it culminated in a series of persistent interruptions of Colonel Stanley whilst the Secretary for War was engaged in explaining to Major Nolan the present position of the Reserve men. "Hear, hear!" thundered out the Major every other moment. Though called to order by the Speaker, he resolutely defended his right "to cry, 'Hear, hear,' after every comma, after every semicolon, that is spoken by the hon. and gallant member." This opinion Major O'Gorman stoutly adhered to in spite of remonstrance after remonstrance. He thus brought down upon himself a severe punishment. He was actually "named" by the Speaker. Any ordinary being would, it might have been imagined, have sunk through the floor at this humiliation. But the Major is not by any means an ordinary being. He was in a mood not to be affected either by being "named" or by being asked "to withdraw" on the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. At length he rose with deliberation, bowed to the Speaker, and left the House still considering what should be done with so high and mighty an offender. Before the adjournment, however, £3,185,000 was voted to Colonel Stanley for transport and other services.

The Major being duly penitent on Wednesday morning, the hon. and gallant member was, at the request of Mr. O'Sullivan, invited to re-enter the House. The Sergeant-at-Arms duly escorted Major O'Gorman in; and the gallant Major smoothed the ruffled feelings of everyone, as the Speaker, Sir Stafford Northcote, and the Marquis of Hartington acknowledged. The apology gravely read by Major O'Gorman, was as follows:—

> Mr. Speaker,—Sir: I beg leave to submit myself to you and this honourable House to express my deep regret at the occurrence which took place last night, and to hope that you and this honourable House will accept my apology (Cheers). I trust I may be allowed to add that I acted under the greatest possible exasperation. That, however, is not now the question. What I offer you and this honourable House is an expression of my deepest regret (Hear, hear).

Mr. Dilwyn then fruitlessly endeavoured to get a Committee on the Civil Service Estimates appointed; Mr. Hayter vainly sought to reduce the Cyprus vote by £25,000, but the Marquis of Hartington succeeded in inducing Colonel Stanley to be less reticent with regard to the island; and various Civil Service votes were easily sanctioned.

There was little worth recording in the proceedings of the House on Thursday. The appointment of the Marquis of Lorne to the Governorship of Canada necessitated the motion for a new writ for the election of a representative of Argyleshire in his stead. Mr. Cross brought up a report of the Committee appointed to consider the question of the representation of the county of Clare, Sir Bryan O'Loghlin, who had been elected as one of the members for that county, having subsequently accepted the office of Attorney-General in Victoria. The report stated that, in the opinion of the Committee, the seat ought not to be declared vacant until the hon. Baronet had had an opportunity of appearing before it, and that the Committee ought to be reappointed next Session for that purpose. On the motion, then, of Mr. Cross it was agreed upon that an address be presented to the Crown praying that the report be communicated by the Colonial Secretary to Sir B. O'Loghlin. In reply to Mr. Gregory, Mr. Talbot said that a circular had been sent by the Board of Trade to the railway companies with respect to the adoption of continuous footboards. Mr. Cross informed Sir E. Wilmott that he hoped to be able to frame a bill for the appointment of a Public Prosecutor, to be considered next Session. In reply to questions from Mr. Anderson and Mr. Whitwell, Lord J. Manners said that the question of a syllable or letter scale of charge for telegrams had been carefully considered, but serious practical difficulties prevented its adoption. The International Postal Congress was held in Paris in May and June last, and the Telegraphic Congress would be held in London in the course of next year. With respect to assimilating the rates from the Continent to London and the provinces he was in communication with the foreign Governments, and he hoped that the result would be satisfactory, although he could not give a positive assurance. Several motions relating chiefly to Naval matters were discussed throughout the night, occasioning the postponement to a late hour of the Committee of Supply, and thus disconcerting the arrangements of the Government, who are unable to wind up the Session until the last vote is taken.

Tuesday's Gazette contains the official announcement of the appointment of Dr. John Sibbald to be one of the paid Commissioners in Lunacy for Scotland.

ECHOES FROM ABROAD.

Hôtel Bien Secret, Boulevard Cache-Cache,
Paris, Aug. 7.

No; my good friends in the Straits of Malacca; no, my amiable correspondents from the Bight of Benin, the Desert of Gobi, and Lake Mumphremagog; no, dear ladies who have just published three-volume novels which you wish me to review (I am not a reviewer), or volumes of poems (I have no poetry in my soul), or ballads and waltzes (I can neither sing nor play); no, my excellent friends who demand cures for warts, the etymology of the word "cockroach," the address of a new laundry (I have done, for ever, with the washerwomen), prescriptions to the Bluecoat School, situations as shorthand-writing secretaries, bundles of foreign postage-stamps (with a few autographs of Shakspeare, the Earl of Beaconsfield, and Mr. Henry Irving thrown in) for a fancy fair;—you will not for some weeks be in a position to be, epistolarily speaking, "down" on me. I have quitted the land which gave me birth, and have withdrawn myself to the Continent. Nobody (save the French police, who know everything) is aware of my precise address in Paris. The Hôtel Bien Secret is a subterfuge: the Boulevard Cache-Cache is a blind. Many storeys high, in a remote quarter of Lutetia, I lie perdu, keeping myself studiously aloof from my compatriots, who, in their thousands, are patronising the Grand Hôtel, the Louvre, and the Lille et Albion. I don't want to meet in the Rue de Rivoli, or in the Boulevard de Capucins, the estimable, but too friendly, folk whom I met last week in Pall-mall or the Strand. When I go to the Exhibition I shall put on a pair of green spectacles and a false nose—a nose of a pale hue.

Do you blame me? Do you grudge me my retirement? Since I came home from the Conference at Constantinople, in April, 1877, I have never been further from London than Brighton; and in the course of fifteen months I have had just seven entirely free Saturdays for rest and quiet. And now—joy! joy!—the post will not come in, for me; I shall not read (with a pair of scissors in one hand and a paste-brush in the other) the English newspapers. The French journals (delightful thought!) can all be skimmed in half an hour while you are sipping your "mazagran" or your "Bavarosse au chocolat" in front of the Café des Ténébres. I am not afraid of sitting outside the Café des Ténébres, because it is miles away from the English quarter, and is frequented mainly by French commercial travellers. They will take me for an English bagman. Pleasant incognito!

I hope that the servants at home will not fight over the apportionment of their board wages. I think that the greengrocer has been settled with; and as for the milkman, he must be patient until September. On one point my mind is quite at ease. I have been (since the elopement of "Ginger," a little old red tom-cat that I much prized) quite catless and dogless, and I know that I have left no four-footed friends behind me to be neglected or, worse, utterly starved. I don't think I ever saw a wofuller sight than one which I came across three days before I left town in Grosvenor-square. On the doorstep of a lordly mansion in that patrician locality—a grand house, with the shutters from attic to basement securely closed—there sat, looking infinitely disconsolate, a large, sleek tabby, with gooseberry eyes. The cat evidently belonged to the house; the family had as evidently left town for the autumnal recess; and I want to know what is to become of that tabby with the gooseberry eyes. How many days will pass before the poor creature is reduced to a skeleton, and die of inanition on a dunghill, to be skinned, perchance, by some fur-hunting harridan?

Mem: It is computed that in Paris six thousand dogs have been hanged or poisoned this week through the merciful resolve of their owners not to subject the animals to the torture of the strap-muzzle, the use of which has just been prescribed by an ordinance of the Prefect of Police. If plenty of water were provided in the streets for dogs there would be no need at all for muzzles, not even in the modified form of the wire "strawberry pottle," or the "shovel," which last protrudes from beneath the animal's lower jaw, and both of which permit him to open his mouth freely, while they prevent him from biting.

There is something, after all, in being candid, even if the candour amount mainly to a confession of roguery. What do you think of the following morsel of cool impudence from a Parisian paper:—

AVIS AUX CAPITALISTES.

JOUEUR acc: à Monaco pe. ½ des benef. 250 au Fig.

This is intended to read, I suppose, "Un joueur accompagnerait une personne à Monaco sous la condition de recevoir un tiers des bénéfices gagnés. S'adresser 250 au bureau du Figaro." A gambler wishes to accompany a person to Monaco on condition of receiving one third of his winnings! But what are you to do with your gambler if, after having been foolish enough to take him to Monaco, or, rather, Monte Carlo, and to supply him with money to play with, you discover that there are no winnings, but rather the reverse? Are you entitled to beat or kick your gambler to the extent, say, of two thirds of your losses?

The rare event has occurred of the elevation of a young lady to the rank of a Knight of the Legion of Honour. The last lady so favoured was, I believe, Mademoiselle Rosa Bonheur, the famous painter, to whose breast the Cross of the Legion was pinned by the august hands of the Empress Eugénie herself, during the absence in Algeria of Napoleon III. in 1864. "My husband," said the Empress to the delighted artist, "has appointed me Regent; and this is the first act of my Regency." Several Sisters of Charity earned by their courage and devotion the military medal during the war of 1870; but the higher distinction of the Legion has now been conferred on Mademoiselle Dodu, telegraphic operator at the station of Montreuil-sous-Bois. This heroic maiden intercepted a telegram dispatched from the Prussian head-quarters to the General of an outlying division, and thus prevented the destruction of half a dozen French regiments. She was taken prisoner by the Germans, tried by court-martial, and condemned to death; but the capitulation of Paris and the signing of the preliminaries of peace saved her life. Very richly has Mademoiselle Dodu earned the Cross of the Legion, with its proud legend, "Honneur et Patrie."

The Greek press has not yet arrived at such a degree of culture as to be aware that the Earl of Beaconsfield's title is (in defiance of the suggestions of spelling) pronounced "Beconsfield." In a recent number of the "Ephemeris" of Athens I find the Premier mentioned as "O Komes Beekonsphild," thus lengthening the e where it should be short, and shortening it where it should be long. Lord Salisbury's name seems to be even more puzzling to the editor of the "Ephemeris." The noble co-Plenipotentiary is called "O Markisios Soalsburu." The Greek u is, of course, pronounced as the Latins pronounce i and as we pronounce e; but Romaic has no sound answering to the first syllable in "Salisbury" which we (again in defiance of the suggestions of spelling) pronounce "Saulsbury." And yet we don't say "Saul-volatile." We do say that a singer with an "alto" and another with a "contralto" voice sang before an "altar" placed in an "alcove" at "St. Albans." When shall we have a "Pronunciation Congress?"

There is a gentleman attached to the Paris Figaro, who writes under the signature of "Jean de Paris," who is good enough to volunteer to give his readers every day in the week "a piece of good advice." I note one of his latest examples of un conseil par jour. It is an infallible cure for corns. Take the herb chervil when it is in flower, and rub the afflicted parts with the flowers and the leaves thereof. When the winter comes you will find that a perfect cure has been effected. This is all very well; but who ever saw the herb chervil out of a greengrocers' in Covent-garden market? I am speaking, of course, of metropolitan sufferers from corns. On the whole, I shrink from placing entire confidence in "Jean de Paris," who, in alluding to some "good advice" which he had given as to the removal of ink-stains from linen by means of cyanide of potassium, confesses that he omitted to state that the chemical preparation in question is a deadly poison, which must be used with great caution. As a rule, "good advice" is as difficult to give as it is to follow.

Workpeople on strike are, as a rule, accustomed to dilate more on the Rights of Man than on those of animals; but it is refreshing to find that the five thousand and odd hackney-carriage drivers on strike in Paris have something to say, not only on behalf of themselves, but of their horses. The men plead that the cattle supplied by the Compagnie Générale des Voitures are miserably fed and more miserably lodged. Sour maize, dessicated beans, and mouldy hay form the fare of the poor brutes; and in their stalls there is no better litter than sawdust, which is usually in a state of semi-fermentation. Formerly, the litter was even worse, being composed of an abominable stuff called mâche-fer, the cinders or scorie of coke furnaces. These wretchedly treated horses are out sixteen hours a day; and the drivers are bound to pay the Company the exorbitant sum of thirty-two francs before they can earn a penny for themselves. In London, I believe, the cab-master only exacts fourteen shillings a day from his drivers; and, moreover, he allows them to change horses in the middle of the day.

Alarming reports have been in circulation during the last few days touching the health of Victor Hugo. The fact is that the illustrious poet and novelist has been working a great deal too hard these three months past. The labours arising from the celebration of the Voltaire Centenary and the International Literary Congress have fairly worn him out; and on two or three occasions lately he has shown signs of mental excitement, causing much anxiety to his family. It was thought best that, during the intense summer heats, the aged poet (he is now seventy-six) should not be exposed, night after night, to the worry of "receiving" the company who, from all parts of the world, have flocked to his salon; so Victor Hugo has wisely determined to take change of air, and is now at his beautiful and healthful residence, Hauteville House, Guernsey.

G. A. S.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We cannot say that the programme on the Goodwood Cup day was a very grand one. True, there were no less than thirteen races set down for decision; but we never saw a card more suggestive of matches and walks-over, and, as was anticipated, eight of the events produced exactly seventeen starters, and one was off by consent. Lollypop (9 st. 1 lb.) fairly ran away from his field in the Chichester Stakes, at which his backers for the Steward's Cup, on the first day, looked more melancholy than ever. The withdrawal of Verneuil, Lord Clive, and Hampton from the Goodwood Cup deprived us of what had promised to be one of the most interesting events of the season, and left it to be fought out between Pageant, Kincsem, and Lady Golightly. The old horse never looked better in his life, while Lord Falmouth's filly appeared as muscular again as she was at Ascot, and Kincsem's condition reflected great credit upon Hesp, her trainer. Strangely enough, the last named was the worst favourite of the three, and 5 to 4 was freely accepted about Pageant before the fall of the flag. He showed the way at a mere canter for about a mile, when the pace improved considerably, and he held a lead of fully half a dozen lengths. Lady Golightly, who was last throughout, was hopelessly beaten before turning into the straight, shortly after which Kincsem, who was ridden in rather eccentric fashion, headed Pageant and won very easily by a couple of lengths. Captain Machell was anxious to purchase her after the race, but, naturally, did not feel disposed to give £10,000, the price asked, and nothing has yet come of a proposal of Lord Falmouth's to match Silvio against her. The Singleton Stakes undoubtedly produced the best race of the day, as the opposition of such flyers as Lollypop, Dalham, Trappist, and Placida, over the new mile, created the greatest excitement. The distance was further than Trappist cares to travel, but, jumping off with the lead, he made play at such a pace that nothing could ever catch him. He ran again on the following day, but could not give 13 lb. to Ecossais; and the success of Midlothian (7 st. 10 lb.) in the Chesterfield Cup showed that the Duke of Hamilton made little mistake in his Steward's Cup tactics. Mr. Cartwright had a well-deserved turn of luck with Eau de Vie and Caerau, and the former, who was a good deal fancied for the Oaks, disposed of Priscillian and Clementine in such style that she will find a few backers for the St. Leger.

The second half of the Sussex fortnight commenced at Brighton on Tuesday, when the sport was fully up to the average. Only six came out for the Stakes, of whom Shillelagh (6 st. 7 lb.) was made favourite; but he performed just as he did at Goodwood, looking all over a winner until called upon for a final effort, and then declining to make the least struggle, which left the finish to Don Carlos (6 st. 7 lb.) and Garbroch (7 st. 1 lb.), the former winning cleverly. The antagonism of Rayon d'Or and White Poppy in the Corporation Stakes produced some very heavy wagering; but the Goodwood winner completely failed to give 10 lb. to Mr. Gee's smart filly, who is a daughter of Winslow and Formosa. On Wednesday Kaleidoscope began well for Lord Rosebery, his new owner, by securing the Ovingdean Plate; and Ventnor, the champion of selling platers, took his sixth race in succession, and was bought in for 600 gs. A field of six ran for the Cup, and Julius Cæsar was nearly as good a favourite as Pageant, although he had knocked himself about when at exercise on the previous day, and, moreover, has never performed well over this course. A long way from home Pageant had matters all his own way, and finally won with such ridiculous ease that Kincsem's performance of last week looks better than ever.

We regret to say that the remarkable depression in the prices of blood stock which has prevailed during the last few weeks still continues, for on Saturday last thirty-five youngsters bred by Mr. Carew-Gibson at Sandgate were sacrificed at an average of 169 gs., which shows a sad falling off of 120 gs. from last year's average. A colt by Adventurer—Cantinière (660 gs.) and a colt by Hermit—Post Haste (640 gs.) were at the head of the poll; but both these youngsters ought to have gone to four figures, and most of the others were sadly too cheap for the breeder.

Drawn matches have been rather frequent in the cricketing world of late, owing partly to the recent heavy downfalls of rain and partly to the absurdly late hour at which it is customary to begin play. Notts v. Gloucestershire terminated in this unsatisfactory manner. Mr. W. G. Grace (116) made his largest score for the present season, and the Rev. H. Smith (56) also did well; while, for Notts, Oscroft (53), Flowers (57), and Barnes (not out, 56) all scored freely. Thanks mainly to the fine bowling of Mycroft, who took eleven wickets, Derbyshire has beaten Yorkshire by seven runs: no one did much with the bat. Surrey has defeated Sussex by nine wickets, in spite of the excellent play of Mr. H. Whitfield (64); on the other side, Jupp (98) and Mr. J. Shuter (not out, 44) did most of the run-getting, the professional's innings being the best that he has played for some little time. The Canterbury week, which up to the time of writing has been as brilliant as ever, commenced with Eleven of England v. Thirteen of Kent. The Eleven lacked the invaluable assistance of Mr. A. G. Steel, and could hardly be called a representative one; still we did not expect to see Kent win by nine wickets; Hearne (83) and Lord Harris (93) played in grand style. Shrewsbury (43), Midwinter (44), and Mr. A. W. Ridley (41 and 44) did most for England.

Captain Bogardus and Mr. Aubrey Coventry shot their great match at 100 pigeons for £1000 on Tuesday last. We append the full score:—

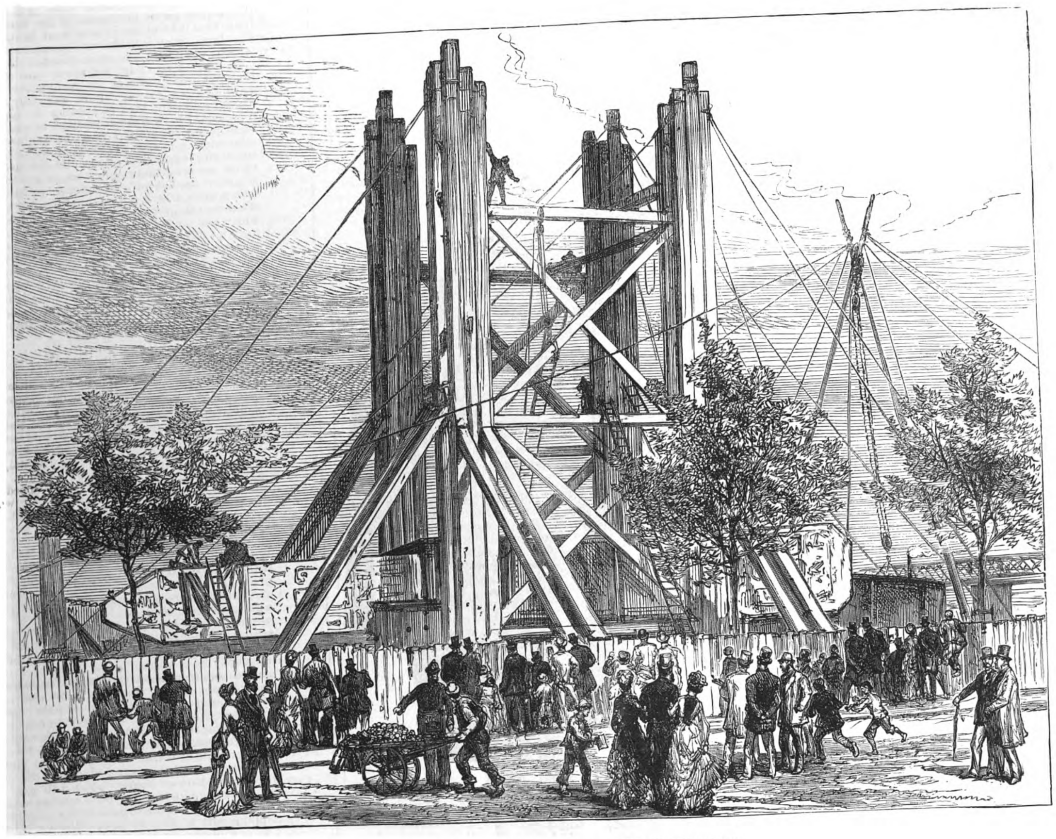
It will be seen that the contest was a wonderfully even one, neither ever leading by more than two birds; and, at last, the American champion secured the heavy stake by a single bird. We understand that a return match is likely to be arranged.

The close time for wild fowl is varied in the county of Cumberland so as to be from March 1 to Aug. 1; and in the liberty of Pevensey from Feb. 15 to Aug. 1 in each year.

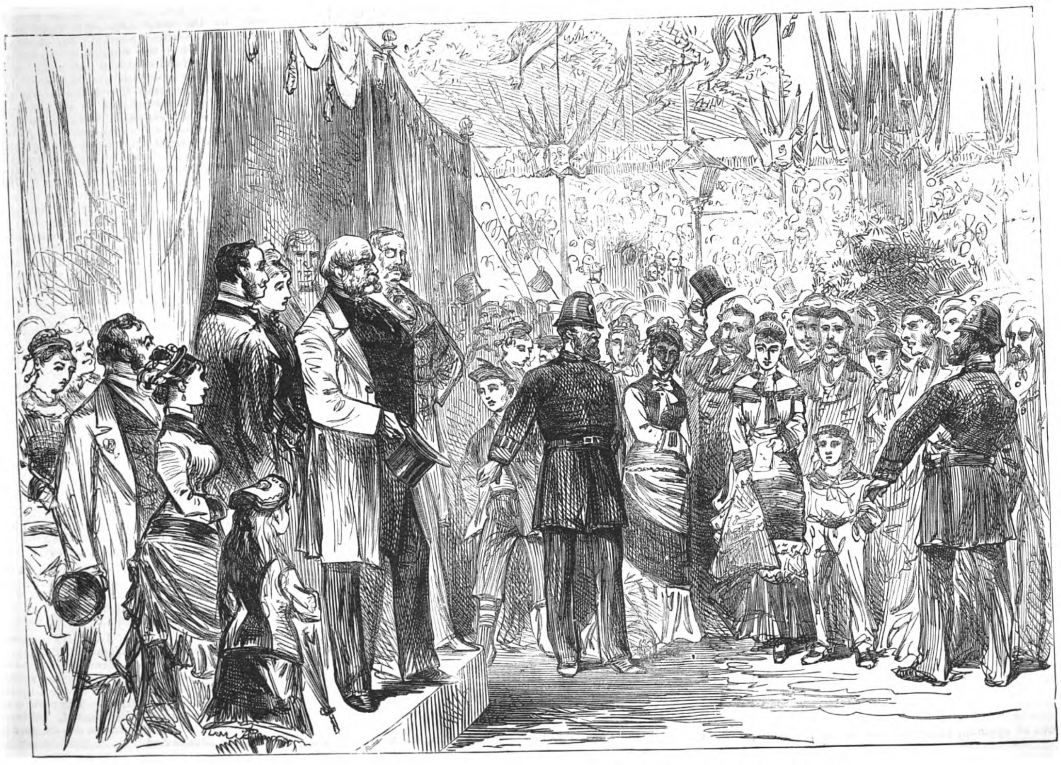
A great meeting of bicyclists took place at Coventry on Monday. A procession, consisting of several hundred bicycle riders from various parts of the Midlands, was formed at midday, and proceeded through the city. The streets through which the procession passed were lined with spectators. Bicycle and athletic contests followed.—At Molyneux Grounds, Wolverhampton, on the same day, the usual bicycle contests were held, and £80 were distributed in prizes. There were nearly ten thousand spectators.—A meet of bicyclists took place at Canterbury on Monday. Nearly every club in Kent was represented, and there were many visitors from distant parts. At noon a procession was formed near the Kent and Canterbury hospital, and a run made through the principal streets of the city.

The annual meeting of the members of the Royal Yacht Squadron was held on Monday afternoon at the Castle, Cowes, for the purpose of electing new members and transacting other business. The Earl of Wilton, commodore, presided; the vice-chair being taken by the Marquis of Londonderry, vice-commodore. The Prince of Wales, attended by Lord Suffield, was amongst the early arrivals. The following new members were elected:—Lord Middleton, the Lady Elsie; Mr. F. Ellis, the Free Lance; the Earl of Ranfurly, the Walrus yawl, and the Marquis of Stafford, the Menai yawl. Commander Darwin, R.N., and Commander Bambridge, R.N., were elected honorary members. Mr. Ashbury, Mr. Sheddon, Colonel Sterling, and Lord Bury were appointed as the Sailing Committee. In the evening a house dinner was given at the Squadron Castle to the Prince of Wales, who was accompanied by Lord Suffield and attended by Captain Stevenson, Equerry in Waiting. The Earl of Wilton, commodore, presided, and the vice-commodore, the Marquis of Londonderry, occupied the vice-chair. The company numbered about twenty. The regatta began on Tuesday with the race for her Majesty's Cup. The yachts entered were the Hildegarde, Enchantress, Shark, Gwynfa, Ayacanora, Nixia, Iris, Aline, Vol-au-Vent, Egeria, and Formosa. The Prince of Wales was on board his yacht, the Hildegarde. The Enchantress came in first, but the Formosa wins the prize by time allowance. The race on Wednesday was by yawls of not less than 30 tons, for the Squadron Prize of £100. The Corisande came in first, but the Jullanar, the third in order of arrival, won by time allowance. In the evening there was a grand display of fireworks by Mr. J. Pain. Many thousands of persons came from various parts of the island to see them. The Prince and Princess of Wales and their two sons came to the castle between nine and ten o'clock. The race on Thursday was for a cup, value £100, given by the inhabitants of Cowes, for cutters of not less than 200 tons belonging to any Royal yacht club. The following were the entries:—Arrow, 115 tons, Mr. T. Chamberlayne; Myosotis, 40 tons, Mr. H. D. McMaster; Neva, 65 tons, Mr. F. Cox; Vol-au-Vent, 104 tons, Colonel Markham; Formosa, 103 tons, Mr. F. S. Stanley: a time race. The Town Cup, after a fine race, was won by the Vol-au-Vent, beating the Formosa by 1 min. 32 secs. On Friday a prize of £100 was to be sailed for by schooner yachts of any Royal Yacht Club, and the Town Regatta was to take place.



In consequence of the naval review at Spithead having been fixed for Tuesday, Aug. 13, the yacht races of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club (Ryde), advertised for that day, have been postponed.

Captain Webb made an attempt, yesterday week, to swim in the Thames for thirty-six consecutive hours, between Woolwich and Gravesend, going with and turning with the tide. He swam from Woolwich as far as the Chichester training-ship, and then returned to Woolwich, where, on account of the strong wind and rough water, he went on shore, having been in the river upwards of nine hours and swum twenty-two miles.



Sir J. Goldsmid, the senior member for Rochester, has promised 500 guineas towards the expenses of a free library for the city, providing the citizens will adopt the Free Libraries Act, which they have hitherto been unwilling to do.

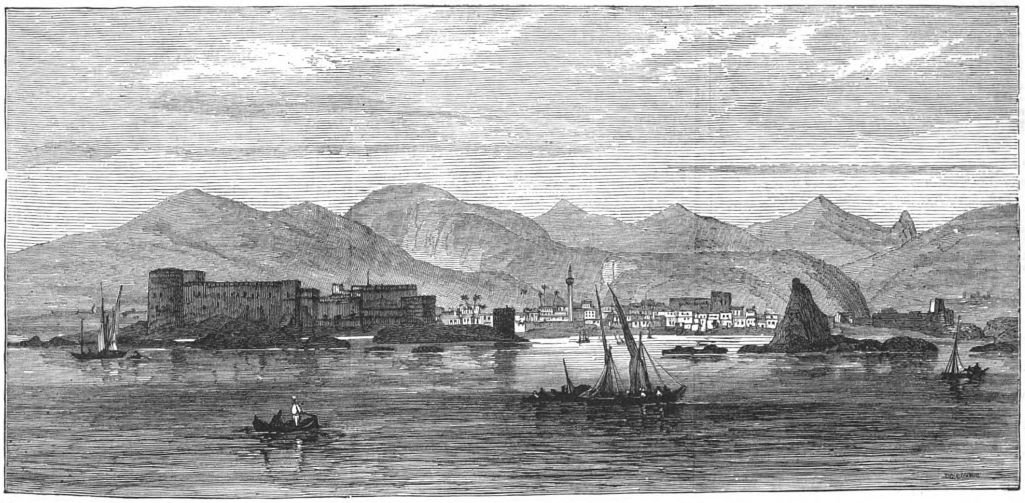
The training-ship Shaftesbury, off Grays, has been certified as an industrial school for the reception of not more than 350 boys. The new premises at Dartford of the St. Vincent's Industrial School for Roman Catholic boys has been certified as an industrial school for the reception of 200 in-boys.

Mr. N. Eckersley, High Sheriff of Lancashire, opened the first public park in the borough of Wigan on Monday. The greater portion of the land was given to the town by Mr. Eckersley, who bought it from the Rector and patron for £2000, and the grounds have been laid out by the Corporation, from designs by Mr. Maclean, of Derby. The park is nearly thirty acres in extent, and is centrally situated. A luncheon was afterwards given in the Free Grammar School, and in the evening the park was illuminated.

RAISING CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE ON THE THAMES EMBANKMENT.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE OPENING THE NEW BRIDGE AT GLOUCESTER-GATE, REGENT'S-PARK.

STATUE OF CAPTAIN COOK.



It was on April 28, 1770, that the coast of New South Wales was discovered by Lieutenant James Cook, of the Royal Navy, commanding the Endeavour, a small vessel equipped to convey Sir Joseph Banks and Dr. Solander on a voyage of scientific observation concerning astronomy and natural history in the southern hemisphere. The ship entered a haven, which they called Botany Bay, six miles south of Port Jackson, now the magnificent harbour of the city and commercial port of Sydney. The north and west coasts of the vast island of New Holland, which is nearly as large as the Continent of Europe without its peninsulas, had been visited by the Portuguese and the Dutch in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, but the eastern shore, to which Cook gave the name of New South Wales, and of which he took possession for King George III., had never been seen before. Captain Cook revisited New South Wales a few years afterwards, and made further discoveries, which induced the British Government to send out an expedition to colonise that distant land. It was only a penal settlement for convicts from England that was then designed to be established. A fleet of transport-vessels and store-ships, with 200 Royal Marines and 750 convicts, of whom 200 were women, arrived there in January, 1778. But that was the beginning of a colony which has grown up and branched out into the noble group of British Australian Provinces, New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania, and West Australia, already the home of two millions of our countrymen, whose rapid advance in prosperity and social improvement must be regarded with unmixed satisfaction. The mother colony, as New South Wales is sometimes called, was for a time outstripped in wealth and population by the province of Victoria, but is now again taking the lead, and seems likely to keep it, having a greater variety of minerals, abundant coal and iron, and superior facilities of manufacturing and maritime enterprise. The capital city, Sydney, has above 170,000 inhabitants, with many fine public buildings; while its natural advantages of situation are not surpassed by any city in the world. During thirty years past its citizens have entertained the wish to have a statue of Captain Cook. At length, as the public subscriptions reached a considerable sum, the first step was taken in deciding upon the place for it and commencing the work. The site chosen was on the high ground where the Museum stands, enabling the monument to be seen from afar, as ships of all nations enter the harbour of Sydney. Here a grey granite pedestal has been erected of the handsomest kind, 21 ft. high, suitable for such a colossal figure. A model was made, we believe, by the late Mr. Nicholl, of Sydney; but, partly in consequence of his death and partly from the money subscribed privately having been expended upon the pedestal, the work remained in abeyance until late years, when the Colonial Government took it up with the determination of completing it. Sir Alfred Stephen, as chairman of the committee charged with the work, took an active part, with Mr. Parkes and other gentlemen, in forwarding the undertaking. Dr. Woolley, the late distinguished Principal of the College of Sydney, who unhappily perished in the wreck of the London when returning from his visit to England, should also not be forgotten. It was chiefly through his influence that the commission was intrusted to Mr. Woolner, R.A. The statue is now to be seen in Waterloo-place, on the south side of Pall-mall, between the United Service Club and the Athenæum Club, and a little way behind the Guards' Crimean Monument, looking up towards Regent-street. Its temporary pedestal here is about 10 ft. or 11 ft. high; and we can readily believe that this colossal statue, though a most impressive figure, will be much more imposing on the higher pedestal prepared for it. "The attitude is striking and vigorous," it has been remarked, "with the right hand raised high in the air in a moment of immense delight at having caught sight of land after watching through the early dawn of morning, strong in his belief that land was there, the telescope being held in the left as no longer necessary. The fine head is most expressive and characteristic of the keen observer and dauntless discoverer, in the massive brow with deep furrows at the temple and strongly-moulded nose and chin. There is no stronger point in the statue than this preservation of likeness on such a colossal scale; and so just are the proportions of the figure in the body and the limbs that it looks the hero without being a giant. The dress, which is in the well-known naval uniform of the day, with the open-breasted broad-tailed coat, the long flap waistcoat, and the knee-breeches, with shoes, is remarkable for good work, falling to the figure naturally, and not ungracefully, the gold lace being to some extent represented by a lighter-coloured bronze. But all these points of detail are quite unobtrusive, and subservient completely to the noble air of brave self-confidence expressed in the intellectual countenance, the broad and vigorous frame, and the general action of the figure." The statue, we believe, was first modelled in the nude, and to full scale, and afterwards draped with the clothes. This method, which has not been generally followed, recommends itself as the only one that can be successful in representing a living figure. The statue is true to the style of bronze, and possesses the intensity and seriousness of monumental work in a degree rarely observable in modern sculpture. The casting of the statue, which was rather an arduous task, was executed by Mr. Cox, of the Thames Ditton Works.

STATUE OF CAPTAIN COOK FOR NEW SOUTH WALES, BY T. WOOLNER, R.A.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.

The Egyptian obelisk called by this name, which Mr. John Dixon, civil engineer, has brought from Alexandria to be erected in London, at the cost of a munificent individual benefactor of the public, Mr. Erasmus Wilson, the eminent surgeon, is now visible to all passers-by on the Thames Embankment, and will soon be reared aloft upon its pedestal, at the riverside steps opposite Adelphi-terrace. It still rests in a horizontal position, but stripped of the iron-plate casing that formed the vessel in which its adventurous voyage was performed, upon a solid timber framework over the granite base, 16 ft. square and 6 ft. high, but rising only 4 ft. above the level of the Embankment, supporting the pedestal and the two plinths at the sides. The operations of lifting the obelisk to the required height, then depressing one end so as to render it perpendicular, and finally planting its lower end upon the pedestal, will soon commence, and are expected to require several weeks before all is complete. The plan for raising may be here described. The column will be fitted with a powerful iron jacket as near the centre of gravity as is wanted; and this jacket has two massive iron trunnions, just like the trunnions of a great gun. These trunnions will rest on two wrought iron girders of great strength; and the whole will then resemble a monster cannon on a slide without wheels. Each of the four main uprights of the staging consists of six sticks of timber, each 1 ft. square. The iron jacket, consisting of plates and girders, is being fixed round the central portion of the obelisk. The wrought-iron "strap" which will pass under the butt end of the obelisk from two opposite sides of this jacket (in order to prevent the monolith from slipping out) is of ¾-in. metal and 24 in. broad. One end of the column being raised by hydraulic presses a sufficient height—say a foot—it will be kept so raised by a powerful balk of timber slid under it. The other end will then be similarly treated, and thus, slowly but surely, it will ascend foot by foot, shored up with timber at every stage, laid in a way which will best insure the stability of the whole structure. The jacket, it is thought, will clip the stone sufficiently tight to hold it when in a vertical position; but during the few minutes it will be suspended vertically before being lowered to its base, it will stand in the iron strap as if in a stirrup, and the more its weight presses on the strap the tighter it will make the jacket grip. The column, as we have explained, will be hoisted horizontally, but when it has reached the required height the supports under the base will be removed, and the base being slightly in excess of the rest (2½ tons), the whole stone will slowly revolve on the trunnions till it hangs direct over its appointed spot, and about four inches above it. Then, by simply turning on the taps of the hydraulic presses, the column will sink into its base in about two minutes. A small gap will be left in the centre of the base, so as to enable the iron band to be removed, but when this is done and the gap filled up with granite blocks all will be completed. The weight of the column is about 200 tons, and the pedestal and plinths are about the same weight, making a pressure of one ton and a half to the square foot on the foundations. The apex of the stone, when erected, will be about 30 ft. higher than the upright main timbers of the scaffolding. Instead of raising the obelisk in a horizontal position for the entire height necessary to allow it to turn on the trunnions of the iron jacket to a vertical position, the expediency of allowing the butt-end to trail the ground, or rather a platform to be erected for the purpose, is being discussed. By this means its perpendicularity would gradually increase with the height to which the girders supporting the trunnions were raised, until, when they had reached the maximum altitude required, the monolith would have acquired a perpendicular position by the mere force of gravity; the iron jacket encompassing the central portion of the obelisk being, of course, so placed as to allow of the preponderating weight of the butt-end of the obelisk asserting itself. This modification of the plan has been suggested by those who entertain doubts as to the capability of the scaffolding to sustain the operation of turning the entire mass on the pivots or trunnions at a considerable height. These doubts are not entertained by Mr. Dixon, the engineer directing the works; and if the proposed deviation of plan is made, it will only be with the view of making assurance doubly sure. The full-sized cast which is being taken for the South Kensington Museum is making good progress. A portion of the pyramidion has been washed and coated with a solution composed, it is stated, of beeswax dissolved in spirits of wine. Its application has had the effect of showing the reseate colour of the granite, and the tone of the small portion of the obelisk so treated is in pleasing contrast with the dirty grey aspect of the monolith generally. The height of the pedestal will be about the same as that of the top of the ornamental lamps which stand on the Embankment wall. The inscription to be placed on the pedestal is, we believe, not yet determined upon.

KYRENIA, CYPRUS

NEW BRIDGE IN REGENT'S PARK.

The new bridge over the Regent's Canal, at the Gloucester-gate entrance to Regent's Park from Camden Town, near the Albany-street Cavalry Barracks, and leading to the Zoological Society's Gardens, was opened last Saturday by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, as Ranger of Regent's Park. It is a great improvement on the old bridge, which, besides being unsightly, was latterly unsafe. Mr. Gerard Noel, First Commissioner of Works, laid the first stone of this one just a year ago, so that no time has been lost in effecting the change. Instead of the narrow and inconvenient brick arch, there is now a much more ornamental structure, the appearance of which is further embellished by the red stone used for the abutment piers and wing walls. The new bridge is of iron, with a width of 60 ft. between the parapets; wood has been used for the carriage-way and asphalte for the footways. Mr. Booth Scott is the architect. The chief feature, however, of the new bridge consists of four terra-cotta groups of statuary by Signor Fucigna, placed on pedestals at the end of the wing walls, and representing soldiers, athletes, fisher-maidens, and flower-maidens respectively. In the four principal buttresses of the bridge are massive wrought lamps of real bronze. The pedestals are angulated and tapering, with sunk panels, almost concealed, however, by a profusion of leaves and blossoms in cast and wrought bronze, modelled from the lily and acanthus. The lamps were modelled and carried out to the architect's design by Messrs. Gardner, of the Strand, at their new branch works in St. Martin's-lane. It is believed that they are by far the largest and most elaborate lamps ever produced in bronze in England. Mr. Booth Scott has seized the opportunity of the alterations connected with the Gloucester-gate bridge to substitute a fine-art drinking-fountain for that which has done service there till now. The site having a background of trees, a rustic group has been selected as a subject. Real granite boulders, lichen-stained and weathered, have been specially brought from Cornwall, and form a base for a bronze copy of the late Mr. Joseph Durham's well-known "Sunshine," which has been cast by Messrs. Gardner, at the expense of Mrs. Kent. The figure of the girl is lifesize, the name being given from one of the hands being employed to shield the eyes from the sunshine. The overflowing pitcher is here made to do duty to supply a drinking-place for dogs. The weather on Saturday morning was not favourable for the ceremony, but the approach to the bridge from Gloucester-gate was made as gay as possible with flags and Venetian masts. The ground was kept by guards of honour of the 20th and 29th Middlesex Volunteers. His Royal Highness was received on his arrival by some of the members of the St. Pancras Vestry, and was conducted to a covered dais at one end of the bridge, where the chairman of the Works Committee, Mr. G. F. Baker, read a statement explaining the object and necessity of the new bridge. The Duke then walked across it amid loud cheers, and, returning by way of the new drinking-fountain to the dais, declared the bridge open to the public. After the ceremony the Duke took luncheon with the members of the vestry and their guests at the Zoological Society's Gardens.

On Wednesday the wreck of the Eurydice was again lifted and was removed to the less exposed St. Helen's Roads.

A fire broke out on Wednesday in the proof butts at the Royal Arsenal, and raged until three bays were destroyed.

The Liverpool Town Council have agreed to reinstate in their original rank and pay those members of the local police force who had to leave the service on being called out for duty in the Reserves.

The Newbury Horticultural Society held its annual show of flowers, fruit, and vegetables on Monday. In each department there was a fine display; and among the exhibitors were the Marquis of Donegall, the Earl of Carnarvon, Sir Richard Sutton, and Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, M.P. There was a balloon ascent, and a ball in the Townhall wound up the festivities.

The following is a list of candidates for commissions as surgeons in the medical service of the Royal Navy who were successful at both the London and Netley examinations:—A. W. May, A. J. J. Johnston, A. L. Roe, J. F. O'Donnell, E. R. H. Pollard, F. M. Geoghegan, F. A. Trevan, J. A. Vasey, J. O. B. Williams, S. Keays, and H. G. Daniel.

At the Wesleyan Conference at Bradford on Wednesday, the Rev. John Rattenbury made a statement of the result of his efforts to raise a special sum of £100,000 to augment the scanty annual allowances of superannuated ministers and ministers' widows. His appeals had met with the most liberal response, the first donation of £5000 from the late Mr. James Heald having been followed by £32,000, in £1000 donations. Mr. Rattenbury received the warmest thanks of the Conference.

NEW BOOKS.

A delightful and an elegant intellectual entertainment is provided in The Troubadours, by Francis Hueffer (Chatto and Windus), a handsome, large, well-furnished volume, containing a great deal of what is both profitable and agreeable to read, and impelling the reader to wish fervently for more. The very title is suggestive of all that is gay and chivalrous and romantic and musical; and the author has kindly abstained from writing a scientific treatise upon his subject, such a treatise as might have disappointed the expectations which his title is eminently calculated to excite. Most readers will be glad to learn that "the time for that has not yet come in England," and will hope, perhaps, that it may delay its coming. Not that the author lacks learning or fails to exhibit it; he is evidently brimful of it, as he testifies on nearly every page; and if he holds his hand and lets out from his reservoir not a continuous stream but little intermittent jets of erudition, it is simply, no doubt, out of merciful consideration for his readers, whom he might otherwise overwhelm with a perfect flood of unsuspected knowledge. The book is divided into three parts, which are respectively described as general, biographical, and technical. In the first, or general, part the author discourses about the decline of classic language, its mixture with German dialects, the derivation of Romance languages, the Provençal branch thereof, with its limits, its relations to the sister languages, its dialects, its perfection as displayed in the compositions of the Troubadours, and its decline; about epic and other forms of poetry, the pastorela, the balada, and others; about the social position of Provençal poets, and about the relation in which the joglar, or joculator, stood to the troubadour. In the second, or biographical, part the author sketches rapidly but vividly the prominent incidents and characteristics in the careers and productions of several distinguished troubadours, ladies being included in the number, and briefly mentions his reasons for concluding that the "courts of love," of which we have at different times heard so much, "as established tribunals with written codes, are altogether fictitious," though "amateur societies of that name occur in the late Middle Ages, but chiefly in the north of France." In the third, or technical, part the author, as was naturally to be expected, discloses to a greater extent than elsewhere the cloven hoof of erudition; he assumes, as it were, his academical costume, and delivers himself in true professional style of a lecture upon rhyme and its origin, upon rhythm, and upon the stanza, concluding with "some interlinear versions of Provençal poems," intended chiefly as a rebuke and a warning "addressed to those easy-going amateur philologists who believe themselves able to master a language by simply plunging into its literature without any previous study of grammar or dictionary." It is confidently believed that such self-sufficient persons, if they will honestly and fairly compare the literal versions with the conjectures which they would have made in full reliance upon their familiarity with Latin and the more ordinary Romance languages, will be astonished to find how wide of the mark they would have been, and will be disposed to acknowledge that the original, "owing chiefly to the number of its homonymous words and the somewhat unsettled condition of its grammatical structure, is the most difficult, as it is the earliest, amongst the languages sprung from the Latin stock." One of the most interesting chapters is the eleventh, in which the reader will find an elaborate description of the "sestina," a form of verse invented, it is stated, by Arnaut Daniel, imitated by Dante, and greatly affected, though with much modification of the inventor's scheme, by Mr. Swinburne in both his French and his English examples of ingenious versification. In the tenth chapter there is an account, a very instructive as well as agreeable account, of the "balada," which, however, differs as much from "the 'ballade' made celebrated, although by no means invented, by the genius of Villon," as it differs, on the other hand, from "the 'ballad' of modern parlance." Etymology traces the word to its origin in "bal," which is further preserved in "baladin," signifying, primally, a "ballet-dancer;" so that a "balada" meant, first of all, "a song serving to accompany the dance." Such a song is undoubtedly of high antiquity; it was, perhaps, some sort of "balada" that was sung by Nausicäa and her maidens, if indeed a song were sung at all, as they played their rhythmic game of ball upon the sands and fulfilled their part in Athena's plan for the return of godlike Odysseus. Though the "balada" is generally, as it ought to be, graceful, lively, musical, dance-compelling, so far as the space of words and metre and rhythm is concerned, the subject, in the days of the troubadours, appears to have been but seldom edifying: "it is the ever recurring burden of Provençal poetry; a lady dissatisfied with her husband and openly calling for death to come and kill him soon in order that she may be united to her lover." What was the social position enjoyed or bemoaned by the Provençal poets of the Middle Ages has often been disputed, and the question is discussed at some length in the sixth chapter, in which, if the author does not satisfactorily dispose of the matter, he makes many sensible remarks and mentions certain noticeable facts which undeniably bear upon the subject but do not leave us much wiser than before. "It has been at all times, and is still," he truly observes, "an all but impossible task to define the social position of a literary man, quâ literary man. So much depends upon his success in his profession, his family, his personal bearing, that a general rule can never comprise all individual cases. The same applies to the Provençal poets of the Middle Ages. . . . But in the art of poetry a common ground was, at least, established, where men of all classes met on equal terms, and where the chance of success was little, if at all, furthered by accidental advantages of birth." And he states that "by far the largest proportion of the troubadours known to us—fifty-seven in number—belong to the nobility, not to the highest nobility in most cases, it is true;" and that "in several instances poverty is distinctly mentioned as the cause for adopting the profession of a troubadour." Indeed, from the days of Demodocus, to whom Odysseus was so polite, and complimentary, and deferential, who sat at the same table with kings and princes, and who had a special herald "told off" to attend upon him because the Muse had grudged him eyesight, to the days of Grub-street, society seems to have taken, reasonably enough, the same view of poets and poetry, of literary men and literature; the vocation is one of those "not menial," as the advertisements have it, which a "gentleman" may, if Minerva be not too unwilling, adopt, but the mere adoption of it has no social bearing whatever; it neither elevates nor degrades; it simply does not preclude, or perhaps it may be said rather to qualify conditionally: it may, but it does not necessarily, annihilate social inequalities. "Anch' io sono pittore" is a plea which may sometimes sound absurd, though a territorial king might well feel honoured by the friendship of a Michel Angelo, might well stoop to pick up the pencil of a Rubens. The troubadour, perhaps, is best described as a "privileged" person, for whom there were no hard and fast rules, who, on the one hand, had no rights, quâ troubadour, and, on the other, no disabilities. A very striking and stirring picture is drawn of the fierce warrior, high-born baron, and "gentle" troubadour, Bertran de Born, who was so intimately connected with the continental policy of our Plantagenets; and there is a chapter—far too short a chapter—devoted to the pathetic story of a lady-troubadour, "beautiful Beatrice de Die," who "became enamoured of Rambaut d'Orange, and wrote many fine poems of him." Rambaut was himself a troubadour, as many readers will be well aware, and his poetry exhibits certain peculiarities, as regards coarseness and metrical phenomena, which might lead one to believe that, as there lived brave men before Agamemnon, so there lived eccentric versifiers before Walt Whitman. Rambaut d'Orange was a cold and inconstant lover so far as poor Beatrice de Die was concerned; but the plaintive poems she wrote in consequence might elicit more sympathy, if we were not distinctly informed that she "was the wife of Guillem de Poitou." But so it was in those days; "loyal feeling did not extend to that bugbear and scapegoat of gallant society in Provençe—the husband. No amount of verbal falsehood or hypocrisy was thought unjustifiable in the endeavour to dupe his well-founded suspicion. His resentment of injuries received was, on the other hand, punished by the general interdict of polite society." It is wonderful, under such circumstances, that the "upper ten thousand" did not cease to marry altogether; perhaps considerations of property and rank and connection sufficed to keep the ceremony from becoming altogether obsolete: and there is also to be considered the fact that the troubadours, the Provençal poets and romancers, who are mainly responsible for this representation of conjugal affairs, were remarkable for the use of the longbow and for a tendency towards high colouring. So charming a book really deserved an index: it would have been very useful, and it would have given an air of finish to the volume.

A separate commission of the peace has been granted for the borough of Birkenhead.

The Yorkshire and Lancashire papers report thunderstorms of great severity on Tuesday. Near Warrington a gardener, named John Bostock, was killed by lightning whilst working in a field.—A powder magazine belonging to the Victoria Colliery, at Bruntcliffe, was on Tuesday exploded by lightning, the effect being to lay waste a field of oats, and doing much other serious damage, but causing no loss of life.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the fifth week of July was 76,209, of whom 38,043 were in workhouses and 38,166 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1877, 1876, and 1875 respectively these figures show a decrease of 404, 535, and 6800 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 602, of whom 393 were men, 173 women, and 36 children under sixteen.

A large new dry dock at Newport, in connection with the Alexandria shipping dock, was opened on Tuesday, and the event was celebrated by a banquet at the Royal Albert Hall. The dock is one of the largest in the Bristol Channel. The depth of water over the keel-box will attain a maximum of 20 ft., the minimum being 18 ft. The entrance is 50 ft. wide, while the dock itself is some 56 ft. in width at the base and 74 ft. at the top. It has been constructed by Mr. James Abernethy, C.E., assisted by Mr. Walsh, C.E. The new dock was opened by Lord Tredegar, nearly the whole of the members of the Town Council, besides important inhabitants, being also present.

There were 2637 births and 1877 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 269, and the deaths by 219, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 18 from smallpox, 19 from measles, 26 from scarlet fever, 6 from diphtheria, 89 from whooping-cough, 21 from different forms of fever, and 470 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 649 deaths were referred, against numbers increasing steadily from 215 to 622 in the six preceding weeks. These 649 deaths were 123 above the corrected average numbers. The mean temperature was 60·5 deg., and was 1·8 deg. below the average. The duration of registered sunshine in the week was 30·7 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 107·8 hours. The Registrar-General states that the mean temperature during July at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, averaged 63·1 deg., and was 1·5 deg. above the average July temperature in one hundred years; the mean showed an excess on sixteen days of the month.

The opening day of the show of the Yorkshire Agricultural Society took place at Northallerton on Tuesday. The entries numbered 705, against 602 at York last year. The total prizes offered were £1814, against £1650 last year. There was a good show of cattle, shorthorns especially. Out of nine entries for families of shorthorns, the first prize was awarded to Colonel Loyd-Lindsay's Burlesque and her offspring, and the second to the Marquis of Exeter's Seagull and offspring. For aged shorthorn bulls Mr. Linton's Sir Arthur Ingram was first, and Mr. Willis's Rear-Admiral second. Other winners in the cattle classes were the Duke of Northumberland and the Earl of Ellesmere. In sheep there was a good display in the Leicester and Lincoln classes. The Wensleydale sheep were moderate. Pigs were a good show, including many of the winners at the Royal. The horses judged on Tuesday included thoroughbred and roadster stallions, and part of the hunters; and all the classes were well represented. The chief prizes were awarded—for roadsters to Mr. G. Holmes, for hunting geldings to the Duke of Hamilton, for hunting mares to Mr. Kirby, Northallerton. The implements were very numerous, most leading makers being represented. The council chose Leeds for the next year's show.

The annual United Kingdom Exhibition of Cats and Ladies' Pet Dogs, which on the last occasion was held at the Westminster Aquarium, opened last Saturday at the Crystal Palace. The show was a fully representative one, the 300 and odd entries enumerated in the catalogue comprising specimens of nearly every known breed of the feline race, home and foreign, and of their canine rivals admissible under the conditions of the schedule. It remained open on Monday and Tuesday; and, from the variety and excellence of its contents, the exhibition formed—to the ladies, at any rate—a leading feature of the holiday attractions. In the classes for dogs Mr. Lewis took the principal prize for poodles with an animal named "Sostey," aged three years and ten months, and valued at £1000; whilst in the next class, for poodles or Maltese breeds, Lady Giffard's exhibits were awarded all three of the prizes. For Yorkshire or any other long-haired terriers, Mrs. Monck headed the prize list; and, amongst some very good specimens of spaniels, "Young Jumbo," the property of Mrs. Forder, and announced as the winner of twenty-nine first prizes, won the cup. In the feline section of the exhibition the chief awards were obtained, in the short-haired classes, by Miss Brander's "Puck," a four-year-old blue and silver tabby, and by the Misses Greenwood and Butterworth's tortoiseshell with two kittens; and for long-haired cats by the Rev. W. K. Chafy's "Puff," nine months old, and Miss Hales's "Shirine," with five kittens. The cup offered for the best litter of kittens fell to a Persian cat belonging to Miss Lucie Glenn.

POLITICAL.

Last Saturday the Earl of Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury, the Plenipotentiaries representing the United Kingdom at the Congress of Berlin, were presented with the freedom of the City at Guildhall, and were afterwards entertained by the Lord Mayor at a banquet at the Mansion House.

At the Foreign Office, on Tuesday, the Earl of Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury received addresses from Conservative associations in all parts of the country expressing satisfaction at the result of the Berlin Congress, admiration of the policy of her Majesty's Government, and thanks for the services of the British Plenipotentiaries. About nine hundred gentlemen formed the deputation, many of them being members of Parliament, and their Lordships shook hands with each member of the deputation. This ceremony and handing in the addresses occupied nearly an hour. In his reply, the Earl of Beaconsfield said that since his return to England he had felt that he had been over-rewarded by the generous sympathy of Englishmen. He briefly touched upon the results of the Congress, remarking that he hoped he and Lord Salisbury had brought back not merely an honourable peace, but also the settlement of a great many disquieting subjects which had for years caused anxiety to the civilised world. His Lordship then dwelt upon the necessity for party organisation, showing that it was a great error to suppose that opinion when organised lost something of its genuineness and force. Lord Salisbury said that amidst the constant calumny to which they had had to submit the Plenipotentiaries felt sure the time would come when they would obtain an equitable and intelligent recognition from the country they had served.

The three Lancashire members of the Cabinet—Mr. Cross, Lord Sandon, and the Hon. F. Stanley—have accepted invitations to a civic banquet, to be given by the Mayor of Liverpool on the 21st inst.

At a gathering of the Salford Liberal Association in Chatsworth Park, the seat of the Duke of Devonshire, a resolution was passed last Saturday expressing the gratitude of the meeting to Mr. Gladstone for his able efforts to rescue the country from the loss of constitutional freedom at home and the degradation of the national character abroad, and also tendering to Mr. Gladstone its sympathy in his endurance of the attacks of slanderers, culminating in those of Lord Beaconsfield.

Amongst the Conservative demonstrations on Monday was the meeting of the London and Westminster Working-Men's Constitutional Association in Engiefield Park, near Reading. Mr. J. Talbot, M.P., was amongst those present, and thanked the assembly for their expression of confidence in the Government.—Sir Lawrence Palk, M.P., and Mr. A. Mills, M.P., were the principal speakers at an outdoor gathering of Conservative working men in the neighbourhood of Exeter.—Mr. Hanbury, M.P., and Sir H. Wolff, M.P., attended a Conservative fête held at Bournemouth on Monday.

The Earl of Redesdale, Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, gave his customary sessional dinner at the Trafalgar, Greenwich, on Wednesday evening.

Sir Henry Drummond Wolf, K.C.M.G., M.P., has been appointed British member of the European Commission for the organisation of Eastern Roumelia under the 18th Article of the Treaty of Berlin. He will not be required to vacate his seat in Parliament in consequence of this appointment.

Vice-Admiral G. P. Hornby, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean squadron, has been appointed Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath.

The new department at the Foreign Office devoted to Cyprus has been placed under the superintendence of Mr. Philip Currie.

The Earl of Shaftesbury writes to the Times that he views with horror the inhuman conduct of those who are the conquerors and of those who are entering into the full benefit of the conquests in Turkey. He says it almost leads him to believe that the whole thing has been conceived and executed in sheer hypocrisy:—"The Bulgarians, having prated of civil and religious liberty, are become the fiercest oppressors not only of the Mussulman, but of every large section of the Christian populations. They seem bent on a competition with the Bashi-Bazouks, who so frequently and so effectually ravaged their country. The Russians appealed to the sympathies of Europe as undertaking, single-handed, a war for no other purpose than to put down bloodshed and plunder, and secure to all the inhabitants of the invaded provinces, and specially the Christians, the enjoyment of life, property, and honour. But the reports of her Majesty's Consuls reveal a state of things which is in direct and flagrant contradiction of those professions, and which, if there be any humanity extant, must stir the consciences of all Europe. Such a state of things is discreditable to the Russian soldiery, to those who command them, and, if unchanged, will be discreditable to even the Emperor himself."

A complimentary dinner was given on Wednesday evening at Richmond to Sir E. Hertslet, the Librarian and Keeper of State Papers at the Foreign Office, to celebrate the honour conferred upon him on his return from the Congress at Berlin, where he was a member of the British diplomatic suite.

Under the chairmanship of the Earl of Harrowby, a meeting was held of the Literary Association of Friends of Poland on Wednesday, and a resolution was passed protesting against the action of Russia in suppressing the nationality of the most civilised branch of the Sclavonic race. Among the company present were Baroness Burdett-Coutts and Lady Augusta Poulett.

Lord William Montagu Hay was elected on Saturday last member for the Haddington Burghs, in the place of Sir H. R. Ferguson-Davie. The numbers were announced as follows:—Lord William Hay (Liberal), 881; Sir J. Grant Suttie (Conservative), 651.

The new Governor-General of Canada, the Marquis of Lorne (L), has resigned his seat for Argyleshire. He says that it is only because, through the favour of the Queen, he has now an opportunity of serving a country most dear to all in the United Kingdom, that he resigns the position he has been allowed to occupy. Lord Colin Campbell, who comes forward in the Liberal interest, has been canvassing the county for some days; and agents of the Conservative party have been busy in behalf of Mr. Malcolm, of Poltalloch. The contest is expected to be a keen one, as both parties are said to be strong. There has been no contest since 1837. Mr. Malcolm has issued an address resigning his seat for Boston, in consequence of his contesting Argyleshire. At the time of going to press with our early edition Mr. T. Garnit, a local banker, who has come forward to supply the vacancy in the representation, was the only candidate before the electors. On Tuesday evening the supporters of Mr. Garfit held a meeting in the Corn Exchange. There were about a thousand persons present, and a resolution was adopted in support of the nomination of Mr. Garfit. The nomination will be held to-day.

Mr. Goschen (L) has written to Sir John Lubbock with reference to his resolution to retire from the representation of the City, that, after full and renewed consideration, he cannot feel that he should be right to alter his decision. He adds that neither directly nor indirectly has any pressure been put upon him to follow this course.

Dr. John Hibberd, Deputy-Commissioner in Lunacy, has been appointed Commissioner in Lunacy for Scotland, in room of the late Sir James Coxe.

The show at Dumfries of the Highland and Agricultural Society has proved to be the most successful the society has held out of Edinburgh or Glasgow. The receipts for the four days amounted to £3304.—The Dublin Cattle Show opened on Tuesday morning. Horses constitute the chief strength of the show as far as live stock is concerned, though the other departments have some special merits. The special prizes were won—the Farmers' Gazette Challenge Cup by Captain Kearney's Hereford bull, Truro; and Messrs. Griffin and Morris's (of Wolverhampton) prize by Mr. James Robertson's Kerry bull, Russeo. Other prizes were won by the Earls of Clonmell and De Vesci, Mr. M'Clintock Bunbury, Mr. R. Chaloner, Viscount Powerscourt, Mrs. Anne Adele Hope, and Mr. Chaloner.

The vicissitudes of the Prime Minister's career could not be exemplified in a more popular manner than they are in the cartoons of Punch. Upwards of one hundred of these plates illustrating the life of the Earl of Beaconsfield, K.G., have just been issued by Mr. Punch, and the brochure forms not the least tempting publication on the railway bookstalls. Many a traveller bound for the moors will beyond doubt be amused by turning over these welcome leaves, and by refreshing his memory with the cartoons, which portray Lord Beaconsfield in every imaginable form, from young manhood to the present time, and which also remind us of his associations with his most illustrious contemporaries, including the late Sir Robert Peel, Lord John Russell, Lord Aberdeen, Mr. Cobden, Lord Palmerston, Mr. Gladstone, and others, who figure with the Premier in these diverting Illustrations.

INDIGESTION.
It is conclusively ascertained that LACTOPEPTINE will bring about the Digestion of Food in a manner perfectly identical to that obtained under the influence of the natural gastric juice. "A glance at the Formula of LACTOPEPTINE would convince even the most sceptical of the valuable results that must ensue through its administration. Composed of ptyalin, pepsine, pancreatine, hydrochloric and lactic acids, it is a combination of all the digestive agents; consequently, can never be administered without giving the utmost satisfaction; for if there is a deficiency in the system of all or any of these agents, LACTOPEPTINE will supply it, and thus assist in digesting the food, enabling the organs that produce these principles of digestion to rest and recuperate their relaxed energies."—From "Practical Medicine and Surgery," July 1877. LACTOPEPTINE being presented in saccharated form, is most agreeable to the taste, and can be administered even to the youngest child. The price of the LACTOPEPTINE is 4s. 6d. per one oz. bottle. (An ounce bottle contains forty-eight ten-grain doses.) If any difficulty is experienced in obtaining LACTOPEPTINE from your Chemist, communicate direct, sending P.O.O. for 4s. 6d. Address—CARNRICK, KIDDER, and CO., 6t. Russell-st., corner of Charlotte-st., London, W.C. Pamphlet to any address.

BUGS, Fleas, Moths, Beetles, and all other insects are destroyed by KEATING'S INSECT DESTROYING POWDER, which is quite harmless to domestic animals. In exterminating beetles the success of this powder is extraordinary. It is perfectly clean in application. Sold in Tins, 1s. and 2s. 6d. each by all Chemists.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPION SWIMMER.

The swimming season is at its height. Captain Webb and Professor Beckwith's little duck of a daughter, using the term in its aquatic sense, have demonstrated afresh that it is easy for man and woman alike to keep afloat in the water for a goodly number of hours. Fair naiads are now to be seen swimming with the ease of mermaids at the favourite seaside resorts. Swimming, in fine, is found in August to be the one seasonable elixir of life which revives at once the jaded energies of worn-out ladies of fashion and over-worked legislators.

One of the fleetest swimmers in the kingdom is Mr. Horace Davenport, the young gentleman whose portrait we have engraved, from a photograph by Mr. W. E. Debenham. Mr. Davenport is twenty-eight years of age, has a lissom, muscular frame, scales eleven stone four, and has been Amateur Champion Swimmer of England for the past four years. He first proved his capacity as a fast swimmer at Professor Beckwith's swimming entertainments in the Lambeth Baths, where it is the custom for good London swimmers to graduate, as it were, in the keen races that periodically take place under the superintendence of the veteran ex-Champion of England. Mr. Davenport has a most effective style of swimming. He swims on his right side, throwing his left arm out of the water at each stroke in front of his head, and then strongly sweeping it back under water: whilst his leg-stroke is remarkably clean and effective, the nether limbs being brought together as closely as a pair of scissors. This last-named point—one of supreme importance to all who would acquire a perfect stroke—is by no means rigorously observed by the majority of London swimmers who take part in swimming contests. It is commonly thought to be only requisite to dash, helter-skelter, through the water, no matter in what form or style, so long as a great rate of speed is obtained for the time being. But the unwisdom of not becoming master of a good as well as a quick stroke does not infrequently receive a practical illustration. There was a noteworthy instance of this in what was called the "Lords and Commons' Race." On July 29 last twenty-three amateur swimmers plunged into the ebb tide below Putney Bridge for a swim to Westminster Bridge, the prizes being offered by Mr. J. G. Elliott, the secretary of the London Swimming Club. Two swimmers soon led the van, and had an exciting race between themselves, after the first mile had been swum. One was Davenport, the other a buoyant young Putney swimmer, George Fearn. Both swam in the same style—i.e., with the left over-hand stroke. Fearn had a slight advantage for some distance, and might have maintained his advantage if his legs had been brought together at the end of each stroke. Lacking the skill and machine-like regularity of action characterising Davenport's excellent style, the younger swimmer had to yield the pride of place ere Wandsworth Bridge was reached. Mr. Davenport, on the other hand, was enabled to keep up to the last his even and powerful stroke, and swam in an easy winner over sixty yards ahead of Fearn, the victor having swum the five miles and a half in 1 hour 16 min. 10 sec., according to the timing of Mr. W. H. Leverell, of Bell's Life.

Mr. Davenport, swimming then with the same strong, even, side-stroke, first won the Captaincy of the Ilex Swimming Club in 1873, and has ever since maintained his supremacy in the swimming club devoted to London rowing men. In 1874 he won the mile race which made him Amateur Champion of England, and he has retained the title to this day, his last year's race for the trophy resulting in his swimming the fastest mile in still water on record, his time being 29 min. 25 sec., and the scene of the contest being the lake adjoining the Welsh Harp, at Hendon. It was also last summer that he was victor in the "Lords and Commons' Race," the course being the same as Monday week, and, curiously enough, the second man being the same each year. The Quarter-of-a-Mile Amateur Championship was added to his laurels last autumn at the Lambeth Baths, where he was credited with accomplishing the distance in 7 min. 4 sec. In club races Mr. Davenport is unapproachable, except when a handicap gives an inferior swimmer an opportunity of gaining the goal before him. The half-mile race for the London Athletic Club's Challenge Cup was won by him last year, after a fine race with Mr. C. L. O'Malley; but at the swimming meeting of the London Athletic Club, in Hendon lake, on Saturday, it was left to Mr. Davenport to swim over for the prize. Finally, the Amateur Champion will this (Saturday) afternoon take part in another mile race for the Amateur Championship in the rather inconvenient lake of the Crystal Palace.

MR. H. DAVENPORT, AMATEUR CHAMPION SWIMMER.

THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

The Chinese pavilion in the Trocadéro Park is inhabited by several persons of that nation, whose peculiar costume, and their method of performing the ordinary business of domestic life, have attracted some notice from European visitors. The gentleman, for instance, "sans peur et sans reproche," who is seen here occupied in writing a letter, has too much polite self-possession and "savoir-faire" to be either distracted or annoyed by the French ladies curiously peeping at him. Yet he must be secretly conscious of the perfect comme il faut correctness of his attire, with his clean-shaved face and head, mandarin cap, long pigtail elegantly plaited, silken trousers, and robe of fine cloth, as he sits plying a reed-pencil dipped in the saucer of Indian ink, and inscribes his paper, from right to left hand, with such syllabic characters as are shown in the corner of our Engraving.

The building shown in our next Illustration is the Algerine pavilion, or rather palace, in the south-east quarter of the Trocadéro Park, where it forms the central edifice of the little North African Moslem town of shops, taverns, kiosks, and coffee-houses, belonging to people from Algiers, Tunis, and Morocco. This structure is of considerable size, a quadrangle 130 ft. by 165 ft., with a tower at each of its four corners. Three of its sides present only blank white walls between the corner towers. The front, which looks towards the Seine, has at one end, towards the east, a higher tower, with a minaret above, rising to nearly 100 ft., which is copied, on a smaller scale, from that of El Mansurah, near Tlemcen, built in the fourteenth century by Abou Yakoub, Sultan of Morocco. The Moorish doorway, with its complex decorations, is copied from that of the Mosque of Sidi-Bou-Medina, at Tlemcen. It is supported on each side by an elegant little lodge: these two lodges are surmounted with low domes, and have double windows in front. The interior, which is lighted from the roof chiefly by domed skylights, contains the objects of art and manufacture and natural products exhibited by the Algerine citizens or subjects of the French Republic, laid out in a series of arcades and galleries, which are ornamented with coloured porcelain. A central rotunda is reserved for the saloon assigned to the President of the Government, Marshal MacMahon, which is furnished in the Oriental fashion, with divans and low stools, and every convenience for resting and smoking at leisure.

The beautiful specimen of artistic metal-work shown in our last Illustration is one of those contributed to the British section of the Exhibition by Messrs. Elkington and Co., of Regent-street. It is the work of their special artist, M. Morel-Ladeuil, who also designed the Helicon vase and the Milton shield. The present work, on which he has been engaged two years, is a large tazza of repoussé silver, with a border of iron, richly damascened and incrusted with gold. The figures, brought out in such high relief as to have the appearance of being under-cut, represent a Roman lady of rank at Pompeii seated in a stately apartment of her lord's mansion, and attended by three female slaves or handmaidens, who are engaged in her toilette. It is a subject quite congenial to the Parisian taste of this day, and is treated with a learned skill that reminds us of Alma-Tadema's pictures. Messrs. Elkington have also sent to the Paris Exhibition another work, by the same artist, which is, perhaps, more likely to interest our own countrymen. The "Bunyan" shield is the same size as the "Milton," and consists, like the latter, of five plates or medallions of beaten silver mounted in iron; but the shape of the plates is different from that of those in the Milton shield. The central plate represents the combat between Christian and Apollyon; and the time selected by the artist is when Christian is delivering his final blow, which secured to him the victory over his adversary. The faces of both the combatants are in the highest degree vigorous and expressive; and the accessories of the scene, the attendant fiends and angels, are introduced with great skill and judgment. At the feet of Christian is the helmet, which he lost early in the encounter; and he is repelling the last of Apollyon's darts with the shield of faith, while his right hand swings back the sword of the spirit in a pose which is full of life and earnestness. Immediately beneath this medallion, in the iron, is a figure of John Bunyan, sleeping, and much refined upon the actual representations of the worthy cobbler. The two lower medallions exhibit the Valley of the Shadow of Death, thronged with shapes hideous and horrible, amoug which the narrow road is seen winding; while the upper medullions represent the road to the Celestial City, passing through the "glorious company of Seraphim and Cherubim, the Elders with their golden crowns, and the Virgins with their harps." Beneath the silver basreliefs, and in the ironwork, are escutcheons bearing devices emblematical of the three Christian virtues—faith, hope, and charity. The surfaces of iron between the medallions are further embellished with appropriate arabesques, here and there enriched by gold inlaying; but the general effect is somewhat more severe than that of the Milton shield, as befits the different character of the subject. The hammer-work, taking it as a whole, is of extraordinary excellence, and the relief, in some parts, is wonderfully high and sharp, as, for example, in the wings of Apollyon and in the sword of Christian.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

As at Easter and Whitsuntide, the Bank Holiday was taken advantage of by a large section of the metropolitan volunteers to do useful and instructive work; while it was also made the occasion for the opening of the annual rifle meeting of the City of London Rifle Brigade for prizes of the value of nearly £400, presented by City companies for the promotion and development of the art of rifle-shooting; and the camp of instruction of the Hon. Artillery Company of London, at Seaford, in Sussex.

Several of the metropolitan regiments, in addition to attendance at the Aldershott Camp of exercise, which, so far as the volunteers are concerned, terminated last Saturday, have this year been holding camps of instruction with the best results, and the Hon. Artillery Corps having decided to follow their example, an excellent site was fixed upon at Seaford. As usual, the field battery, consisting of three six-pounders, well horsed and fully equipped, preceded the infantry column by a few days, in order to cover the distance by road before the infantry marched in. It accordingly left London at five o'clock on the 1st inst., halting at Croydon, and marched into Seaford on Saturday, followed by four companies of the battalion under Captain Rawlings, who had come down from London by train in the afternoon. All ranks were in full marching order, and in their smart uniforms attracted much attention. The camp was pitched, guards mounted, and the usual other duties of camp life carried out. On Sunday the regiment attended Divine service; and Monday was spent in drill and other exercises. The camp is pitched near Cosca Lodge, and the head-quarters of the regiment established at Seaford Bay Hotel. Drill has been continued during this week, and artillery practice carried on at sea ranges for prizes; and the regiment returns to London to-day (Saturday).

The four battalions of volunteers that have been doing duty for eight days at Aldershott returned to their homes last Saturday. The brigade was inspected on Friday by General Pakenham, who, at the conclusion of the drill, expressed his extreme gratification with their appearance and discipline.

The fifth jewel competition of the South London Rifle Club was held last week at Nunhead. The following were the winners:—Gold jewel, Sergeant Beeton, L.R.B.; silver jewel, Sergeant Fraser, L.R.B.; bronze jewel, Private Serle, 23rd Surrey.

The annual competition for prizes by the members of the London Rifle Brigade began last Saturday at Rainham, and continues through the present week.

At the Suffolk County Rifle Association Meeting on the 2nd inst., at Beccles, the President's Cup, Champion Badge, and N.R.A. Medal, entitling the holder to compete for the Prince of Wales's Prize at Wimbledon next year, awarded for the aggregate scores at all ranges, was won by Private Tilney, of the 14th Suffolk (Beccles).

The prize meeting of the National Artillery Association began on Monday at Shoeburyness. The Second Division sets to work on Monday, the 12th. The distribution of prizes to that division takes place on the 16th, and brings the meeting to a close for the year.

The report of the Scotch Fishery Board for the year 1877 has been published. It appears from it that the total quantity of herring cured at the Scotch stations was 847,718 barrels, while 561,985 barrels were exported. These figures exhibit a large increase over those for 1876, which was a very unfavourable year for the fishermen, and they also show an increase over average years. The number of fishing-boats stationed on the Scotch coast last year was 14,623; the number of men and boys employed, 45,890; and the value of the boats and material, £1,178,000.

The Dublin correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes: The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland, in their report, recently published, mention the completion of a Convalescent Hospital near Dublin, erected at a cost of £26,000, the gift by will of Mr. Michael Bernard Mullins, of that city. They have resettled the scheme for the distribution of Mr. Thomas Charlton's bequest, who left estates in the counties of Meath and Longford to provide marriage portions for the sons and daughters of day labourers in those counties—119 claimants are to have for the year £802 divided among them. The Commissioners say that "instances have occurred which indicate the advisability of larger powers being given for remoulding bequests of ancient dates, so as to better adapt them to modern requirements." They hold a small fund for the purchase of spinning-wheels near Lurgan: "the testator meant to encourage domestic industry, but he would not wish to do so in a manner now wholly disused in the place for which he designed it." The Commissioners have standing in their names in the Bank of Ireland £243,000, besides £2476 in rents and annuities.

THE MAGAZINES.

The Cornhill is strong this month in miscellaneous articles, two of which are important contributions to literary criticism. Mr. Leslie Stephen's paper on the First Edinburgh Reviewers is most agreeable reading, the subject permitting a light discursive treatment instead of the painfully resolute effort to pluck the heart out of a mystery which one commonly observes when the critic's attention is concentrated upon a single author. Mr. Stephen's observations are genial and just; if the cause of the extraordinary influence of the Edinburgh is not fully explained, the undertaking is probably impracticable. Lessing is the subject of a very pleasant essay, mainly following Miss Zimmern in the biographical department of the subject, but characterising all the many-sided German's principal works with just and discriminating criticism. Mr. Palgrave's brilliant pen is well employed in a sketch of the Philippine Islands, which he pronounces happy in a government and religion exactly suitable to the simple, amicable, manageable inhabitants. "The Origin of Fruits" is another of the excellent readings in popular science papers for which this periodical is celebrated, pointing out with extreme perspicuity not only how richness in flavour and colour have gradually been developed in the fruit itself by the natural advantages thus acquired, but how the quest after fruit has contributed to the development of the artistic sentiment in mankind. "Orpheus and Eurydice" is a highly refined analysis of the elements which constitute æsthetic satisfaction in a work of art founded on a discussion respecting the subject of an antique bas-relief.

Macmillan has two remarkable contributions—one very useful, the other very curious. The useful one is a full account of Cyprus, by the late British Consul-General Mr. Lang, a gentleman of great experience, and evidently endowed with sound judgment and natural sagacity. Mr. Lang goes steadily through all the natural productions of the island and other possible sources of revenue, pointing out what is and may be made of the wine, grain, silk, salt, and other resources which, properly managed, ought to make Cyprus one of the richest islands in the world. He entertains no doubt of the substantial value of our new possession to ourselves, as well as to the inhabitants, but counsels great moderation and caution in pressing the ideas of Western civilisation upon the latter. The curiosity is "The Child in the House," the first of a series of imaginary portraits by W. H. Pater—an attempt, as it would seem, to introduce Mr. Burne Jones's pictorial style into English prose. But what is nature with Mr. Burne Jones is affectation with Mr. Pater, though affectation of a very dainty and delicate sort. A view of the present state of the business of the House of Commons is encouraging in so far as it insists that honourable members are not so unruly and disorderly as they seem, but discouraging in so far as it holds out no expectation that they will ever be better. It besides scarcely evinces either that sense of the gravity of the situation or that readiness to support authority which might have been reasonably looked for. Mr. M'Carthy's review of Dr. Hueffer's "Troubadours" and Mr. Blades's account of the Plantin Museum at Antwerp are excellent literary papers.

The leading paper in Blackwood is a sketch of Prince Bismarck by an anonymous countryman, very graphically conveying the desired impression of unscrupulous energy and indomitable will, raised above self-seeking by a fervent if somewhat narrow patriotism. Another of the best contributions to the number, an elegant and pathetic story, is due to a German pen. "Half-Way to Arcady" is more clever than pleasing. "John Caldigate" is a hash of Mr. Trollope's old literary materials, compounded, however, with no less cunning than of old.

Apart from an acute criticism of Mr Mallock's pessimism, the strength of Fraser lies in its picture of phases of foreign life. "The Races of Asiatic Turkey" is chiefly statistical; but "Peasants and Proprietors in Tuscany" is a delightful sketch of the moral as well the economical good effects of the mezzeria or half-profit system of land tenure; and "Among the Burmese" depicts with equal vividness the national amusements of this interesting people and the mode of travel along their great water-highways. "Africa and the Africans" draws attention to the facts, often overlooked, that the descendants of slaves cannot be expected to be the best specimens of any people, and that African civilisation must grow up at home.

The Nineteenth Century begins with an indictment of some phases of English policy in India, by Miss Florence Nightingale. It is distinguished by the vehemence and occasional incoherence of Miss Nightingale's writings, but is, nevertheless, so thoroughly in harmony with the testimony of other witnesses of larger local experience as to challenge grave attention. The sum and substance is that, with the best intentions, we are committing serious mistakes from inattention to native peculiarities and too pedantic a bondage to the letter of the law. Mr. E. I. Wilson reads an equally severe lecture to the Liberal Opposition, drawing a parallel more close than gratifying between the mistakes which excluded it from power during and so long after the Peninsular War and some recent passages of its history. We regret, however, to find him accusing Englishmen of treason on no better authority than Napoleon's. Another important subject of controversy is ably treated by Mrs. Fawcett, who, in opposition to Mrs. Orr's theory of the ultimate tendency of female education to bring about the extinction of the human species, denies that culture tends in any degree to impair the affections and frustrate their ordinary consequences. Mrs. Fawcett's remarks appear conclusive as far as they go, but many material points in her opponent's case are left unnoticed. Mr. Mallock's "Familiar Colloquy on Recent Art" may also be classed among controversial papers, though its exact drift is not quite apparent. It would seem on the whole to be to recommend Catholicism as a panacea for the infirmities and aberrations of pictorial and other art; but most observers will have to borrow Mr. Mallock's eyes to perceive the surprising things which his interlocutors discover in the Grosvenor Gallery. Mr. Newton concludes his learned and interesting illustrations of Greek religion from the inscriptions; Mr. Keary contributes some suggestive thoughts on the probable cause of religious development among primitive races; Lord Stratford de Redcliffe records his recollections of the diplomatic transactions which accompanied the birth of the modern Hellenic kingdom; Mr. Rowsell sums up his administrative experience of Malta by strongly recommending the substitution of Maltese for Italian as the official language; and Mr. Grant Duff reviews Nassau Senior's conversations. It is to be hoped that he has ground for his light estimate of the danger of Holland from German aggression.

The Fortnightly has too many political articles indicating a parti pris. Fairness of course is not expected from the clever writer of "The Political Adventures of Lord Beaconsfield;" but it is amazing to find a serious politician like Mr. Laing beginning a paper on the Turkish Convention with the assertion that "the convention of the 4th of June is the most startling surprise ever recorded in history." We must suppose that Mr. Laing only reads the journals of his own way of thinking, or he would have had warning enough. Mr. Lefevre, writing of Greece at the Congress, also holds a brief; and it is a satisfaction to turn to M. de Laveleye's impartial account of the recent defeat of the Conservative party in Belgium. His case is so strong that he can afford to do justice to his adversaries, and he makes it quite clear that, however distasteful religious issues at elections may be to tolerant people with a sincere respect for religion, no other issues are at present practical in Belgium. The country must be governed by the priesthood or otherwise; there is at present absolutely no other question before it. The best of the non-political papers are Mr. Trollope's pleasant record of his tour in Iceland and Mr. Hartshorne's specimens of Buddhist popular tradition. Many tales of world-wide fame have their counterparts here, as, for example, the Judgment of Solomon.

The article of most general interest in the Contemporary Review is Mr. R. S. Poole's excellent account of Cyprus, chiefly derived from the British Consular reports, and consequently less merely archæological than might have been expected from the writer's eminence in that department of research. Professor Max Müller contributes a genial memoir of Julius Möhl, the late eminent Orientalist at Paris. Lunar volcanoes, parochial charities, early Christian creeds, and Scotchmen, secular and ecclesiastical, form the subjects of other papers.

Mr. Henry James's "Europeans," the pièce de résistance of the Atlantic Monthly, is full of refined humour, but suffers by being read in instalments. All the contents are good, and there are two especially interesting æsthetic papers, one on the forlorn condition of the American stage as contrasted with the German, the other on the steady development of a more exacting artistic conscience in decorative art. Scribner's Monthly is also remarkably good, and is especially remarkable for a spirited ballad by Bret Harte on Paul Jones's naval exploits in Scarborough Bay, and for a memoir of Bryant, beautifully illustrated with sketches of places interesting in connection with the poet. There are also a most observant essay on the peculiarities of some American birds in a state of nature; a lively and pretty description of Santa Cruz, in California; and the fullest description of the South African diamond-fields that we have as yet encountered.

Temple Bar is chiefly remarkable for a severe and rather ill-natured review of Miss Martineau's autobiography, and "Vice-Versâ," an extravaganza in the style of "Erewhon." The Month has an entertaining contemporary narrative of the migration of the inmates of a nunnery from Bruges to Winchester, under stress of politics, in the first French Revolution. Tinsley, London Society, Belgravia, the Gentleman's Magazine, and the St. James's Magazine are all fairly readable, with no features of special interest. The promises with which the Magazine of Art (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin) set out, both as regards illustrations and letterpress, are being most satisfactorily fulfilled.

We have received Light, Geographical Magazine, Lippincott's Magazine, St. Nicholas, Churchman's Shilling Magazine, Mirth, Science for All, Science Gossip, Charing-cross Magazine, Familiar Wild Flowers, Pantiles Papers, Men of Mark, Our Native Land, Cassell's Family Magazine, Myra's Journal of Dress and Fashion and Myra's Mid-Monthly Journal of Children's Dress, Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine, Sylvia's Home Journal, Milliner and Dressmaker, World of Fashion, Golden Childhood; and Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Once a Week, Weekly Welcome, Golden Hours, Day of Rest, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Leisure Hour, Christian Age, Garden, Gardener's Chronicle, and Gardener's Magazine.

THE QUARTERLIES.

Solid, perhaps heavy, are the contents of the July Quarterly Review. Its lightest article is not a very nice one—namely, that upon Madame du Deffand and the heartless society of the French "Encyclopédistes," whose private correspondence with each other mostly deserves to be forgotten. English Conservative political traditions are upheld in "The Duke of Wellington and the Aristocracy;" while in "The Block in the House of Commons," and "The Crown and the Army," we have some discussion of the more recent Parliamentary and Ministerial experiences. The great question of contemporary foreign policy is illustrated by articles on "Catherine of Russia" and "The People of Turkey." Many readers who care more for social and domestic interests will find, in "The Englishwoman at School," a stringent examination of the actual system of middle-class female education. The life of the late Rev. Dr. Martin Routh, the centenarian President of Magdalen College, Oxford, is a subject that will be interesting to most men of that University who have reached half his age. There is also a good historical account of Lambeth Palace, worthy of attentive perusal.

In the Church Quarterly, as usual, we meet with several elaborate pieces of argument upon the polemics and politics of the Anglican system. "The Dogmatic Position of the Church of England," "Home Reunion," and "Lord Selborne and Mr. Parker" are dissertations of such a kind, which we leave to clerical readers. The biographical memoir of Bishop Selwyn, on the contrary, has much interest for the sake of an admirable man, even without the respect due to the cloth. A philosophical article "On Evolution" seems to claim serious and thoughtful attention. The comparison between "Dante and Goethe" does not appear to us very successfully made out. It would have been enough to say of those two great poets that the one was a man of the thirteenth century, the other of the eighteenth: the one, an austere and somewhat pedantic moralist; the other, an intellectual voluptuary, but liberal as the daylight; both of them consummate egotists, and thereby vastly inferior to Homer and Shakspeare. There is a paper, also, concerning missionary prospects in Madagascar, which we have not looked at; and some remarks on the Lambeth Palace Library and on Cathedral restorations, which should be interesting to scholars and persons of taste.

Transatlantic and Australian periodical literature comes to hand across the wide ocean and claims a word of recognition. The North American Review for July and August contains four or five political articles concerning the present state of affairs in the Union, one bearing the portentous title, "Failure of Universal Suffrage;" but Mr. Wendell Phillips, in "The Outlook," announces his resolve to defend that and other Republican institutions as firmly and strongly as ever. An "Evolutionist," with a gentle touch of ironical satire, proposes to advertise for a "New Religion," as he is by no means satisfied with that of the Comtist philosophers. The position of the Jews in America is discussed by Rabbi Gottheil. Our distinguished military commander, Sir Garnet Wolseley, contributes a serviceable account of the Indian Native Army. We next take up the "Crisis"—Review for April last. It has an article upon the "Crisis"—that is to say, the late dispute and deadlock in the Government of Victoria between Sir George Bowen and his Ministers and the House of Assembly. Mr. D. Macallister's account of the Australian Aborigines is a sad one, but should be read by all who feel an interest in that perishing race of men. The other papers mostly deal with such topics as have already been sufficiently examined by competent writers in Europe.

DOG-DAYS AND DOG-DAISIES.

It is eight o'clock, p.m.; and, therefore, it must be that time of this sweltering dog-day that is known as "the cool of the evening." But, as the thermometer is, even now, at 78 in the shade—which is two degrees above summer heat—the epithet "cool" is only relative, and may be taken as an euphemistic figure of speech that the heat is tolerable. Six or eight hours ago it was intolerable, for the thermometer then registered 92 in the shade and 145 in the sun—a heat that was almost "in-Calcuttable" after the preceding days of coolness. Great was the engendering of caloric; melting were the moments; sudorific were the cuticles; and the wearers of orthodox dark suits of clothes and chimney-pot hats felt that the tyranny of fashion had reached a pitch that was unendurable. Even the languid swell—made more languid and limp by the exhausting effects of the weather—would have furtively concealed a cabbage-leaf in the crown of his white hat, were it not that he feared a disagreeable contretemps when he next raised that hat in salutation. Pith hats and puggarees put in an appearance, and coats of the lightest hue and material were donned by the wise. Thirsty-looking dogs with lolling tongues were looked upon with suspicion, and given a wide berth when met; and, even when muzzled, in obedience to law, were objects of compassionate solicitude. Everyone felt—even if they had not realised it before—that they were passing through the season of the Dog-days.

Now, we know that every dog has its day—or, as Hamlet phrased it, "And dog will have his day"—but it seems strange that his day should be assigned to the hottest period of the Summer. It is, in fact, a libel on the canine race, and a gratuitous keeping up of an unwarrantable superstition. It ought to be consigned to the limbo of vulgar errors. In the scene in the Palace Yard, in Shakspeare's "King Henry the Eighth," where the people are crowding to see the christening of the Princess Elizabeth, one of the rabble is described as being such a sweltering fire-drake that "he should be a brazier by his face, for twenty of the dog-days now reign in 's nose!" This was half their number; for, as the dog-days begin on July 3 and end on Aug. 11, they comprise, with inclusive reckoning, a space of forty days. Yet the rising and setting of Canicula, the Dog-star, in coincidence with the sun—which by Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans was believed to regulate the term of the dog-days, and from its supposed influence for heat gave to them their familiar name—is now so much altered that the true Canicular days would not begin till late in August. Therefore, neither the Dog-star nor the dog has any connection with the dog-days, except in name and folk-lore; and we are not called upon, as were the ancient Romans, to sacrifice a little brown cur to Canicula in order to mitigate the burning influence of that star. Horace, as we may remember, invited his friend Tyndaris to his Sabine villa, where in the shade of the cool valley they could avoid the fierce heat of the Dog-star and drink their cups of harmless Lesbian wine. And, in lauding the cooling streams of the Bandusian fountain, he said that they were not affected even by the burning Dog-star.

I think of Horace, and Tyndaris, and the Bandusian fountain, after a classical lassitude fashion, as I lounge by the woodside, at eight o'clock, in the so-called "cool of the evening" of this most canicular of all the forty dog-days. Have they been "forty" frizzling "like one," I wonder! I am disposed—dogmatically, perhaps—to arrive at this conclusion; for it has been a day suggestive of sun-stroke. Out in the open fields the noonday tropical heat fiercely smote the sweltering haymakers, and compelled them to cease from work and to take a temporary rest under the nearest tree,

> With coolest shades, till noontide's rage is spent, as wrote the Rev. Phineas Fletcher, nearly two hundred and fifty years ago. But now, though it is certainly "ot," and "otter than yesterday," as Mr. Perkyn Myddlewick says, yet the temperature is sensibly cooler, especially here by the side of the wood, with its dense umbrage and refreshing greenery. It is so green all around—the woods, the fields, and the corn—that we can at once perceive the appropriateness of the poet Spenser in attiring his "jolly Summer"

> In a thin silken cassock, coloured green,
> That was inclined all to be more light.

It is to hoped, however, that a certain number of the clergy will not take a hint from this and adopt a cassock of this hue and style, as a suitable vestment for the dog-days; though it must be confessed that it would be both useful and ornamental, and that its wearer would, in more senses than one, be as cool as a cucumber.

It is pleasant to lie here on this dog-day evening in the shade of the wood, on the sweet green grass, close to the old disused limestone quarry, with its picturesque undulations thickly covered with profuse vegetation and gay wild-flowers. Here, for example, at my very elbow, is Rose Campion. What a pretty name for a village heroine! though, on second thoughts, there would be some confusion in the title, or else a pantomimic change to the opposite sex; for Rose Campion is generally known as Ragged Robin. But this variety of the garden lychnis possesses more popular names than the generality of wild-flowers—meadow campion, meadow pink, wild campion, march gilliflower, cuckoo flower, crow flower, gardener's eye, and also the gardener's delight. Ragged Robin, too, is also known under the alias of Wild William; and, when travelling abroad, he adopts the title of Knight's Cross in Italy and Maltese Cross in France. Many other wild-flowers are about me; but here is the dog-rose, the loveliest flower of all for the brightening of these dog-days. It is the same briar-rose that "fell in streamers green" in the Trossachs; but it is now garlanded with banks of bloom, like to those by which the fair Ophelia floated, as so wondrously depicted in Millais's picture. How lovely are the pure tints—the pale pink fading into a delicate flesh-colour, "like the hue on Beauty's cheek." There the blossoms hang in hundreds,

> Flaunts to the breeze above your way.

Here and there, on the twining stems are the ruddy massy bunches called "cankers," even in Shakspeare's day; so that his "canker-flower" is the dog-rose, whether the pink or the white variety, known as the Yorkist rose. A little later in the season, when the dog-days are over, and their heat has exerted the ripening influence, we shall see the rich scarlet hips, which may be made into a conserve, or "cakes of roses" such as were in the apothecary's shop when Romeo paid his visit.

Here, too, in great abundance and luxuriance, are the dog-daisies, the fittest flowers of all—in name, at any rate—with which to grace and gladden the dog-days. Otherwise are they known as ox-eyed daisies, or as moon-daisies. Their large yellow central discs, circled with rays of pure white, make a bright show among the rich variety of grasses, out-topping many, and gathered in great clumps on the edges and coigns of vantage of the old limestone quarry. Being in London the other day, and, according to my custom, paying a visit to Covent-garden Market, to look at the beautiful fruit and flowers, I was pleased, though not surprised, to see there many hundreds of bundles of dog-daisies, some for sale, and others being introduced into gorgeous bouquets of hot-house flowers by the deft fingers of the girls employed in that attractive branch of the trade. These wildings of nature bravely hold their own with their more costly cousins from the conservatory, and might have been taken, by the unitiated, for genuine hot-house flowers. But a hot-house is suggestive rather of the dog-days than the dog-daisies.

CUTHBERT BEDE.

COVENT GARDEN PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The close of the Royal Italian Opera season has, as usual, been speedily followed by the series of attractive concerts with which Messrs. A. and S. Gatti have for several seasons filled up the musical interregnum which occurs in London at this period. The theatre has, as before, been converted into a vast concert-room, a carpeted platform covering the whole area, on a level with the stage, the orchestra being erected in the centre of the house. The decorations are in the same style of elegance and good taste as heretofore, and the musical arrangements are fully equal to those of any previous occasion. A splendid band of about eighty of our best instrumentalists has been assembled, with Mr. A. Burnett as leading violinist; and the performances are conducted, with his well-known skilled experience, by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, who is occasionally relieved by Mr. Alfred Cellier—a very efficient substitute. Prominent specialties of the opening night were the admirable renderings of the overtures to "Oberon" and "Guillaume Tell" and the prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin;" among the other orchestral pieces having been an effective arrangement, by Mr. G. Jacobi, of subjects from Mr. Sullivan's comic opera, "The Sorcerer," in which, as in the march from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba," the effects were powerfully reinforced by the co-operation of the band of the Coldstream Guards.

At Saturday's concert Mdlle. Alma Verdini made her first appearance in England, with great and deserved success. Her first aria, "Ah! fors' è lui" (from "La Traviata") displayed a soprano voice of fresh and agreeable quality, and capable both of sympathetic expression and brilliant execution. The impression produced was so strong that the singer was twice recalled after her performance. In her other aria, Venzano's valse-aria, "Ah! che assorta," Mdlle. Verdini was equally successful. Other effective vocal performances were contributed by Miss Anna Williams, Mr. E. Lloyd (who was encored in each of his three songs), and Mr. Maybrick. Miss Josephine Lawrence played Mendelssohn's pianoforte concerto in G minor with much brilliancy and power; and Mr. H. Reynolds's skill on the cornet was displayed in a transcription of Schubert's "Serenade."

On Monday Beethoven's first symphony (in C) was performed, being an instalment of eight of the nine symphonies given in regular order. Mdlle. Verdini reappeared with a repetition of the success obtained by her on Saturday. Vocal pieces were also rendered with great effect by Mesdames Rose Hersee and Antoinette Sterling, and Mr. Frederici. Wednesday was a classical night, and included the engagement of Madame Patey and Mr. Barton McGuckin, and for yesterday (Friday) a ballad night was announced.

The arrangements being completed for the restoration of the Triennial Musical Festivals at Worcester, the issue of the tickets began on Aug. 1. The festival will take place in the week commencing Sept. 9. The oratorios will be sung in the cathedral as before, but will be preceded by a short service of prayer, prescribed by the Bishop of the diocese. There will be two grand church services—at the opening and at the close of the festival. These are to be free to the public. At the opening service Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum" will be performed, and the Bishop of Worcester will preach a sermon. At the closing service a new "Magnificat" and "Nunc dimittis," by the Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, and a new anthem by Dr. Stainer (all specially written for this festival), will be given. The order of the oratorios will be as follows:—Tuesday evening, part of Haydn's "Creation," Mozart's Requiem, and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise;" Wednesday morning, Mendelssohn's "Elijah;" Thursday morning, "Hezekiah," a new oratorio by Dr. Armes, Mendelssohn's hymn, "Hear my prayer," and Spohr's "Last Judgment;" Friday morning, Handel's "Messiah." Two secular concerts will be given at the College Hall on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The Corporations of Hereford and Gloucester will join the Worcester Corporation at the opening service.

THEATRES.

Certain houses may be said to have reopened on Saturday, and on Monday more than one competed for literary criticism.

A new piece has been produced at the Park Theatre, called "A Treaty of Peace." The reference of this occasional drama (in three acts) to the Convention in 1856 is unmistakable, and the plot of it supplies several groups of characters, who are roused to action by the previous declaration of war. Among them are, of course, the inevitable newspaper correspondent and the Russian spy. The dialogue is not without merit, and the acting throughout is more than respectable.

Another new piece dates from the Aquarium, a four-act drama by Mr. Such Granville, entitled "That's Why She Loved Him." The answer is, "Because he was true." The reply is, perhaps, a longer time in coming than might have been expected; but then the author had to prove the fact by a course of action which implies an interval of time. Mr. Granville is not a strong man, and there are many things in this action which might have been better exhibited; nevertheless, the audience, on the whole, expressed their satisfaction. The principal actor in the imbroglio is an old eccentric Frenchman named Zach, represented by Mr. Granville himself, who enters, disguised, the house of an English Baronet who had eloped with his wife, and contrives to exercise a malicious influence on his conduct. In pursuing his revenge he brings, unconsciously, his own daughter into trouble and almost to dishonour. But in the last act he is enabled to make reparation—a circumstance probably that reconciled the audience to the subject, which, altogether, was not of the most agreeable kind.

On the 1st inst. a suggestive event took place at the Queen's. Mr. Hayes, who has laboured with so much spirit in behalf of the St. James's Theatre, made his appeal to the public by a remarkable performance of the three following operas—"The Little Duke" of MM. Meilhac, Halévy, and Lecocq; Dibdin's "Waterman," with Sims Reeves in the part of the nautical hero, Tom Tug; and "The Rose of Auvergne." Such success attended the representation as sufficiently shows the public esteem entertained for this gentleman's courageous efforts to restore an important theatre to a state of efficiency.

A similar episode has to be recorded in favour of the management of the Royalty by Miss Fowler, whose season was brought to a close on Saturday week. On the Tuesday following the stage was furnished for a ball to the friends of the lady who has realised for us the person of Nell Gwynne on the London boards. A large party of professionals did honour to the occasion.

On Monday Mdlle. Beatrice began her long-announced engagement at the Olympic, together with her most efficient company, which has achieved so high a reputation in the provinces. Mdlle. Beatrice is the proprietress of a considerable number of Parisian pieces, which have experienced extraordinary prosperity in nearly all our country theatres. The one selected for Monday is entitled "The Woman of the People," translated by Mr. Benjamin Webster, junior, from the French of MM. Denney and Mallian. It is produced here with the music originally written by M. Pilati for the piece as first produced at the Porte St. Martin, and the mise-en-scène employed at that theatre is adopted at the present. This is a great advantage; otherwise, the drama, good as it is, labours under the misfortune of having been appropriated by Mr. Boucicault, who used up the first three acts in "Janet Pride." The incident, therefore, of the babe being confided to the Infant Hospital, and afterwards abducted therefrom by one Signor Appiani (Mr. James Carter-Edwards), was familiar enough. The next two acts are interesting in themselves, as showing the difficulties of the mother's position, who is accused of madness, but who ultimately proves her sanity, and recovers the possession of her child. Mdlle. Beatrice, as the distressed mother, acted with her usual power, and was admirably well supported by her very excellent company. The construction of the piece is faulty, inasmuch as in more than one instance it is arbitrary and artificial, and the general tone of the style is ultra-declamatory, rendering the dialogue in parts excessively verbose. But there are numerous points which are well made; and the speeches, some of them rather long, were so skilfully delivered that they told admirably, notwithstanding their occasional intricacy. The production and exhibition of the Baby, in the last act, was received with shouts of applause from the gallery and other parts of the house. The curtain fell to unanimous applause; nor can we doubt that a great success was achieved.

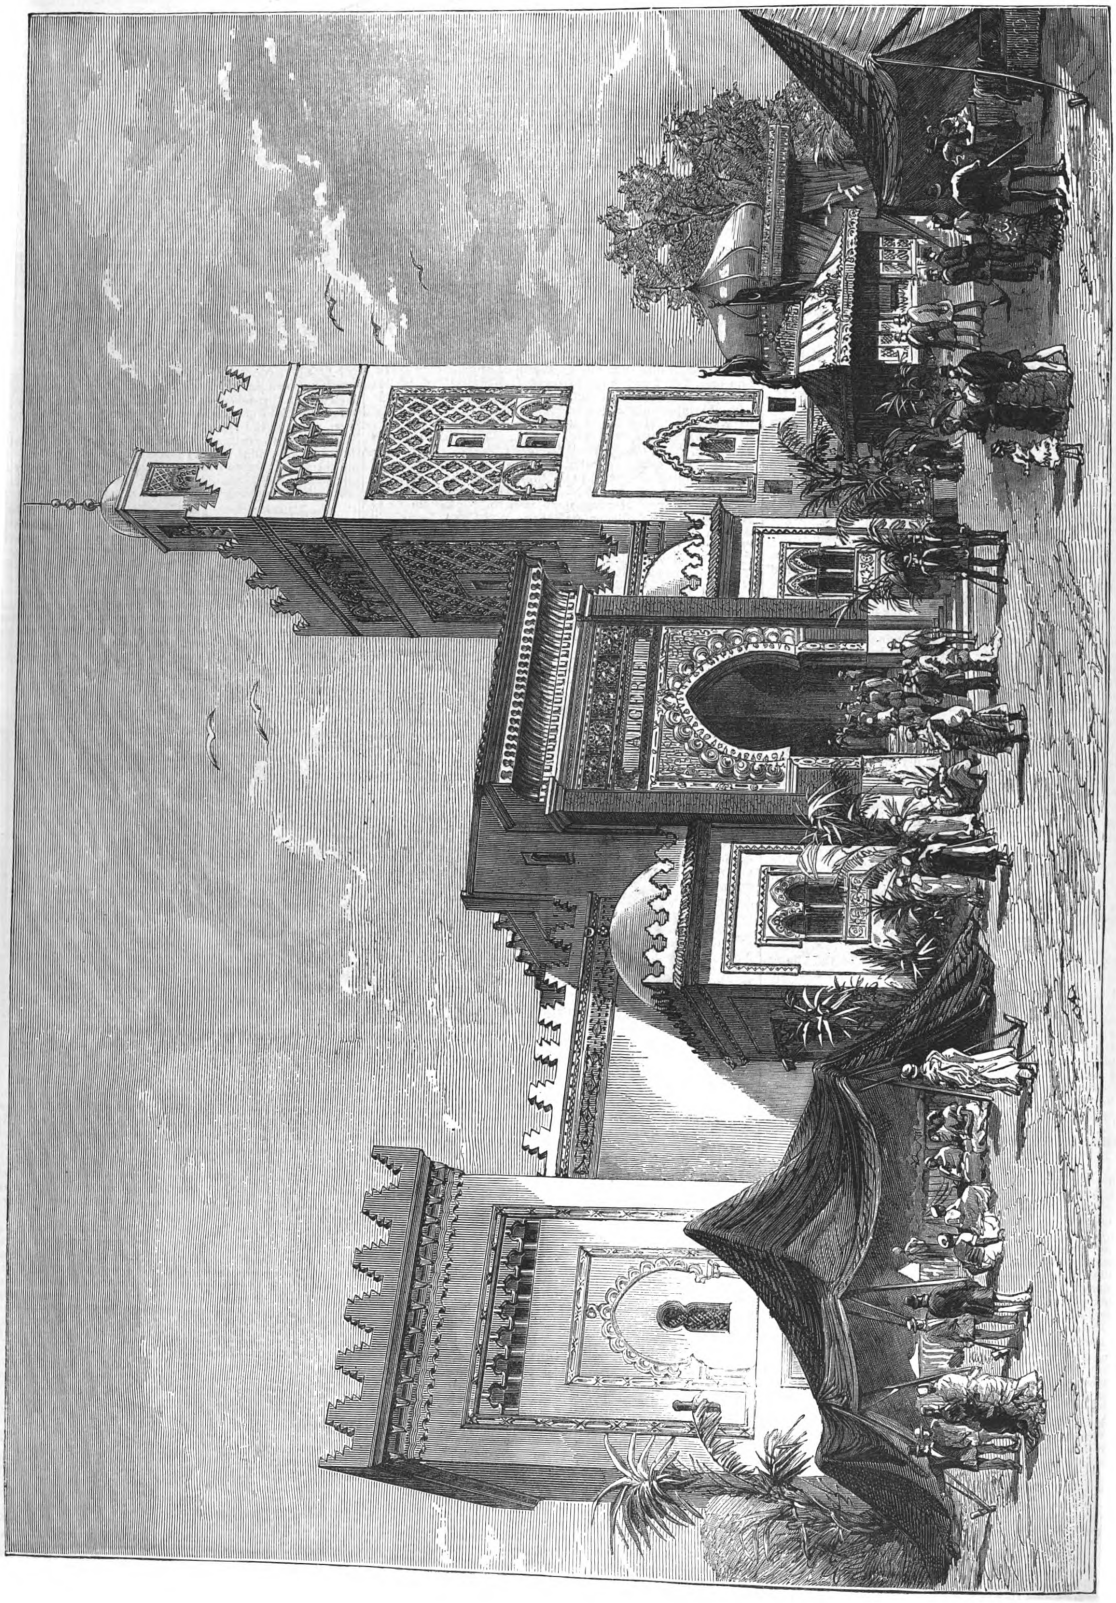
At the Lyceum Miss Bateman appeared, according to announcement, in the rôle of Mary Warner. The drama is so well known that no special description is needed. The great scenes lost none of their force in the acting, and the heroine won, as usual, the sympathies of an excited audience. Miss Bateman, in the maturity of her powers, is able to exhibit her indisputable genius in every phase of its manifestation. Such an actress is sure to achieve a new triumph with every fresh appearance. She should, however, do justice to herself by appearing in a new part.

The Gaiety reopened on Monday in a state of redecoration which will reward inspection, and caused some surprise by its completeness and beauty. The repainting, regilding, and ornamentation generally have been carried out by Mr. Edward Bell, under the direction and personal superintendence of Mr. C. J. Phipps, members of the Institute of Architects. A new drop-scene, painted by Messrs. Gordon and Harford, is not the least of the present attractions. An experiment in electric illumination was made in front of the theatre, ultimately intended for the inside also, which will probably be imitated elsewhere. The performances consisted of "The Grasshopper" and "Little Doctor Faust," and were well received.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"Mazurka," "Barcarole," and "Capriccio," are three pianoforte pieces (op. 34) by Ignaz Brüll, who will be remembered by his opera, "The Golden Cross" (produced here by Mr. Carl Rosa), and also by his skill as a pianist manifested at the Monday Popular Concerts and the Crystal Palace. The pieces now referred to are very characteristic in style, with a pervading vein of pleasing melody, and some brilliant passage-writing. They will be found serviceable for teaching purposes. The publishers are Messrs. Chappell and Co., from whom, also, we have a pleasing song, "Without thee" ("Ohne dich"), by the same composer; a duet, "The Birthday of the Flowers;" and a song, "Birds of Passage;" two very flowing and melodious pieces, both by Henry Smart, who knows so well how to write effectively for voices without overtaxing moderate powers. Other attractive vocal compositions issued by Messrs. Chappell are:—"Two little lives," No. 6 of "Songs from Hans Andersen," by J. L. Molloy, who has well caught the expressive simplicity of the poet; and "This bonny lass o' mine" and "O'er the dancing sea," two songs by J. L. Roeckel, in each of which there is much character.

Some pianoforte music lately issued by Messrs. Chappell also claims notice. "Six Bagatelles," by Edmund Rogers, are pieces written in an easy and simple style, calculated to interest juvenile students. Each has a distinctive title—No. 1, "Cloudlets;" No. 2, "Twilight Dreams;" No. 3, "Slow March;" No. 4, "Cymbeline;" No. 5, "L'Invitation pour la Valse;" and, No. 6, "Autumn Winds." "Romanesque" and "Cradle-Song," both by Cotsford Dick, are well contrasted in the antique formalism of the one and the gentle simplicity of the other. "Golden Dreams" is an effective and brilliant "Valse de Salon," by R. F. Harvey; and "Three Aquarelles," by G. I. Van Eyken, are pleasing bagatelles, respectively entitled "Humoresque," "Melody," and "Impromptu." "Rosalind, Romance," by J. F. Barnett, is a very graceful elaboration of a pleasing cantabile theme, which is embellished with a variety of surrounding passages, à la Thalberg. The piece is a good study for crossing the hands.



A goodly collection of bright dance music also comes from Messrs. Chappell, all by that well-known provider of such pieces, M. Charles D'Albert. His quadrilles "Sweethearts' Lancers," on new and old popular airs; his "Engaged" and "Distant Shore" waltzes, "Cleopatra" and "Love-Letter Galop," and "Love-Letter Polka," will be found spirited accompaniments to the several dances indicated.

Bal Masqué, Sept Airs de Ballet par S. Jadassohn, Op. 26 (Enoch and Sons). This is a series of charming pianoforte pieces in various dance rhythms, each impressed with a distinct character, and all full of grace and melodic beauty, reminding us much, although without plagiarism, of the poetical music of Chopin.

"Biblioteca del Pianista" (Ricordi). The new number of this cheap series comprises the six first books of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Wörte," which are here presented at the price of eighteenpence. The work is clearly engraved and well printed, and is edited by M. Edwart, who has supplied some judicious fingering.

"Our Lads in Blue" (Duff and Stewart) is a patriotic song, dedicated to the First Lord of the Admiralty. The words, by Byron Webber, are written in eloquent advocacy of the importance of maintaining British supremacy at sea, and the policy of training the juvenile ragged class as sailors. The music, by Hamilton Clarke, is well adapted to the purpose of the text, being bold and vigorous in rhythm, and in the true style of the nautical ballad.

Mr. W. H. Brittain, file and steel manufacturer, of Sheffield, was on Tuesday elected Master Cutler. The Cutlers' Feast is fixed for Sept. 5.

THE UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.—EIGHTH ARTICLE.

(From our Correspondent.)

The art-outcome of the remaining nationalities, as displayed on the walls of the Paris Exhibition, must be touched on as lightly and briefly as possible, seeing that this is our concluding article. Germany, Belgium, Holland, and in these latter days Spain, occupy nearly as prominent a place in the æsthetic eye as France herself; but the English public has been kept fairly well informed of the art-doings of these countries by means of the various Continental exhibitions annually held in London. It is otherwise with the outlying States, and that for the obvious reason that, whatever may have been their quondam achievements, barrenness has for the time being overtaken them.

Portugal, for example, does little more than rise to the level of a provincial art-school in England or France; and yet at the close of the fifteenth and during the first half of the sixteenth centuries it was in many fields of activity one of the most enterprising countries in Europe. Seventeen pictures in all, with a couple of chalk drawings and seven pieces of sculpture displayed in the apartment shared by the Greeks, are all that the Portuguese have to show of art, and these have not even the honour of a place in the Official Catalogue. Among them are three well-painted portraits, a rough and rather heavy landscape showing a girl knee-deep in a river washing, with a wood beyond; and another, two children pulling wild flowers in a green meadow. In genre subjects, there is a girl standing scratching her head in sad puzzlement at having let fall and broken her pitcher. Another picture shows a very spirited dancing-scene; and a third, which is on a large scale, introduces the visitor to a lady teaching scripture to an old woman in whose lap lies a distaff. The most ambitious picture in the meagre collection is that which shows an Indian and a monk contemplating the dead body of a dark-haired lady lying in a desert. We have no means whatever of giving the names of any of the artists.

Greece, which occupies the principal portion of this room, shows about forty pictures, mainly of the simple, domestic kind, interspersed with pretty landscapes and portraits, and painted for the most part in a smooth, conscientious way. Pericles Pantazis—who, by-the-way, paints sands and sea in the manner of Whistler and Moore—is the chief contributor. Ralli shows a good Oriental interior with a female figure, and N. Lytras five Eastern boys playing and singing, with drum and whistle, before a door in which a pleased mother and baby are seen. The sculptures are equal in number to the pictures, and of these D. Kossos is the author of more than half. They are chiefly portraits, and among them are those of Otho I. and his Queen Amelia, George I., the Marquis de Saint-Hilaire, and Lord Byron. With the exception of G. Vroutos, who sends, among others, ideal busts of Achilles, Paris, Aurora, and Night, there is little in this section to remind one that Greece possesses the most beautiful mythology and the noblest history in the world.

Switzerland, which contributes in paintings, enamels, and stained-glass designs about a hundred and fifty works, does very little in sculpture. L. Wethli, of Zurich, sends four portrait busts, and F. Landry contributes a case of bronze medallions which are well worth examination. Miss F. Olivary has several very clever portraits in enamel, and C. Wehrli reproduces on glass various favourite subjects after Kaulbach, Guido Reni, Raphael, and other masters. Among the landscapes will be found several attractive pictures, not the least important of which are a couple by A. Stengelin, one representing Ruysdael's road in the neighbourhood of Leyden and the other some cows feeding on the bank of a lazy, tree-bordered river, with trees also in the distance. E. Stückelberg sends a picture suffused with the glow of evening, while a girl is having her fortune told by a stile on the side of a hill. Two, however, of the most popular and highly esteemed Swiss landscapists are absent—viz., M. Diday, of Geneva, and his famous pupil, Calame. A. Schoeck, another pupil of note, scarcely makes up for their absence by his solitary contribution of a setting sun on the island-studded coast of Norway; and although A. Baudit, also a pupil of Diday's, has sent three landscapes, they are all French in subject, and such as are to be found in the department of Landes, within easy reach of his home in Bordeaux. F. Zimmermann, a pupil of Calame's, shows a greater love of country, and finds quite material enough in the High Alps for the exercise of his pencil; and L. Jacottet is to be congratulated on the same score. He sends a charming view of the waterfall of Reichenbach and one of the Château of Chillon. P. Koller is represented by a splendid group of cattle in the High Alps, with a storm lowering in the distance. Lugardon, another artist who finds work enough for his pencil at home, shows this very conclusively by his view of a lake and snowy Alps in the canton of Berne. A splendidly-painted sea-beach, with level dunes and scant herbage, and cottages in mid-distance, all under a fine evening effect, is perhaps the best of the three pictures contributed by A. Potter. Deserving of praise, also, are the landscapes of A. Baudit, J. F. Farjon, and G. Loppe, the famous glacier painter. Of subject-pictures there are several deserving notice, F. Burnand's "Village Oven," showing a lusty housewife, in white apron, bearing away a great basketful of bread, while the little ones have their arms full, too, of the great loaves, being one of the most pleasingly realistic works in the section. The details, also, are all well considered. The village merry-making of E. Castres, which we see going on under the trees, is also capitally treated. E. and J. Girardet, G. Bosshardt, S. Durand, F. Zuber-Buhler ("Birth of Venus"), and L. P. Robert (zephyrs of the evening floating through a glade), are all men who do honour to their country. We could scarcely imagine so large a display of Swiss art as we have here without the representation of some one or other of those grand victories which have made Switzerland famous, and on looking round we are not disappointed. The Battle of Sempach, with the heroic Switzer grasping the spears of the foe and guiding them to his own heart, that he might make an opening for his countrymen and thus turn the stubborn fortunes of the day, is depicted by C. Grob with great spirit and much archæological knowledge, albeit there is a touch of German dryness in his method which we don't altogether like. From another point of view, however, this may be regarded as more appropriate to the subject than if the painter had used a juicier and more generous brush. Altogether, Switzerland takes a decidedly forward place among the smaller States.

Russia, although geographically and politically one of the Great Powers, must, nevertheless, artistically be classed with the smaller States. Some six or eight years ago she closed the art-schools at Warsaw, and told the students, if they wished to study art, they must come to St. Petersburg. Students, whether Polish or Russian, did not find at St. Petersburg what they wanted; and accordingly they went to Paris, where they did. Of the training acquired there they have made most admirable use, and in sundry well-known instances have produced works of the very highest class. Such is H. H. Siemiradski's "Living Torches of Nero," a work that may well take its place alongside those of Hanns Makart and the other successful coverers of large canvasses of the grand bravura type. The bloated tyrant lolls on his negro-borne couch in front of his palace, surrounded by his Court, and contemplates quietly several Christian martyrs being tied up in combustible materials and hoisted to the top of garlanded poles, where fire is applied to the inflammable stuff with which they are bound, and they thus become living torches, "the living torches of Nero." The splendour of the women on the left, the gorgeousness of the Court, and the imperial magnificence of the palace, all help to emphasise the sorry spectacle and fix indelibly on the mind the tortures of the early martyrs. A subject of a more pleasing nature is that in which the same artist exhibits a fair lady of stately presence, attired in pale yellow drapery, being assisted down the steps of a sea-wall on to a magnificent barge, and a third is that in which a young girl of great beauty is being unrobed by two men in presence of a Roman magnate. These three pictures are by far the most important in the Russian section. Apart from these, and the Western training which they suggest, the native genius of Russia, like that of other Northern countries, delights in depicting forest scenery, landscapes mantled in snow, or in genre subjects of the more homely type.

Among the more successful landscapes we would note A. J. Kouindji's square of cottages on a rising ground overlooking a river, all under a fine effect of moonlight. Two tall poplars lend impressiveness to the scene. Excellent, also, is the hayfield, with lots of girls busy gathering the harvest, a weedy river in the foreground, which is bathed in sunshine, while a summer shower falls on the distant country beyond the clump of wood which is seen in the middle distance. The author of this lovely landscape is W. D. Orlovski. The "Winter Forest," whose trees are foliaged with snow instead of leaves, beneath which is seen a block of pale green ice lately cut from the frozen pool on which it rests, is by A. J. Mechtcherski, and might be acknowledged with pride by G. Loppé, of Geneva, who has made ice-forms his special study. The "Ice Palace," by V. J. Jacobi, with the people bowing ironically to the old King and Queen, who sit shivering on their ice throne, is also clever, but the humour has a painful touch in it. The forest pictures of J. J. Schihckine are all carefully studied. We would commend, also, the works of A. von Becker, Bochmann, C. T. Huhn, A. Liljelund, B. G. Perroff, and W. G. Makovski, most of whom are disciples of the Düsseldorf school. Among the more important figure-subjects are the procession of the Prophet's Carpet and the Bulgarian Martyrs, both by Makovski and full of rich, dark, harmonious colour. C. A. Savitzki's navvies hard at work making a new railway line has grey for its prevailing key, and is certainly one of the fine pictures in the Russian section. Kramskoi, on the other hand, in his picture of nymphs on "a Night in May" rejoices in the golden suggestiveness of Poole and Woolmer, while Pelevine in "Tsar Jean le Terrible" visiting the cell of Nicolas Salos, reproduces, not unsuccessfully, the luminous and no less suggestive darkness of Rembrandt. In pleasing contrast to this is the bright, sunny picture by Koehler of a little girl under a tree being guarded by a large dog. The chief painter of marine subjects is J. C. Aivazovski, and his Tempest in the North Seas—though the waves are painted more flimsily than with us—looks wonderfully like nature. We see a laden boat in the foreground, and others leaving a foundering ship in the middle distance. Mighty rocks loom up mistily on the left; and the whole scene, in spite of its light handling, is marvellously impressive.

Besides one hundred and forty-four pictures in oil, there are a dozen good water colours, and Alexieff may be accepted as representative of the medallionists, and Autokolski and Runeberg of the sculptors proper. Altogether, there is a considerable amount of vitality in the Russian section, and the receptivity of the artists is remarkable. From Düsseldorf to Paris, and from Paris to Rome, they wander at will, but never leave an art-centre without assimilating fairly whatever it has to impart.

Spain, unlike Russia, has a grand art-history of her own; but her genius has long lain fallow, and until the other day she had scarcely a painter of European importance to whom she could point. Including sculpture, painting, engraving, and architecture, the Spanish section numbers about two hundred works. By far the largest and most imposing canvas is that which represents Doña Juana da Locas, with her attendants, standing on a hillside, by the coffin of her husband, while the priest reads the service. The wind blows back the flames of the candles, and the scene is altogether striking. Another impressive picture is that by Ramirez, representing an old man, in presence of keenly-observant spectators, revealing something to them by writing on the floor. The name is not given in the catalogue, and several of the principal contributors are not even mentioned. Fortuny, for example, has nearly thirty pictures in the present exhibition, varying in size from a few inches square to canvases three or four feet long, is altogether ignored in the catalogue, and yet this man was the leader of the great art-revival which has once more brought Spain to the front. Escosura is represented by only one picture, that of Philip the Second at Hampton Court; but several men of note are not represented at all. With the exception of the men we have mentioned, the others call for no special remark.

Concerning Germany, Belgium, and Holland we will not pretend to speak. All these are amply represented, and the English public are familiar with the various masters and their methods. It had, it must at the same time be confessed, been our intention to review the art-products of these countries at some length, seeing how closely affiliated in many cases their practice is to that of England; but these articles have already run to too great a length, and we must be satisfied with thus leaving our readers on ground familiar and well known.

Of France, which has been the cause of this great exhibition, it seems very ungracious not to speak more in detail; but our general impression of the appearance she makes in the competition, and of the place she holds among the nations, was pretty freely expressed in our first article. We can only repeat that whatever is specially fine in the art-practice of any country is due, either directly or indirectly, to French influence. All methods and styles, all classes of subjects, find their most masterly exponents in France. Across the whole breadth of Europe, and over the wide Atlantic from the great Western Continent, come the pilgrim students; for they know that France is par excellence the home of refinement and taste, and Paris the Art-School of the world.

The Right Hon. W. H. Smith has bought an estate known as Keddington Leys, in the parishes of Keddington, Barnardiston, and Hundon, Suffolk. The estate comprises 246 acres, together with the mansion of Kelton Hall. The purchase money amounted to £11,600. Mr. Smith is now a considerable landowner in Suffolk.

NOVELS.

All the many qualities which have made its author popular are displayed without stint in the three volumes entitled Cruel London, by Joseph Hatton (Chapman and Hall), a novel full of striking situations and of dramatic, not to say melodramatic, incidents. The characters are numerous; but, numerous as they are, they are handled with distinctness and in a manner which sufficiently preserves their individuality. The tale that is told is far from a pleasant one, and the scenes to which the reader is introduced are frequently, if not generally, of a dark and painful kind; but there is the relief which is afforded by the flitting of good spirits across the stage and by occasional gleams of bright, poetic fancy. The title, contrary to one's ordinary experience of titles, is significant of the author's theme and scope. London, with its riches and its poverty, with its gaiety and its wretchedness, with its commercial and its social scheming and dishonesty, with its wickedness, whether covered or not with a veneer of respectability, with its rogues and their victims cheek by jowl, with its illustrations of the human anvil incessantly beaten upon by the human hammer, with its spectacle of wheel so involved within wheel that the good cannot extricate itself from the evil, and with its cruelly hard treatment of the unfortunate and of the heedless, is the author's main subject; and, by way of contrast, by way of light to relieve the general darkness, there are little idyllic pictures of rural innocence, simplicity, and honesty. Nothing new, someone may say, in all this. But it may be urged, on the other hand, that the subject is inexhaustible, and that it admits of treatment in a variety of styles, whereof we have a notable specimen in the novel under consideration. The author lets it be known that he has dramatised his story as a "stage play;" and it is likely to have been improved by the process, which would, of course, necessitate compression, condensation, and an excision of many details and episodical matters which produce an impression of diffuseness, break the continuity, impair the interest, retard and diminish the climax and the catastrophe. There is almost an embarrassment of heroes and heroines, so that the hero and heroine, properly so called, are frequently submerged and disappear from view and, to a considerable extent, from remembrance. So far as the true hero and heroine are concerned, the plot is, briefly, as follows:—A Lincolnshire squire, a hard but a just man, of large property, leaves a will, whereby he bequeaths to the niece he loved a black box containing, apparently, nothing but a few withered flowers, and to one of his farm-labourers, a young man to whom he has not behaved well and whom he believes that his niece is as good as engaged to marry, the whole, apparently, of his real and personal estate, save so much as will be required for the payment of certain legacies. The heretofore farm-labourer, having become a man of great wealth, determines to carry out the idea he had already formed of going to seek freedom and adventure in London. He leaves the niece, who loves him dearly, and whom he on his side is inclined to love, and launches himself upon the tide of dissipation in the metropolis, where he finds all manner of affable persons, "affable hawks," in fact, not only ready but anxious to educate him into a man of fashion and gentility. He is so apt a pupil that he soon arrives at the brink of ruin, from which he is rescued by the handsome, generous, deserted niece of his posthumous benefactor. Hence the peg upon which the author hangs those graphic descriptions which justify the title of his novel. The heretofore farm-labourer, after his miraculous rescue, behaves in the strangest possible manner; but, if he did not, the second and third volumes would fault for it, and the reader would miss some thrilling scenes on the other side of the Atlantic and in London. Whether the true hero and heroine come together again in the orthodox fashion and marry themselves, as the French have it, or whether a cruel destiny and a "cruel London" forbid the banns, shall not be divulged in this notice. It would be unfair, however, to conclude without informing readers in general that there is in the course of the novel an unhappy marriage, which is dissolved in a very tragic manner; and that toxicologists, murderers, and circles in which the possibility of making away with others or being oneself made away with by foul means which leave no trace is a favourite topic of discussion or of contemplation, will find in the story a singular case of that desideratum—a poison which leaves "no sign for Coroner's inquests." But the murder is nothing of the vulgar sort; it is merely a piece of poetical justice: an excellent man, with the best of motives, poisons a villain, whom he was prevented by circumstances over which he had no control from fighting in a duel or shooting in a quarrel, either of which more honourable courses he would personally have preferred "to the cowardly secrecy of Fabian Pasha's artful aid."

A high degree of that properly dramatic talent which is exerted in conceiving lifelike individual characters, in grouping them and playing them off against each other, and in managing the incidents that are combined to work out a plot, has been employed in Dangerfield (three volumes, Tinsley Brothers), by Mr. H. Baden Pritchard. The author had before written two pleasant little books of tourist description, "Tramps in the Tyrol" and "Beauty Spots of the Continent;" but this is his first appearance as a novelist. He takes here the line of serious domestic comedy, if we may call it so, in a story of everyday home life, which is treated, generally, with an agreeable lightness of tone, but the moral issues of which are forcibly presented, though without a word of preaching. The crisis of the plot bears some resemblance to that of Mr. Tom Taylor's popular comedy, "Still Waters Run Deep," but is nevertheless quite of original invention; while either Shirley Brooks or Mortimer Collins may be recalled to the reader's mind by the skilful free-hand drawing of the less momentous parts, and by the graceful liveliness of feeling and expression. The action is divided between the innocent Bohemian society of a few artists, actors, and others connected with the Comus Theatre in the Strand, with a club of their patrons and acquaintance in Covent Garden; and the seaside villa of a mercantile marine captain's family near the port of Southpool, with a few aristocratic and fashionable outsiders in town and country. Captain Whyte-Dangerfield, whose name is chosen—we think not wisely—for the title of the story, is a mere accomplished scoundrel, of the type which has become exceedingly familiar to novel readers in the past ten or twenty years—an elegant swindler, liar, and heartless profligate, though reputed bold and clever enough to do what he likes in this foolish world of feeble and fallible mortals. He is finally defeated and disgraced, of course; but the reader will not care much about him, for the true hero is already recognised in Tom Heatherly, an honest, affectionate, single-hearted young fellow, with a charming girlish wife, and with her intimate friend, Bertha Marigold, a high-spirited young lady from Westcombe Lodge, the aforesaid maritime residence of Captain and Mrs. Hardy. The humble position of Tom Heatherly, at the outset of his London life—namely, that of a stage carpenter who occasionally does a job of scene-painting, and whose talent as an artist comes out in that way, gives a deeper interest to the affairs of his modest little household, and to his steps of social advancement. We might take some exception to the questionable behaviour and consequent embarrassment of Mrs. Hardy; but in other respects the story is good and wholesome, and may be recommended as one of the most engaging we have lately perused.

OBITUARY.

VISCOUNT CHELSEA.

Albert Edward George Henry, Viscount Chelsea, who died on the 2nd inst., was the eldest son and heir-apparent of George Henry, Earl Cadogan, Under-Secretary for War, by Lady Beatrix Jane, his wife, fourth daughter of William, second Earl of Craven. He was born Dec. 29, 1866, and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales stood sponsor at his baptism. His next brother, Henry Arthur, born June 13, 1868, is now heir-apparent to Earl Cadogan, and bears the courtesy title of Viscount Chelsea.

SIR STAPLETON MAINWARING, BART.

Sir Stapleton Thomas Mainwaring, of Over Peover, Cheshire, died on the 4th inst., at the age of forty-one. The eldest son of the late Sir Harry Mainwaring of Peover Hall, by his marriage with Emma, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Thomas William Tatton, of Withenshaw, in the County Palatine of Cheshire, he was born in January, 1837, and succeeded to the title on his father's death, in 1875. He was a magistrate for Cheshire. He married, in 1867, Elizabeth, third daughter of Mr. Michael Kinnean, of Athenry, in the county of Galway; but was left a widower in 1871. The baronetcy passes to his next brother, Mr. Philip Tatton Mainwaring, who now becomes fourth Baronet. He was born in 1838, and married, in 1875, Emily, daughter of the late Rev. George Pitt, of Crickett Court, Somersetshire.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR M. GALWEY.

Lieutenant-General Sir Michael Galwey, K.C.B., of Osborne House, Monkstown, in the county of Dublin, died in London on the 22nd ult. He was born Oct. 1, 1818, the son of James Edward Galwey, Esq., of Nadrid, in the county of Cork, by Marcella, his wife, daughter of Christopher McEvoy, Esq., of Wimbledon, and was nephew of the late Admiral Edward Galwey, of Lota, Cork. Sir Michael entered the military service of the Honourable East India Company, and was for some time Colonel Commandant 36th Regiment Madras Native Infantry. He served in Burmah in 1852-3, on the Persian Expedition in 1857 and the mutiny in Bengal from 1857 to 1859, and was at many important battles and other affairs, including Cawnpore and the relief of Lucknow. He also took part in the campaign in Oude in 1858, and for his services in India had received a medal and two clasps. Sir Michael was made a K.C.B. in 1877, and recently obtained the rank of Lieutenant-General. He married, March 25, 1845, Anna Maria, daughter of Joseph Cuthbert Ross, Esq., by Anne Wooton, his wife, and sister of Madame la Marquise de Ribeyre de Villemont, and leaves issue.

ADMIRAL GARDNER.

Rear-Admiral Alan Henry Gardner, C.B., who died on the 30th ult. at Percy Villas, Kensington, aged sixty, was the second son of General the Hon. William Henry Gardner, by Eliza Lydia, his wife, daughter of Lieutenant-General William Fyers, and was thus grandson of the great Admiral Lord Gardner. He was born in August, 1817; entered the Royal Navy in 1832, and served for a time on the Mediterranean station. He obtained promotion to Commander for services against pirates in the Eastern seas in 1848; and during the Crimean War he was engaged in the Baltic as Captain of H.M.S. Driver. Rear-Admiral Gardner attained that rank in 1874. He married, in 1860, Amy Sophia, daughter of the late John Payne Elwes, Esq., of Stoke College, Essex.

THE BISHOP OF ARDAGH.

The Most Rev. George Conroy, D.D., Bishop of Ardagh and Clonmacnoise, and Apostolic Delegate for the Sovereign Pontiff to the Catholic Church in Canada, whose death in Canada is just announced, was a very distinguished member of the Catholic Episcopacy in Ireland. Educated in one of the classical schools of the diocese of Armagh, he went to Rome to finish his studies in the College of the Propaganda. His collegiate course was of considerable brilliancy, and he eventually gained the distinction of Doctor of Theology. Ordained to the priesthood, he returned to Ireland, became associated with the missionary College of All Hallows, Drumcondra, and was selected by Cardinal Cullen to act as his private secretary, and so continued until 1871, when he succeeded Dr. McCabe as Bishop of Ardagh. Dr. Conroy was a ripe and accomplished scholar, and as a prelate was universally esteemed and respected. His literary abilities were of no mean order, and, in conjunction with Dr. Moran, Bishop of Ossory, he was the main support of the "Irish Ecclesiastical Record."

MR. SMYTH, OF GAYBROOK.

Robert Smyth, Esq., of Gaybrook, in the county of Westmeath, J.P., one of the chief landed proprietors of that county, whose death is just announced, was formerly Captain in the Army, and served as High Sheriff of Westmeath in 1831, and for the county of Antrim in 1852. He was born July 20, 1801, the second son of Ralph Smyth, Esq., of Gaybrook, by Hannah Maria, his second wife, daughter of Sir Robert Staples, Bart., and succeeded to the family estates at the death of his brother, in 1827. He married, May 20, 1830, Henrietta Frances, youngest daughter of Nathaniel Alexander, D.D., Bishop of Meath, and leaves three sons and three daughters. The family of Smyth of Gaybrook, as well as that of Smythe of Barbavilla, descends from William Smyth, Bishop of Kilmore and Ardagh, who married Mary, sister of Sir John Povey, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland.

MR. COWAN.

John Cowan, late one of the Senators of the College of Justice in Edinburgh as Lord Cowan, died at Elm Bank, near that city, on the 1st inst. Called to the Scottish Bar, he was appointed Sheriff of Kincardineshire in 1848 and Solicitor-General for Scotland in 1851. The same year he succeeded to the high judicial office of Senator of the College of Justice, adopting the titular designation of Lord Cowan. He retired from the Bench a few years since, and at the period of his decease had attained the age of seventy-nine.

The deaths have also been announced of—

George Gott Nelson, Esq., Captain and Brevet Major, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, on June 28, at Ferozepore.

James Sutcliffe, Esq., Director-General of Public Instruction for Bengal, on the 29th ult., aged fifty-one.

General William Knox Babington, late H.M. 17th Regiment Madras Native Infantry, on the 31st ult.

The Rev. Alfred Tatham, M.A., Minor Canon of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, on the 1st inst., aged sixty-five.

Canon Knight, on the 6th inst., in his eighty-ninth year. He had been fifty-nine years Rector of St. Michael's, Bristol.

The Rev. John Tournay Parsons, Vicar of Much Dewchurch, near Hereford, on the 23rd ult., at his Vicarage, aged fifty-two.

The Rev. Canon Gribble, F.R.A.S., Chaplain to H.M. Embassy, Constantinople, and Canon of Gibraltar, on the 25th ult., off Malta, on his return home, aged seventy-one.

Joseph Trigge Schomberg, Esq., Q.C., Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and Recorder of Aldborough, Suffolk, on the 28th ult., at Seend, Wilts, aged seventy-two.

Captain Richard Henry Hare, G.C.C., late 13th Light Infantry, on June 22, at Elmina, Gold Coast, Africa. He was only son of the Hon. Henry Hare, youngest brother of William second Earl of Listowel, K.P., father of the present Earl.

Sergeant Samuel M'Gaw, V.C., of the Black Watch, who won the Victoria Cross for his gallantry in leading a portion of the 42nd through the bush at the Battle of Amoaful, Jan. 31, 1874, last week at Larnaca, Cyprus.

The Hon. Edward Miles David Browne, Captain R.N., brother of the present Lord Kilmaine, and second son of John Cavendish, late Lord Kilmaine, by his second wife, Mary, daughter of the late Hon. Charles Ewan Law, M.P., Recorder of London (and granddaughter of Lord Chief Justice Lord Ellenborough), on the 27th ult.

Sackville Deane Hamilton, Esq., on the 30th ult., at Glenview, Freshford, near Bath. He was son of the Rev. Sackville Robert Hamilton, Rector of Mallow, by Jane, his wife, daughter of Edward Deane Freeman, Esq., of Castle Cor, and grandson of the Right Hon. Sackville Hamilton, Chief Secretary for Ireland, a scion of the noble house of Boyne.

James Edward Thomas Parratt, Esq., Inspector General of Army Hospitals, on the 31st ult., at Victoria-road, Old Charlton, Kent, aged seventy-one. He served for nearly thirty years with the Royal Artillery, including the campaign in China, 1841-2, and subsequently as Principal Medical Officer at Woolwich.

Captain John de Courcy Dashwood, R.N., aged seventy-six. He entered the Royal Navy in 1814, and served as a midshipman during the American war of 1815, taking part in the expedition to New Orleans. As Lieutenant of the Windsor Castle, commanded by his father, the late Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Dashwood, he was stationed off Lisbon during the rebellion in 1824, when King John VI. took refuge on board the Windsor Castle, and subsequently conferred decorations on the officers of the ship, in commemoration of the occasion, Lieutenant Dashwood receiving the order of the Tower and Sword. He was promoted a retired Commander in 1864.

By the last Australian mail news is brought of the death of one of the leading journalists of South Australia—Mr. John Howard Clark, the editor and one of the proprietors of the Register and other newspapers of Adelaide. By his persistent course of keeping his journals free from bigotry and party prejudice, a fault to which there is always too much inclination in small communities, Mr. Clark materially aided in raising newspapers in the colony to a rank of which our best English journals might be proud. He was also one of the founders of the Adelaide Philosophical Society and South Australian Institute, in both of which he took especial interest to the last. A public meeting was held after his decease, at which it was determined to raise a memorial to him, which is in all probability to take the shape of a scholarship at the Adelaide University.

The gold medal of the Royal Agricultural Society was awarded on Tuesday, at Bristol, to Mr. M'Cormack, for his self sheaf-binding reaper, which the judges considered fulfilled all the conditions required by the society.

The sixteenth report of the Royal Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund, which was issued on the 1st inst., shows that the total amount of contributions to Dec. 31, 1876, was £1,460,861, which, together with the interest received, has enabled the sum of £1,472,259 to be expended in relief, leaving a capital of £400,640, and an annual income of £33,935. The number of children in boarding institutions at the end of 1876 was 761—365 boys and 396 girls—inclusive of those in the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum for Girls. The "Captain" Relief Fund amounted to £31,415, and at the end of the year 107 widows and 152 orphans were receiving aid from this fund.

The forty-sixth annual congress of the British Medical Association was begun at Bath on Tuesday. The sermon at the Abbey, in the morning, was preached by the Bishop of the diocese, Lord A. Hervey. In the afternoon meetings of the council and of the committee of sections were held; and in the evening the general meeting took place in the Assembly Room, where the museum of the association had been arranged. Mr. W. Dallas Husband, of York, the treasurer of the association, presided, in consequence of the death of the president of last year, Dr. Eason Wilkinson, of Manchester. Dr. R. W. Falconer, who has served the office of Mayor of Bath, was unanimously elected president for the year ensuing. In his opening address he dwelt upon the great progress the association has made of late years. It now numbers 7700 members in the United Kingdom, with a colonial branch in Jamaica. The influence of the association was seen in the attention paid by the Government at different times to the views it expressed upon sanitary medical subjects. The association had also promoted the public good by encouraging original research. A vote of condolence was passed with the family of the late president. Mr. Fowke, the president, read the report, which was adopted.

The Portsmouth Royal Sailors' Home has been opened twenty-six years. It has enjoyed the patronage of the Queen, after a minute inspection by the lamented Prince Consort, and has been favoured with the approval of successive Boards of Admiralty and distinguished officers of every rank in her Majesty's service. Nor has it been wanting in public confidence. A large institution has been built and furnished with every requirement for the time, not only for the temporal, but for the moral and religious benefit of the seamen. And it has had abundant success. It has supplied seamen with 417,881 meals and 349,286 beds. The beds during the month of May, 1878, were nearly 3000; 13,188 shipwrecked seamen have been lodged and relieved; and about £400,000 of seamen's money has been deposited with the superintendents for safe custody, the greater part of which was thereby rescued from plunder and much of it enjoyed by the families of the seamen. The directors desire to enlarge the home, in order to increase its usefulness, and a property which meets all the requirements is now offered. The cost of the purchase of the property and of a smaller house to give access to the home, and of the required improvements, and fittings, and furniture, is calculated at £2500. For this sum the directors appeal to the public. Contributions will be received by the treasurers, Messrs. Grant, Gillman, and Long, Portsmouth; Messrs. Glyn and Co., London; and the superintendent, J. L. Thorne, Esq., R.N., at the Home.

THE PARIS TOURNAMENT.

The following interesting Game was played in the eighth round between Mr. MACKENZIE, of New York, and Herr ENGLISCH, of Vienna.—(Ruy Lopez.)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Herr E.)	WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Herr E.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	15. Q to Q 3rd	P to Kt 3rd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	16. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q Kt 4th
3. B to Kt 5th		17. P to Q Kt 3rd	Kt to Kt 3rd
It is worth noting that this opening was adopted by the first players in a large majority of the games played in this tournament.		18. B to R 6th	K R to K sq
		19. Q R to K sq	B to Kt 2nd
		20. B takes B (ch)	Q takes B
		21. R to K sq	Q to Q sq
3.	P to Q B 3rd	22. Kt to K 4th	B takes Kt
4. B to R 4th	Kt to B 3rd	23. Q takes B	Kt to Q B 3rd
5. P to Q 4th	P takes P	24. P to K R 4th	B to K Kt 2nd
6. Castles	B to B 4th	25. B to Kt 5th	Q to Kt sq
7. P to K 5th	Kt to Q 4th	26. B to B 4th	K B to B sq
8. P to Q B 3rd	Castles	27. R to Q sq	Q to K sq
9. P takes P	B to K 2nd	28. B to K 3rd	Q to Q sq
It will be admitted, we think, that Black has now a worse position than if he had played the B to this square on the sixth move, as is usual in this opening.		29. P to K R 5th	Kt to Q B sq
		30. P takes P	R P takes P
10. B to Kt 3rd	Kt to Kt 3rd	31. B to Kt 5th	Q to Kt 3rd
11. P to Q 5th	Kt to R 4th	32. B to B 6th	Q to B 4th
12. P to Q 6th		33. R to Q 5th
A good move in our judgment, although we observe that Mr. Potter, in the Westminster Papers, doubts its soundness.		Decisive. Should Black now remove the Queen from the rank on which it stands, then follows the fine stroke, 34. R to K R 5th, and the second player has no resource.
12.	P takes P	33.	Q takes R
13. P takes P	B to B 3rd	34. Q takes Q	Kt takes P
14. B to B 2nd	Kt (from Kt 3rd) to B 5th	35. B takes K Kt P	Kt to K 2nd
		36. B takes Kt, and wins.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The tie in the Paris tournament between Herr Zukertort and M. Winawer was played off, and, as announced in our last Issue, resulted in the first two games being drawn. The next two games, however, were won by Herr Zukertort, who thus secured the first prize—two works of art presented by the French Government and 1000f in coin; the second prize, consisting of one work of art and 500f. in coin falling to M. Winawer. The order in which the prizes have been gained is therefore as follows:—First, Herr Zukertort, of Berlin; second, M. Winawer, of Warsaw; third, Mr. Blackburne, of London; fourth, Mr. Mackenzie, of New York; fifth, Mr. Bird, of London; and sixth, Herr Andersen, of Breslau.

We observe that the current number of the Westminster Papers contains fifty-five of the games played in the Paris tourney, including all those occurring between the prize-winners, and the deciding game in the tie-match between Messrs. Zukertort and Winawer. This is a feat unparalleled in the history of chess monthlies; and the energy and enterprise required to accomplish it deserve public recognition.

The annual tournaments of the Counties Chess Association were brought to a conclusion on the 3rd inst. The challenge cup that is the symbol of provincial championship was won by Mr. E. Thorold, who played throughout in capital form, and carried off the coveted honour with the fine score of eleven out of a possible twelve. The Rev. C. E. Ranken gained the second prize with a score of seven and a half, and Messrs. Jenkin and Ensor tied and divided the third and fourth prizes. For the second class tourney there were very few entries, but these included a youth of thirteen, Master JACKSON, of Dewsbury. The following is a Game that occurred between the boy chessplayer and Mr. DARBELLE.

WHITE (Mr. D.)	BLACK (Master J.)	WHITE (Mr. D.)	BLACK (Master J.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	10. Q to Kt 3rd	Q to Q 2nd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	11. Q to Q sq	R to B 2nd
3. B to B 4th	B to B 4th	12. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Kt to K R 4th
4. P to Q B 3rd	P to Q 3rd	13. P to Q Kt 4th	B to Kt 3rd
5. P to K R 3rd	Kt to K B 3rd	14. P to Q R 4th	P to Q R 4th
6. P to Q 3rd	Castles	15. P to Kt 5th	Kt to K 2nd
7. B to K Kt 5th	P to K R 3rd	16. B takes Kt	Q takes B
8. B to R 4th	B to K 3rd	17. Kt takes K P	Q to R 5th
9. B takes B	P takes B	18. Kt takes R	Q takes K B P. Mate.

The first prize in this class was won by Mr. J. de Soyres and the second by Master Jackson. The handicap tourney is still in progress, but we have been informed that the struggle for the first place now lies between Mr. F. S. Ensor and the anonymous player who, for the nonce, directs the movements of the "automaton," Mephisto.

We understand that the friends of Captain Mackenzie, the champion of America, are desirous of recounting his victories over the winners of the two chief prizes in the recent Paris tourney by backing him in a match against either of those gentlemen, or against any player of note who did not enter the lists on the occasion referred to. Meanwhile, Captain Mackenzie is to be entertained by the City Chess Club at a banquet which is fixed for the 9th inst.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Oct. 3, 1875) of the Most Hon. Eliza Harriett, Marchioness of Northampton, late of Castle Ashby, Northampton, who died on Dec. 4 last at Florence, was proved on the 3rd ult. by Lord Alwyne Frederic Compton, the son, the personal estate being sworn under £2000. The testatrix appoints all the property she has power to dispose of under her marriage settlement to her three children, Alwyne Frederic, Douglas Cecil James, and Mabel Violet Isabel.

The will (dated Sept. 17, 1866) with a codicil (dated Jan. 23, 1872) of Mr. Auguste Stephen Ralli, late of Marseilles, who died on April 18 last, was proved in London on the 20th ult. by Stephen Augustus Ralli, the son, the personal estate in England being sworn under £80,000. The testator having by the law of France the power of disposing of the usufruct of one moiety of his property and one fourth absolutely, he leaves the said usufruct to his wife, Madame Suzanne Ralli, and he also gives her specially all his furniture, plate, pictures, linen, china, and jewellery. There are some other special legacies to relatives and to servants, bequests of 5000f. each to the Chios Lyceum, the Athens Lyceum, and the homes for the poor, Marseilles; and legacies to the Greek Church at Marseilles and several of its officers. The residue he leaves to his three children, Etienne, Julie, and Marie, and their children.

The will (dated Feb. 4, 1878) with a codicil (dated the 19th of the same month) of Miss Emily Susan Drummond, late of No. 47, Seymour-street, who died on June 9 last, was proved on the 9th ult. by Earl Percy and George James Drummond, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testatrix, after leaving a large number of legacies, as well pecuniary as specific, leaves the residue of her property upon trust for her two sisters, Julia Frances and Marion; on the death of the survivor of them some further legacies are to be paid, including £1000 to the Vicar and churchwardens of the parish of West Hyde, Herts, upon trust to apply the dividends in the winter season, at their discretion, among the deserving poor of the said parish. A life interest is then given in the remainder to her nieces, Lady Boyd and Emily Compton, in succession; and the ultimate residue is to go to her nephew, Mortimer Percy George Douglas Drummond.

The will (dated June 28, 1870) of Mr. John Gordon, late of Cluny, Aberdeen, and of No. 39, Park-lane, who died on March 31 last, was proved on the 22nd ult. by Mrs. Emily Eliza Steele Gordon, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator leaves all his real and personal estate in England to his wife.

The will (dated April 2, 1878) of Mr. Benjamin Johnson, late of No. 1, Springfield, Upper Clapton, who died on June 23 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by John Lamy Ellerm, George Johnson, the nephew, and William Brown, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The testator bequeaths to the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum, Old Ford, £100; and to the Hospital for Consumption, Victoria Park, Bethnal-green, £500.

The will (dated Feb. 13, 1873) of Mr. Evan Jones, formerly Marshal of the High Court of Admiralty, but late of Croydon, who died on May 19 last, was proved on the 12th ult. by Alfred Carpenter, M.D., and George Anson Whealler, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £9000. After giving a legacy to the three children of his late son, Spencer Evan Jones, he gives the rest of his property between his two daughters.

The British Association meets this year at Dublin, the session beginning next Wednesday, Aug. 14, the president-elect being Dr. W. Spottiswoode.

The high court meeting of the Ancient Order of Foresters commenced its business last Monday at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The report of the investigation committee showed that the number of financial members was 521,416, and that the court and district funds amounted to £2,497,000, the increase for the year being nearly 12,000 members and £152,000.—At the eleventh annual meeting of the legislative council of the British United Order of Oddfellows, which began at Leeds on Monday, the Grand Master stated that during the year 1281 members had been admitted, that the income had increased £3000, and that the payments amounted to nearly £9000.

THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, Regent-street, W.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore to every case Grey or White Hair to its original color, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. Ask any Chemist for the "Mexican Hair Renewer," price 3s. 6d. Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the World; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. Price 2s. 6d. per Bottle. The Fragrant Florilline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and is a delicious sherry. Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London. Retailed everywhere.

THE TOPIC OF TO-DAY.

THE OCCUPATION OF CYPRUS.

INCREASE OF FEVER AT NICOSIA.

"The fever here is increasing. Captain Bawson, the acting Commandant, is down with it, and also Captain Hill, of the Goorkas, and about a dozen of his company. Unquestionably Nicosia is extremely unhealthy."
